The joint resolution is as follows:

Joint resolution relative to the donation of certain swamp and overflowed lands to the Seminole Indians in south Florida.

Whereas the Seminole Indians in south Florida have no lands that can be called their own upon which they can settle permanently, for purposes of homestead and cultivation, without fears of disturbance and molestation; and

Whereas it is deemed a matter of public policy and justice to encourage them to become educated and to interest them in securing permanent homes for themselves and their children: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the legislature of the State of Florida, SECTION 1. That the board of trustees of the internal improvement fund be, and are hereby, authorized to set apart not to exceed 5,000 acres of the land donated by act of Congress of September 28, 1850, for the sole and permanent use and benefit of the Seminole Indians in south Florida.

SEC. 2. Be it further resolved, That the said lands shall be conveyed to three trustees and their successors, to be appointed by the governor, in trust for said Indians.

SEC. 3. Be it further resolved, That the trustees so appointed shall select said lands and shall endeavor to induce said Indians to enter upon and cultivate the same, and the said trustees shall carry out the purposes of said trust without expense to the State of Florida or to the said Seminole Indians.

Approved June 8, 1891.

Mr. PASCO. I move to amend the committee's amendment by striking out, in line 17, the words "by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs" and inserting the words "in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior;" so as to make the clause read:

For support, civilization, and instruction of the Seminole Indians in Florida, $6,000, one-half of which sum shall be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior in procuring permanent homes for said Indians.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I know Mr. Asbury Hendry, the author of the letter read by my colleague, and I desire to say that he is one of the most benevolent and intelligent men to be found in any country; that he has been quite a prominent man in the public history of the State of Florida and has interested himself very much in the civilization of these Indians. He obtained a young Indian with great difficulty and took him from his tribe and educated him and taught him the English language and something of a trade. He found, however, that this Indian, after being educated, preferred very naturally to go and remain amongst his own people.

Mr. Hendry and his family have been especially prominent in interesting themselves for the general advancement of the Indians in that State. They have in connection with an Indian society of the ladies of his part of the State and of the northern States made some very considerable efforts toward establishing schools and teaching the Indians to engage in farming and other occupations, and I understand with some success.

Some of these Indians, especially those who formerly lived in the neighborhood of Bartow, Fla., built houses for themselves and are hardly distinguishable from white people in their habits. But most of them are still roaming people, living in the Everglades. The State of Florida has no lands except the swamp and overflowed lands, which, as the act prescribes, have thereby been rendered unfit for cultivation, and which are required by the act to be devoted to the purposes of reclamation. But these Indians live in that country. Their number is unknown. They are variously estimated by Mr. Hendry and others, who are the best authority on the subject, at from 300 to 500 people—men, women, and children. The country is being settled; they are being encroached upon and something should be done for them.

Years ago, finding that they were entirely neglected by the Federal Government and being only a small remnant of the tribe, the treaty providing that when they emigrated to the West they should become the recipients of an annuity with the other Indians, and finding that although these Indians in Florida had not emigrated to the West, the annuity provided to be paid in the event of their removal was being paid to the Indians in the West, I obtained this appropriation of $6,000 for their benefit. It has been continned from year to year, sometimes extended and sometimes not; but I believe that there is considerable progress being made now in the civilization of those Indians. Very soon they must be put upon homes, and they need the supervision and protection of the Government of the United States. They are, comparatively, children, and have more or less of the vices of civilization when they come in contact with them; but it is necessary to the welfare of the white people and the Indians themselves that this money should be expended, and judiciously expended.

I think, differing from Mr. Hendry, for whose judgment I have very great respect, that it is important that homes should be obtained for them, and that they should be taught to live in those homes. A railroad has now been extended right into their country down to Lake Worth, nearly to Fort Jupiter, and that lies parallel to the great swamp and overflowed region, which has within it, I am told, some four or five hundred thousand acres of dry and arable land. I have never been there, but that is the information I have in regard to it.

As for this appropriation I am entirely content with the suggestion of my colleague that it should be made as it was originally, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 17 the second word "shall" should be stricken out and the word "may" substituted.

Mr. PASCO. I was about to make that suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be so modified.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 43, line 19, after the words "Devils Lake," to insert "North Dakota;" in line 21, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "twelve," and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "of which sum $7,000 shall be immediately available;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of Sioux of Devils Lake, North Dakota, including pay of employees, and for the purchase of seeds, $12,000, of which sum $7,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 23, before the word "support," to insert "temporary;" in line 24, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten," and insert "five," and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be immediately available;" so as to make the clause read:

For temporary support and civilization of Sioux, Medawakanton band, in Minnesota, $5,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 1, after the word "Indians," to insert "Washington;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of the S'Klallam Indians, Washington, including pay of employees, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 4, after the word "Indians," to insert "Indian Territory;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of Tonkawa Indians, Indian Territory, and for seeds and agricultural implements, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 8, after the word "tribes," to insert "Oregon;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of the Walla Walla, Cayuse, and Umatilla tribes, Oregon, including pay of employees, $6,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 2, before the word "dollars," to insert "five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Colorado: For general incidental expenses of the Indian service, including traveling expenses of agents, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 3, to strike out:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the Stockbridge Indians, per capita, one-half of the trust fund now to their credit in the United States Treasury, and heretofore appropriated, when the allotment to their lands shall have been completed.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I hope the committee will not insist on this amendment. The paragraph proposed to be stricken out directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay to the Stockbridge Indians one-half of the trust funds now to their credit in the United States Treasury when the allotment of their lands shall have been completed. It seems to me that is a very proper paragraph to be retained in the bill. If carried out it will avoid delay and much unnecessary irritation. The allotment in severalty I believe will be completed in some six months, and people who are entitled to their money ought to be paid promptly, in my opinion.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Secretary of the Interior recommend this appropriation?

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. As it is contained in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives, I suppose he does.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know. We struck it out in committee because we did not have one particle of information in regard to it. The fact that it is put in the bill by the House of Representatives does not show that the Secretary of the Interior has recommended it. We proposed to strike it out in order that it might be in conference. If the Senator can show that the Secretary of the Interior has recommended it, that will be all right.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I assume he did, or it would not be in the bill as it came from the other House.

Mr. COCKRELL. We can not presume that anything which is in the bill has been recommended, but we must take the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior when he makes his report, as it appears in the print.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. Whether he does or not, it seems to me this is a very proper paragraph to be retained in the bill.

Mr. CALL. I suggest that the paragraph be passed over until we can ascertain what the facts are in regard to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over for the present.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 47, line 18, to strike out "That the Secretary of the," and insert at the beginning of a new paragraph the words "That the Secretary of the;" in line 20, after the word "Indian," to strike out the word "interpreter" and insert "inspector," and on page 48, line 1, before the word "the" to insert "of;" so as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to detail or employ an Indian inspector to take a census of the Pottawatomie Indians of Indiana and Michigan who are entitled to a certain sum of money appropriated by Congress to satisfy a judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of said Indians. And for the purpose of making the payment to the Pottawatomie Indians of Indiana and Michigan of the $104,631 appropriated by the last Congress to satisfy a judgment of the Court of Claims, there is hereby appropriated the sum of $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. JAMES KERR, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 5260) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Corigan; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 1483) to correct the military record of Elisha B. Bassett;

A bill (H. R. 4693) for the promotion of anatomical science, and to prevent the desecration of graves in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 5624) to authorize the Oklahoma Central Railroad to construct and operate a railway through the Indian and Oklahoma Territories, and for other purposes.

HENRY HALTEMAN—VETO MESSAGE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

I return herewith without approval Senate bill No. 1536, entitled "An act for the relief of Henry Halteman."

This bill directs the Secretary of War "to grant an honorable discharge from the United States service to Henry Halteman, late of Company F, Second United States Artillery."

It is conceded that this soldier enlisted in the Regular Army on the 18th day of December, 1860, for the term of five years, and that he deserted on the 18th day of August, 1865. The only excuse or palliation offered for his offense is found in the statement that his desertion was provoked by his company being ordered to California so near the termination of his enlistment that his term would have expired before or soon after his company could have reached California, and "that his return would have been both tedious and somewhat perilous, if not expensive."

The fact must not be overlooked that this soldier enlisted in the Regular Army and that his term had no relation to the duration of the war or the immediate need of the Government for troops at the time of his desertion. The morale and discipline of the Regular Army is therefore directly involved in the proposed legislation.

The soldier's name remained on the records of the War Department as a deserter at large for twenty-three years, and until the year 1886. In August of that year application was made to the Department for the removal of the charge of desertion against him, which was refused on the ground that it was not shown that such charge was founded in error. Thereupon he applied for a discharge without character, as it is called, as of the date of his desertion. This was granted on the 21st day of September, 1888. Such discharges, which were not uncommon at that time, omitted the certificate of character which entitled the soldier to reenlistment.

In 1892 a bill similar to that now under consideration was referred to the Adjutant-General of the Army and was returned with an adverse report.

The record of the War Department on the subject of this soldier's separation from the Army is absolutely correct as it stands; and no sufficient reason is apparent why another record should be substituted. If this deserter is to be allowed an honorable discharge I do not see why every deserter should not be absolved from the consequences of his unfaithfulness.

The effect of this bill if it should become a law would be to allow the beneficiary not only a pensionable status, but arrears of pay and clothing allowances up to the date of his desertion, and travel allowance from the place of his desertion to the place of his enlistment.

It is not denied that all these things have been justly forfeited by deliberate and inexcusable desertion. In the case presented, it seems to me that the laws and regulations adopted for the purpose of maintaining the discipline and efficiency of the Army ought not to be set aside.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 20, 1895.

THE VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I suggest that the veto message be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and that it be printed together with the bill.

That case received a very fair and full consideration by the Committee on Military Affairs. The alleged desertion of this soldier was after four years of service during the war of the rebellion. It is true he served in a regular regiment. That regiment at the close of the war, when the war of the rebellion was over, was ordered to California. Before it could have been possible that he could have reached the place to which the regiment was ordered his term of service would have expired. It seemed to the committee that it was a case which called for the equitable consideration of Congress.

I move that the veto message and the bill be printed and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs for its consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 5260) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Corigan was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8479) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed at line 5 on page 48, and continued to line 12 on page 54.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 54, line 12, I move to strike out the words "herein amended" and insert "hereinafter provided;" so as to read:

That said agreement be, and the same is hereby, accepted, ratified, and confirmed as hereinafter provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in Article VIII of the agreement, relative to the cession of the lands of Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians, on page 56, line 4, after the word "after," to strike out "three years" and insert "one year;" so as to read:

Provided, That said lands shall not be opened to settlement until after one year after said allotments are made to the Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 19, after the word "be," to strike out "covered into the Treasury and placed to the credit of the said Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians" and insert "deposited in the Treasury subject to the judgment of the court in the suit herein provided for, less 6 per cent of said money, but not to exceed $15,000, to be retained in the Treasury to the credit and subject to the drafts of the legal representatives of the said Indians' late delegate, Luther H. Pike, deceased;" so as to make the clause read:

That as fast as the lands opened for settlement under this act are sold, the money received from such sales shall be deposited in the Treasury subject to the judgment of the court in the suit herein provided for, less 6 per cent of said money, but not to exceed $15,000, to be retained in the Treasury to the credit and subject to the drafts of the legal representative of the said Indians' late delegate, Luther H. Pike, deceased; Provided, That no part of said money shall be paid to said Indians until the question of title to the same is fully settled.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 8, page 57, before the word "court" to strike out the words "United States;" so as to read:

That as the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations claim to have some right, title, and interest in and to the lands ceded by the foregoing treaty, as soon as the same are abandoned by said Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians, jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the said claim of the Choctaws and Chickasaws and to render judgment thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "treaty," in line 6, and inserting "agreement," as we no longer make treaties, but agreements. After the word "treaty" I move to strike out "as soon as the same are abandoned by said Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians." The land can not be abandoned by them when they give it up by agreement.

The SECRETARY. In line 6, page 57, strike out "treaty, as soon as the same are abandoned by said Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians" and insert "agreement;" so as to read:

That as the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations claim to have some right, title, and interest in and to the lands ceded by the foregoing agreement, jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred, etc.

Mr. PLATT. Why does not the Senator propose to strike out the words "as soon as the same are abandoned by said Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians?"

Mr. COCKRELL. Simply because the land can not be abandoned, practically. It was at the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs and after conference with him that I moved the amendment. Those words make the provision unmeaning.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 57, line 23, after the word "precedence," to strike out the additional proviso, as follows:

And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be accepted or construed as a confession that the United States admit that the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations have any claim to or interest in said lands or any part thereof.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that those words be not stricken out. My recollection of the whole case is that the Choctaws and Chickasaws have a very shadowy and nebulous claim, if any, to these lands. In view of the fact that we are providing special legislation for them, it seems to me well enough to put in a sort of protest here against their claim by saying that although we do give them this extraordinary jurisdiction and power to test their title we do not thereby admit that they have any title.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator will remember very distinctly that it is an old and controverted question as to whether they have rights or not. It has been passed upon by the Senate and the Senate has made appropriations to pay certain sums. This is to be construed and is intended doubtless to be construed as a declaration that the United States disclaims anything of the sort. That very question, if the Senator will read the first part of the clause, is submitted to the court:

That as the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations claim to have some right, title, and interest in and to the lands ceded by the foregoing agreement, jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the said claim.

I want to add a word there which I forgot to put in. In line 9, I wish to insert after "said" the word "alleged;" so as to read "the said alleged claim." It is a claim merely of the Choctaws and Chickasaws. The paragraph provides that the court is—

To render judgment thereon, it being the intention of this act to allow said Court of Claims jurisdiction, so that the rights, legal and equitable, of the United States, and the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, and the Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians in the premises, shall be fully considered and determined, and to try and determine all questions that may arise on behalf of either party in the hearing of said claim.

It would be unjust for the United States to undertake to put in a disclaimer that the parties have any right. The Senator from Iowa will remember that the subcommittee reported an amendment proposing a little more distinct declaration than this, and after some controversy and the consumption of some time in the committee the whole clause was stricken out. It would be unjust for this clause to be stricken out and no consideration be given to the other. Let the proviso be stricken out and the matter goes into conference.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that in line 6, page 57, after the word "agreement," which was substituted for "treaty," the words "not admitted by the United States" be inserted. Then the proviso could go out, and it would give notice to the Chickasaws and Choctaws that we do not admit that they have any claim.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the United States admitted it, what would be the necessity of a suit?

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator from Missouri mean to admit that they have a claim?

Mr. COCKRELL. No. We say they claim to have, and we authorize the court to settle it. I have no objection, however, if the Senator desires it, to inserting after the word "agreement" the words "not admitted by the United States."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator from Iowa certainly does not say the Chickasaws and the Choctaws do not claim something in this connection.

Mr. ALLISON. No; I do not. I know they claim it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is all this provision asserts.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest that we insert the words "which claim is not admitted by the United States."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is no objection, certainly, to those words being inserted, because it is controverted by the Government.

Mr. ALLISON. I think something of that sort ought to go in.

Mr. COCKRELL. "But not admitted by the United States;" so as to read:

That as the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations claim to have some right, title, and interest in and to the lands ceded by the foregoing treaty agreement, but not admitted by the United States, jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the said claim.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEPPER] suggests to me that we insert "which claim is controverted by the United States."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is correct.

Mr. ALLISON. Then the proviso can go out.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "agreement" in line 6, page 57, insert the words "which claim is controverted by the United States;" so as to read:

That as the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations claim to have some right, title, and interest in and to the lands ceded by the foregoing agreement, which claim is controverted by the United States, jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the said claim of the Choctaws and Chickasaws and to render judgment thereon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, let us dispose of the amendment in line 23, to strike out the proviso.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment to strike out the additional proviso beginning in line 23.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 11 on page 58.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 9, page 58, I move to strike out the word "Indians" and insert "nations," and after the word "upon," in the same line, strike out the word "his;" so as to read:

And said petition may be verified by the authorized delegates, agents, or attorney of said nations upon information and belief as to the existence of such facts, and no other statement or verification shall be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 58, line 14, after the word "barred," to insert:

And provided further, That it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States, within ten days after the filing of said petition, to give notice to said Wichitas and affiliated bands through the agents, delegates, attorneys, or other representatives of said bands that said bands are made defendants in said suit, of the purpose of said suit, that they are required to make answer to said petition, and that Congress has, in accordance with Article V of said agreement, adopted this method of determining their compensation, if any. And the answer of the Wichitas and affiliated bands shall state the facts on which they rely for compensation, and may be verified by their agents, delegates, attorneys, or other representatives upon their information and belief as to the existence of such facts, and no other statement or verification shall be necessary; And provided also, That said Wichitas and affiliated bands shall file their answer in said suit within sixty days after they shall receive from the Attorney-General of the United States the notice herein provided for, unless further time is granted by the court, and in the event of failure to answer they may be barred from all claim in the premises aforesaid.

The said Court of Claims shall receive and consider as evidence in the suit everything which shall be deemed by said court necessary to aid it in determining the questions presented, and tending to shed light on the claim, rights, and equities of the parties litigant, and issue rules on any Department of the Government therefor if necessary.

It is hereby further provided that said Choctaw and Chickasaw nations may, at any time before the rendition of final judgment in said case by the Court of Claims, negotiate with the commissioners appointed under section 16 of the act of Congress approved the 3d day of March, 1893 (27 Stat., page 645), or with any successor or successors in said commission, for the settlement of the said matters involved in said suit, and move the suspension of such action until such negotiation shall be accepted or rejected by Congress; such settlement, however, to be made with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Interior and Attorney-General of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. This is rather a complicated case, and I confess that I am not as familiar with it as I ought to be. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee what is the controversy that is to be finally disposed of here as to the money obligation of the United States. On page 54 of the bill we agree to pay the Wichitas $1.25 per acre for so much of said land as is not required for allotment. I take it that this is in pursuance of article 5 of the treaty, wherein it is agreed "that the question as to what sum of money, if any, shall be paid to said Indians for such surplus lands shall be submitted to the Congress of the United States."

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. "The decision of Congress thereon to be final and binding upon said Indians." The claim of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations is to be determined by this inquiry, and if it shall appear that they have a title to those lands and that that title is of value, will the award, whatever it may be, come out of the $1.25 per acre?

Mr. COCKRELL. Unquestionably.

Mr. ALLISON. And it will not be a charge on the Government of the United States in addition; that is, $1.25 is the full price of the land. I do not see where that is made quite clear in these amendments, taking them altogether. I shall be glad if the Senator will point out just where it appears that whatever sum may be found to be due the Choctaws and Chickasaws shall be taken out of the price provided for.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest to the Senator that he read the provision on page 56, beginning with line 17.

Mr. ALLISON. Does that provide that this sum shall be taken out of the price which we have fixed as to the value of the land? Where in this agreement do the Wichitas agree that whatever sum may be due or found to be due the Choctaws and Chickasaws shall thus be taken?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In the agreement made between the Wichitas and the United States nothing is said about the claim of the Chickasaws and Choctaws to those lands. The point as to whether the whole $1.25 shall go to the Wichitas or whether they have any title to the land, whether they have any claim or not, is referred to the court under the provisions of the pending bill for the court to determine about what proportion of it belongs to the Chickasaws and Choctaws and what belongs to the Wichitas—how much to each. That is exactly the point to be submitted to the court, and Congress will take no final action on it until the court decides. The money is to be deposited when the sale is made subject to the judgment of the court.

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand. The total result of these proceedings will be that we have agreed to pay $1.25 per acre to the Wichitas for their land, all of which may be taken away by the decision of the courts, so that they will not receive anything. There is great reason to fear that, because, as I understand—

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to call his attention to the point that the agreement is to pay the Indians whatever sum of money is due them, if any. That proposition goes through it all the way. There is no admission in the agreement that we owe the Wichitas anything at all.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me a moment?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT. I will state that when the commissioners who negotiated the agreement met the Wichita Indians, I understand, although I may be mistaken about it, they offered to agree with the Indians that the United States should pay them 50 cents an acre for their rights in those lands. The Wichitas were not satisfied with that, but offered to take 80 cents an acre. I do not pretend to be accurate, but this is my recollection. The commissioners and the Wichitas being unable to agree, the whole matter was to be left to Congress to say how much should be paid to the Wichitas for their rights.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If any.

Mr. PLATT. If any. But the Wichitas certainly understood they were to get 50 cents or more when they entered into the agreement with the commissioners.

Mr. ALLISON. I will ask the Senator from Arkansas, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, whether this general adjustment will not in the end lead to trouble from the fact that in a similar case, if I am not mistaken, we have already paid $1.25 an acre to the Choctaws and Chickasaws. I remember that we had a controversy here some years ago as to a claim of $3,000,000; and it was claimed then, and I think argued with much force, that the Choctaws and Chickasaws had no interest whatever in those lands. Yet we made an appropriation of $3,000,000, or $1.25 an acre, for land situated, I understand, very similar to these lands, if it was not in the same situation.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It was the same claim exactly.

Mr. PLATT. After we had paid the Cheyennes and Arapahoes.

Mr. ALLISON. After we had already paid another tribe for their interest. Now, we have made a contract with the Wichitas, who claim, I understand, under two titles. First, they claim that the United States had no authority to cede those lands to the Choctaws and Chickasaws or to the Five Civilized Tribes; that they held a possessory right to those lands before the cession by the United States, and that therefore they have a title paramount, if I may use that term in connection with Indian tribes, to the title of the Choctaws and Chickasaws.

Then it was also claimed, as I remember—I wish only that the matter may be thoroughly understood—that the United States had purchased and paid for all the right, title, and interest of the Choctaws and Chickasaws to those lands. Yet it is proposed that we shall pay for all these titles and all these interests, I understand, $1.25 an acre, and that the parties or tribes or nations that are to receive the money are to be subjected to a final decision of the Court of Claims, with an appeal to the Supreme Court.

I am not quite sure that such an arrangement will be satisfactory to any of the Indians unless the decision shall be favorable to them. In other words, the Choctaws and Chickasaws, unless we give them $1.25 an acre, as we have given them $1.25 an acre for other lands similarly situated, will be dissatisfied. If it turns out that we are to give the Wichitas no more money and are only to allow them their allotments of land, as provided for in the treaty, surely they will be dissatisfied. I merely suggest that there are difficulties in this general arrangement which it seems to me may lead us into trouble in the future. I shall be glad to have the Senator from Arkansas or the Senator from Connecticut, both of whom are familiar with the whole matter, to explain what will be the effect and result of this proceeding.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In the case to which the Senator from Iowa alludes the discussion about the Cheyenne and Arapahoe lands was continued here for a couple of days, and then mainly on questions of law. The Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Dawes, agreed with me in the belief that the Cheyennes and Arapahoes had a possessory right to those lands, and that the Chickasaws and Choctaws had an equity, a claim against the Government for the use of the lands whenever they were devoted to any other purpose than possession and occupation by Indians.

The Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Connecticut differed with us. We had considerable debate. It was a question of law that could have been better settled in court than in the Senate. It seems to me that the very difficulties which were then presented here and occupied the attention of the Senate for two or three days should and could wisely be transferred to a judicial tribunal where those questions can be carefully, impartially, and completely looked into and examined and determined on judicial grounds by a judgment of the court. It seems to me that this proposition is eminently wise. Here are the conflicting interests of the Choctaws and the Chickasaws in this case with the Wichitas and the claim of title which the Wichitas have, whatever it may be, they claiming title in two ways, as the Senator from Iowa has suggested, but specifying in this article a possessory right, and it seems to me that it is proper that a court shall determine just what the rights of those parties are and that a judgment shall be rendered.

I have no doubt the Senator is right in saying that if a decision should be rendered against either of those tribes the tribe against whom it is rendered will be dissatisfied. I have never yet seen an individual who when a decision was rendered against him in court was satisfied with it. That is the common lot of humanity. If the decision should be against the Government of the United States, it seems to me there will probably be dissatisfaction with it in some quarters. It is what we are to expect. How we can have a judicial question of this kind settled in any manner more wisely than to have it done by our own courts, under the rules of law that prevail here, I confess I can not imagine.

Mr. ALLISON. The Indians are willing to submit the question to the court?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understand they are perfectly willing.

Mr. PLATT. Does the Senator from Iowa ask as to the Wichitas?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think they have been consulted.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not see how we shall get the Wichitas into our courts unless they are willing.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I think there is much force in the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa. There are 88 judges in this body, each of whom is equal if not superior to the judges to whom this case will be referred. I do not see what greater sanction can be given to the opinion of the five gentlemen who compose that court than to the opinion of 88 judges here.

But outside of that matter, it is not the province of the judicial department to consider questions of the exercise of sovereign legislative power. It is not within their province to say what are the equitable considerations which shall influence the judgment and legislation of this body, and manifestly this is a question of equitable right. While it may be to the convenience of the Senate to have judges ascertain by processes of law and the comparison of testimony the facts to be submitted to this body, I for one protest against the practice which prevails here of substituting the judgment of any court or any individual for that of the representatives of the States and the people under the Constitution of the country.

This is a case of purely equitable consideration. There is not a question of legal title or right in this matter. The Indians hold by equitable right. They hold possession under concession of the United States because of considerations of rights and equity and not upon propositions which involve at all a title derived from the sovereign owner of the fee. We found the Indians in possession of this country. We acknowledged, with some want of logic and correct reasoning, that that was a title by occupancy. Still, it was a title, not a fee, and, as the lawyers say, but a right of occupation which should not be disturbed by this country. Now, here come up questions of treaty obligations which the United States have entered into with these different Indians and it occurs to me that the absolute power of disposing of the question should not be given, and that words of limitation should be inserted in this provision of the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I judge by the introduction of amendments proposed by the Senate committee to the House provision of the pending bill that the Committee on Appropriations have given up all expectation of avoiding an extra session of Congress. Manifestly there can be no careful examination of a great subject like this and suitable debate thereon within the brief period of less than fourteen days before the expiration of the present Congress.

If the Committee on Appropriations had done what I conceive to be their duty in reference to this Indian treaty, they would have reported an amendment to strike out all the House provision; instead of which they put on at the end of eight or ten pages of the bill two or three pages of their own lucubrations, which are quite as unintelligible as the matter which came from the House; and there is not, from one end to the other of the production of the House plus the production of the Senate committee, a single dollar of appropriation. There is not a single word or letter from beginning to end that finds any place whatever upon the appropriation bill. On page 48 begins this matter:

Whereas David H. Jerome, Alfred M. Wilson, and Warren G. Sayre, duly appointed commissioners on the part of the United States, did, on the 4th day of June, 1891, conclude an agreement with the Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians in Oklahoma Territory, formerly a part of the Indian Territory, which said agreement is as follows:

Then it goes on, various articles of the treaty being recited from article 1 to article 8. Then there is a ratification of the agreement by the United States in the following words:

That said agreement be, and the same hereby is, accepted, ratified, and confirmed as herein amended.

Then follow various House provisions for carrying into effect provisions of this treaty. There is not one dollar of appropriation, not one line, not one syllable of appropriation. On page 58 come amendments proposed by the Senate committee which run through two pages and are a radical change of the method of carrying out the treaty provided by the House. But, as I have said, from page 48 to page 60, inclusive, there is no appropriation whatever within the pages that the House and the Senate committee have put into the bill, and which they ask Congress during these closing hours of its session to consider, to deliberate, and to act upon.

Mr. President, when the opportunity is afforded, after the Senate amendment is perfected, if perfected it can be, so as to suit the committee, I shall move to strike out the whole provision in relation to this Indian treaty. I hold that it has no proper place in an appropriation bill, and for the very good reason, in the first place, that it does not appropriate any money. It does not purport to appropriate any money; and the treaty and the ratification of it by the Congress of the United States ought to be upon a separate bill.

I should like to ask the members of the Committee on Appropriations whether they approve of this method of compelling either the assent or the dissent of Congress, generally the assent of Congress, to long, difficult, and abstruse propositions concerning Indians upon appropriation bills when there is not a dollar of appropriation from one end to the other of the provision.

Mr. President, in endeavoring to look a little at these provisions, which ought not to be here, I find it very difficult to understand them. It appears that the treaty requires the Wichita and other affiliated bands of Indians to surrender their lands. That is the first provision. Then there are to be allotments in severalty made to the Indians, and after that the Indians appear to set up a claim to further compensation in money for their possessory rights in and to the land. They are to surrender it all. Allotments are to be made. Then they claim a money compensation besides, which is to be left to Congress, in accordance with the treaty; and later the proposed law goes on to provide that there shall be allowed by the United States to the Indians $1.25 an acre.

I am informed that that is an allowance of six or seven hundred thousand dollars to these tribes, it being assumed that there will be half a million acres of land left after the allotments. Now, for that they claim money compensation. Yet it afterwards appears that the money is to be paid them only from the proceeds of the sales of the lands. That would be intelligible enough if it provided that the proceeds of the lands should be given to the Indians. But no; it appears by the committee amendments on page 56, in the first place, that $15,000 are to be paid on the drafts of the representative of the Indians' late delegate, Luther H. Pike, deceased. Fifteen thousand dollars are to be used to pay his drafts, and then this whole sum of money is to be held in the Treasury of the United States subject to the claim of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribe of Indians.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. May I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that no one knows when the money will get into the Treasury of the United States for anyone.

Mr. CHANDLER. Why not, if the lands are to be opened for settlement?

Mr. PLATT. When they are opened and sold then some money will come into the Treasury of the United States, but there is a great deal of this land that I imagine will not be sold very soon.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not undertaking to make this agreement with these Indians and to make the legislation that is proposed here intelligible or sensible. I am only undertaking to show the importance of it, the magnitude of it, in order to reiterate my argument as to the utter impropriety of bringing into an appropriation bill that is to be considered at this late day provisions of this breadth and of this extent. The money is to go into the Treasury of the United States when the lands are sold. The Wichita Indians do not get it then, but they are to bring suit in the Court of Claims, and after the Court of Claims have made a decision, here is a provision that says, "the parties to said action shall have the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States," which is equivalent to saying that half a dozen years shall elapse before this important transaction in connection with these Indian lands is closed.

I say, Mr. President, it is asking too much of the Senate to consider propositions of this kind upon an appropriation bill. If the proposition had not been inserted in the House of Representatives it would be subject to the point of order in the Senate. The Senate committee, therefore, ought to have recommended the striking out of the original House provisions instead of trying to amend those provisions to make them more satisfactory to the members of the committee and then reporting to the Senate with the idea that any intelligent votes will be cast upon them during the closing hours of this session.

Mr. President, I said that I imagined the Committee on Appropriations by presenting propositions of this kind to the Senate had come to the conclusion that it would be impossible to avoid an extra session. I do not myself believe that it will be possible to avoid such a session. I regard an extra session as inevitable if all the legislation that the House has put on the various appropriation bills and all the legislation which the Appropriations Committee of the Senate are putting upon appropriation bills is to be considered by the Senate. I do not believe that between now and 12 o'clock a week from next Monday it will be possible for the Senate to do justice by the great mass of matter which the Appropriations Committee are bringing in here from day to day upon the appropriation bills and for which they are inviting the consideration of the Senate. I say I believe the chairman of the committee, who has been quite uneasy of late, has reached the conclusion that in spite of the exertions which he may make there will be an extra session of Congress.

Mr. President, I am reconciled to that result. I believe that nothing better can happen than to have the next Congress called in extraordinary session as soon as possible after the 4th of March. I trust the President of the United States will bring Congress here during the month of April or the month of May in order that some things may be done that have been omitted by Congress, and in order that some investigations may be made that this Congress will not make, and that I trust will be made by the next Congress.

The best thing that can happen to clear the atmosphere in this country, to get the nation on a wise and safe road to prosperity, is the assembling in Washington within the Halls of Congress of the next House of Representatives. When that House of Representatives assembles I expect to see the Nicaragua Canal project taken up and a bill passed for the building of that canal, not, I trust, through a private corporation, but by the money of the United States. I believe the next House of Representatives as well as the next Senate will provide, and provide speedily, for the construction of the Nicaragua Canal. I believe the next House of Representatives will take steps for the annexation of Hawaii.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to know if the Nicaragua Canal was built and Hawaii was annexed whether the Senator would be willing that the Wichitas should sell their lands?

Mr. CHANDLER. Not on an appropriation bill. I should still insist upon that minor reform. But after the building of the Nicaragua Canal is provided for, and Hawaii is annexed, with the permission of my friend from South Dakota, I shall be entirely willing that upon a separate bill these Wichita lands shall be purchased and this transaction carried into effect, which has no place upon an appropriation bill.

I say, I believe the next Congress will take wise, judicious, and effective steps for bringing about the certain and ultimate annexation of the Sandwich Islands to the United States.

Moreover, I think that the assembling of the next Congress will be of great importance for the purpose of investigating the recent purchase of gold by the Secretary of the Treasury under the direction of the President of the United States. That transaction is one of the most remarkable that this country has ever witnessed. Sixty-five million dollars of bonds have been disposed of at the price of 104 or thereabouts, which bonds to-day are worth 118 or 119 in the English and in the American market, which bonds were worth 15 per cent more the day they were sold than they were sold for.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I was called out of the Chamber for a moment. May I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he is still on the Wichita Indian amendment?

Mr. CHANDLER. I left that for just a moment. I am coming to a transaction about which I heard the Senator from Colorado a few days ago make some feeble allusions. [Laughter.] Sixty-five million dollars of bonds of the United States have been sold for $15,000,000 less than they were worth. That is a loss to the people of the United States of about $9,000,000.

Mr. President, if there ever was a financial transaction of an Administration which needed investigation it is that purchase of gold and that sale of bonds. If there ever was a transaction which needed to be put under the investigation of a committee, a searching and a severe committee, like that which the Senate placed under the lead of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] upon the sugar trust, of which my friend, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], was a member, and which made such full and remarkable discoveries, it is this sale of bonds and this purchase of gold at a loss to the Government of $9,000,000.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] undertook to state to the Senate some justification of that transaction. It was impossible for any Senator upon this floor, I think, until the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] undertook to make defense, to conceive of any earthly reason why that purchase of gold and that sale of bonds should be made at a loss of $9,000,000 to the people of the United States. What has been the explanation and the excuse? We had developed to us here what was said to be a most startling condition of public affairs. We had been living upon a volcano. Our whole financial system was all ready to explode. The Treasury of the United States was to be bankrupt. Gold was to disappear from the Treasury and from the country, and imminent peril of financial insolvency was upon the country. None of us had known that; none of us had realized it before, until we were told of it by the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Delaware as an excuse which they conjured up here as a reason for the most extraordinary fiscal operation that was ever known of in the history of the American Government.

Mr. STEWART. Was it not provided in the contract that we should be protected from all that?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will yield to the Senator from Nevada if he wishes to explain his views in connection with that transaction. [Laughter.] But, Mr. President, it is difficult to use moderate language in speaking of this recent so-called fiscal operation of the Treasury Department. In my belief there was no justification for it. In my belief there is a great deal more beneath the surface than the country is aware of. I do not believe that it was a transaction which the Congress of the United States can afford to allow to go without investigation. It is not likely to be investigated by the present Senate. It is not likely to be investigated by the present House of Representatives. It is sure to be investigated by the next House of Representatives. Possibly it may be investigated by the next Senate of the United States.

I say, therefore, Mr. President, that for the purpose of having that investigation made, made thorough, made careful, made impartial, but made through the length and the breadth and the depth of that most extraordinary fiscal operation of the Government, I hope there will be an extra session of Congress called. I am constrained to believe, ending as I have begun, that that is the expectation and the purpose of the Committee on Appropriations when they bring in here their bills laden with general legislation, take no pains to strike off that legislation when it comes here from the House, do their best to make unintelligible matter still more unintelligible, and expect Senators upon their responsibility as Senators to cast intelligent votes upon matters of such great importance.

I hope that the Senator from Missouri will candidly tell us that he has no expectation of passing the appropriation bills at the present session, and that we shall be enabled as soon as we can to reconcile ourselves to the inevitable and to be prepared for that extra session of Congress which the President of the United States will undoubtedly call, in order that proper appropriations may be made, in order that progress may be made in the matters to which I have alluded of great national moment, and in order that there may be exhibited to the Congress and to the people the full details of this most extraordinary financial transaction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, if the appropriation bills fail it will be because of the course and conduct of the distinguished Senator who has addressed the Senate and the steering committee of the other side of the Chamber. It will not be the fault of the Appropriations Committee, because we have all but two of the bills upon the Calendar, and are ready to pass them at any time. I do not believe that there is a solitary member of the Appropriations Committee, either Republican member or Democratic member, who is doing anything directly or indirectly for the purpose of preventing the passage of the appropriation bills. I must say that I honestly believe the Republican members of the Committee on Appropriations are striving with the Democratic members to get these bills in the best shape possible for their early passage by the Senate, so as to give no cause or pretext for an extra session of Congress.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, just one word more with reference to this amendment. I find that the first article of the treaty for which we provide here an agreement cedes all the interest of the Wichitas in these lands to the United States. I find that under article 5 of the treaty it is agreed that the question as to what sum of money, if any, shall be paid to said Indians for such surplus land shall be submitted to the Congress of the United States, the decision of Congress thereon to be final and binding upon said Indians, "provided, if any sum of money shall be allowed by Congress for surplus lands, it shall be subject to a reduction for each allotment." The bill provides, beginning in line 13, on page 54, as follows:

That the said Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians be allowed as compensation for the cession of the lands described in article 1 of the foregoing agreement the sum of $1.25 per acre for so much of said land as will not be required for allotment to the Indians as provided in the foregoing agreement, subject to such reduction as may be found necessary under article 5 of said agreement: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be paid except as hereinafter provided.

I agree, as the fifth article of this treaty provides, that these Indians shall receive $1.25 per acre for their lands, we having been made the sole and exclusive judge by the treaty of the value of those lands. The bill says that the sum, however, shall not be paid "except as hereinafter provided." Thereupon we proceed in the subsequent provisions relating to this subject, first, to set apart sections 16 and 32 for common schools.

Mr. PLATT. Four sections in each township.

Mr. ALLISON. Two sections for common schools and two for university purposes.

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. In other words, we take out of every township of those lands four sections, which we reserve for educational purposes, and which can not be sold for any purpose.

Mr. PLATT. And for which the Indians will get no pay.

Mr. ALLISON. They will get no pay under the provisions as they stand here in the bill. We have bound ourselves to pay the Indians a sum of money which we ourselves agree they ought to be paid, to wit, $1.25 an acre. Then straightway we reserve four sections in each township for public purposes, namely, for school purposes. We then provide that the remainder of those lands shall be sold and the proceeds, after paying Mr. Pike what he ought to be paid, $15,000, shall be put into the Treasury to abide the complicated processes which are to be found in those provisions.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a couple of questions.

Mr. ALLISON. I will hear the Senator.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Has this bill—for it is really a bill—which it is rather surprising to find on an appropriation bill, ever been to the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. ALLISON. It has been to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Was it reported favorably?

Mr. ALLISON. And it was reported by that committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, or at least these amendments were, as I understand, referred to the Committee on Appropriations for their consideration. The main provisions of this agreement, however, are found in the appropriation bill as it comes to us from the House of Representatives.

Mr. WOLCOTT. But has the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs studied this question, and has it reported favorably upon such a treaty as we are now passing through the Senate upon an appropriation bill?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know how carefully it has been considered, but I have no doubt the subject has been studied with care.

Mr. WOLCOTT. But has it been reported favorably by the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. ALLISON. The committee has reported favorably on the amendments which we have adopted. I do not know whether the Committee on Indian Affairs considered the subject or not.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Committee on Indian Affairs has heretofore recommended the ratification of this agreement with the Wichitas.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to ask one other question, which my colleague [Mr. TELLER] perhaps can answer better, as he is technically more familiar with the subject, perhaps, than the Senator from Iowa.

The laws in regard to mineral lands are to be extended by this bill over the lands covered by this treaty. To what extent the land here referred to is mineral I am not advised; but if the provisions of law relating to mineral lands are to be extended over all these lands, then I apprehend there will have to be evidence given as to whether the lands taken by the Indians themselves are non-mineral in their character. Is it intended to enact such a provision of law to apply to this case?

Mr. TELLER. I would say that I understand a portion of the Indian lands in the mountains and in the higher country are mineral lands, supposed to contain gold, silver, lead, and copper. The intention is simply to extend the mineral laws over the whole country as they are extended all over the State of Colorado where there are mineral lands. If the lands contain minerals they will be taken under the mineral-land laws, and, if not, under the agricultural-land laws.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Iowa permit me a moment?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. It is very evident that there is going to be no money paid for these lands in less than three years to the Indians who surrender the lands. No money will go into the Treasury of the United States for three years, because it will take two years to allot the lands, and then we provide that they shall not be open to settlement until one year after the allotments have been made. That puts off settlement three years.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. That is another point which I was not for the moment discussing. The point I make as to these lands is that this treaty having been made, leaving to Congress the amount of money which shall be paid to the Wichitas for their right, title, and interest in these lands, and we having provided here that we will pay them $1.25 an acre, make no provision in any way for that payment, but proceed straightway to ourselves segregate, occupy, and hold four sections in each township, and then proceed to provide in another portion of the bill that a man who is settled adjacent to those lands upon a homestead, if his homestead falls short of 160 acres, may take enough of those lands to make up those 160 acres. Then we proceed to sell the residue of those lands and tie them up until there shall be a final decision by the Supreme Court of the United States as to who or what tribe is entitled to receive this money.

Mr. President, I wish to say that, for myself, I do not believe this is a fair and just execution of the agreement we have made with the Wichitas; but I say this with hesitation in the presence of the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] and the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], who are members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and whose primary duty it is to investigate carefully these questions before they are submitted finally to the Senate. If they believe, and will say, that these provisions, taken by and large, constitute an equitable and just arrangement as to the Wichitas, and that they are not entitled to any money under this treaty, I shall not make any further objection to the passage of the several provisions of this bill.

From the examination I have been able to make, however, I do not believe that it is a just and fair recognition of the provisions of the treaty, and I should not deal with it now except for the fact that we made a similar treaty with the Cheyennes and Arapahoes a few years ago, agreeing to pay them a sum of money for their possessory title, it being in effect the same title which the Wichitas have. I think we paid them 90 cents an acre, and then straightway proceeded to pay the Choctaws and Chickasaws a dollar and a quarter an acre for their interest in the same lands. If we submit this question to the Court of Claims, in the first instance, and they award, as Congress has awarded, the Choctaws and Chickasaws a dollar and a quarter an acre for their lands, the Wichitas receive nothing under this treaty except the bare right to have allotments in severalty for the lands which they are authorized to occupy. Those are my objections to these provisions.

If those objections are not grounded in the facts as they appear, of course I shall withdraw them; but I do not like to see these provisions passed without an affirmative declaration from the Senators who have examined this question that the Wichitas are to be fairly treated under these provisions, taken by and large.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, in response to what has just been said by the Senator from Iowa, I have to say that there are certain provisions in this bill which came from the House of Representatives, ratifying and confirming these agreements, that I should not have put in the shape they are in if I had been framing the bill in the first instance, but we have endeavored to put the legislation, by the amendments which have been recommended and which have gone on the bill on the report of the Appropriations Committee in such shape as to accomplish what I believe to be a perfectly just, fair, and equitable settlement of this matter between the contending parties.

I do not believe that anything can be devised which will operate more justly than this, and that the interest of all parties will be passed upon in the courts, and justice will be done. I believe it can be better done by the courts than here, where we can not take evidence, can not examine the testimony, and can not look carefully into all the details of the matter as a court would do. I believe the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I do not remember being present at any session of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate when the Wichita agreement was acted upon. Certainly if there had been any provision whereby the terms of the agreement were changed and $1.25 an acre for the lands had been proposed, and then there had been a court proceeding which might possibly take it all away from the Wichitas, I think I should have remembered it; but this whole matter comes from the other House. It may be that the Committee on Indian Affairs has reported in favor of ratifying the agreement made with the Wichitas with the provision for the payment of $1.25 an acre and the provision that the Choc-taws and Chickasaws may enter the court and determine the title as between them and the Wichitas. So much in reply to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CHANDLER. Allow me to ask what authority has recommended to the Senate that $1.25 an acre should be paid for these lands?

Mr. PLATT. That provision comes from the House of Representatives.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator from Connecticut will allow me a moment, I may possibly have been in error when I said a while ago that my impression was that the Committee on Indian Affairs had reported favorably the Wichita agreement which is under consideration. Such is my impression; but I think the report was made a good while ago, soon after the agreement was made; but I am not positive about that, and the recollection of the Senator from Connecticut may be better than mine on that subject. I have, however, never heard any objection to the ratification of the agreement, and I know it has been discussed in the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PLATT. I am not speaking with certainty upon that subject.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Connecticut that we were informed, as I think very reliably, that the Indians were exceedingly anxious to have this agreement ratified.

Mr. PLATT. But since the agreement has been made the Wichitas, Caddoes, and the other affiliated bands have, by their attorneys, insisted in a long argument here that they had the entire title to this property, that they were entitled to the entire compensation which might be paid, and that the lands were at least worth a dollar and a quarter an acre. I think the Senator from Iowa has that statement. I handed it to him a short while ago.

Mr. ALLISON. I have that statement here.

Mr. PLATT. Whether the Wichita Indians are satisfied with that arrangement by which it appears that they may possibly not receive anything for their lands I am not advised.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut to the fact that in this bill we provide that the Indians shall be paid a dollar and a quarter an acre for their lands. That is in pursuance of the fifth article of the treaty itself, which declared that the price of these lands should be fixed by Congress, and that that should be final. We have fixed that price at a dollar and a quarter an acre, but we have also provided that they may all be taken away from the Indians. I do not understand that that is in accord with the spirit of the fifth article of the treaty.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand the Senator from Iowa to state, in reply to my question, that when this bill came over from the House of Representatives we referred so much of it as pertains to Indian affairs to the Indian Committee.

Mr. PLATT. Oh, no.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then, let me ask, has the Committee on Appropriations, in addition to its multifarious duties, assumed to pass upon the justice or wisdom of the Indian question, and has it considered it as a committee?

Mr. ALLISON. I understand it has.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask, if it is not in violation of the confidence of the committee, whether the committee has taken any testimony or examined any reports or developed the question at all, or in any way passed upon the wisdom, prudence, or equity of such a measure affecting the Indian tribes?

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt it has taken all the testimony available, and has examined all the papers. The committee has given the closest and most careful attention to the whole subject.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask if there was any testimony taken or any papers examined by the committee?

Mr. ALLISON. The treaties were of course before the committee in print. We did not send for the Indians.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Nor was the subject referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. ALLISON. The committee understood, or at least I understood for one, that these provisions, as is the custom, had the approval of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand that the chairman of the committee states that he is uncertain as to whether or not his committee has ever dealt with the question.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I wish to state that I have sent for the clerk of the committee to find what the records of the committee show as to the Wichita agreement. I find that it was referred to a subcommittee, and was reported favorably by the subcommittee to the full committee, but has not been acted upon by the full Committee on Indian Affairs. There has been no report made on it. As to the propriety of ratifying the agreement, there is no objection so far as I know. I have never heard of any objection, and I do not believe there is any.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not criticising the agreement. That agreement is satisfactory as it appears; but the criticism I make is that these provisions do not execute the agreement.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator does not understand me. I want to ask him if he, as an experienced Senator, does not believe when a question comes up in the Senate of the United States dealing with the relations between the Indians and the whites, taking from the Indians vast tracts of land, and arranging as to their remuneration for those lands, that such a measure is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, appointed by this Senate for the purpose of examining such questions, and that it is not fair, either to the white people of this country or to the Indians, that such a question should be passed upon in the last days of the session by the Committee on Appropriations, whose business it is to deal with questions of appropriation, and not specifically with Indian affairs?

Mr. COCKRELL. I will ask the Senator if nearly every agreement with Indians which has been ratified has not been done on appropriation bills in the Fifty-first and Fifty-second Congresses, when the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, as well as in the Fifty-third Congress? There has always been upon the Appropriations Committee, so far as I remember, a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Senator's distinguished colleague [Mr. TELLER] is a member of the committee, and has been, I believe, a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I beg pardon. My colleague is not on the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. I supposed he was. He was Secretary of the Interior, and he is as conversant as any man in the Senate with Indian affairs, and for that reason he was a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations to consider the Indian appropriation bill, and this bill has been considered just as all such bills have been considered for the last twenty years.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I beg the Senator's pardon. I beg to call his attention to the fact that the bill for the removal of the Southern Ute Indians, which passed the Senate the other day, went through the hands of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. Some bills of that character, of course, have been passed in that way, but there always have been some on every Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understood the Senator from Missouri to say that all Indian bills were placed upon the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all. I never said anything of the kind; but the Indian appropriation bill has always gone to the Committee on Appropriations, and that committee has considered everything which was put on the bill ratifying agreements with Indians, either when inserted by the House of Representatives or when by the action of the Senate such amendments have been referred to the committee for consideration, and at the last session provisions ratifying agreements were put on the Indian appropriation bill, some of which were reported by the committee.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if the Senate has ever been in the habit of putting upon appropriation bills any ratifications of Indian treaties until they had been duly reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; I believe nearly all of them have been.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Without reference to the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. COCKRELL. If such an agreement was in the bill as it came from the other House it would stay there, and the Senate committee can not help themselves. We have always considered every treaty which was proposed to be ratified by a provision in the bill as it came from the other House, and we can not help ourselves. We have to consider such provisions, and nearly all of them have been put on in the House. At the last session we had a number of them. We act upon them and take such amendments as the Committee on Indian Affairs have submitted to us.

Mr. WOLCOTT. What I am reaching is this: I will ask the Senator from Missouri whether, whenever an appropriation bill comes up in the Senate that has upon it the ratification of a treaty coming from the other House, it has been through but one Indian Committee; that is, the House Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know whether it has been through that committee or not.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator is not even aware as to whether this provision has ever been before the House Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly not.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It strikes me that that is a most improper method of securing legislation between the Indian and the white man. If we appoint a Committee on Indian Affairs, that committee is entitled to take into consideration the proper relation which should exist between the two races, and should have the care and custody of any proposed treaties between the Indians and the whites.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado what he would do in this case: We have a rule in regard to general legislation on appropriation bills; that rule is often set aside; still it is a general rule and generally enforced. The other House sends over general legislation on appropriation bills, legislation which relates to the administration of justice, or to any single department of the Government. I agree that the Senator's point is well taken, but I should like to have him state further how he would get at it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am not prepared to answer the Senator from Massachusetts, except to say that if it be the fact that our treaties with the Indians are passed and ratified by the Senate on appropriation bills, without reference to the Committee on Indian Affairs, then it would seem to me, in common justice, that it would be infinitely better that the Committee on Indian Affairs should take charge of the appropriations for the Indians, rather than that the rights of the Indians should be sacrificed by being included in appropriation bills, without any consideration whatever by any committee.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to take the Senator from Iowa off the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. All that I desire to say is that I understand the custom of the Senate to be this: That there is upon the Committee on Appropriations at least one member of each of the other important committees of the Senate which deal with the large subjects of legislation. That member is usually placed upon a subcommittee on the particular subject dealt with in an appropriation bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator from Massachusetts inform me who on the Appropriations Committee is a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. HOAR. I suppose the Senator from Arkansas can state. I do not know.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is no member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, who is now a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOAR. My former colleague, Mr. Dawes, was a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs and also a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That has nearly always been the case, and, as stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, his former colleague, who was a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, was also a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOAR. My former colleague, who was chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, during the latter part of his service was chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having charge of the Indian appropriation bill. The chairman of a subcommittee is always supposed to represent the other committee of which he is a member having special charge of the subject-matter. Otherwise the Indian appropriation bill ought to be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs before it goes to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. After this colloquy and these suggestions as to the reorganization of committees in this body—of course I do not wish to enter into that debate at this time—I want to say in answer to the inquiry put to me by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] that as to the duties of the several committees of the Senate, I understand the Committee on Indian Affairs has jurisdiction of all matters relating to the Indian tribes, that it exercises that jurisdiction exclusively, and that no other committee, at least not to my knowledge, takes jurisdiction of subjects belonging to it. We have also in this Chamber, as the Senate knows, a Committee on Appropriations, the duty of that committee being to provide for the appropriation of money for the several branches of the Government authorized by law. We have also in this Chamber a rule, as I understand, which prevents legislation on appropriation bills, so well stated by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. That rule is occasionally violated, oftentimes by unanimous consent, I might say sometimes by the decision of the Chair, sometimes by a submission of a question to a vote of the Senate.

As a rule, we endeavor to keep appropriation bills clear of distinctive legislative provisions, but we do not control the rules of the House of Representatives, and they send us appropriation bills with legislation upon them; and when they send such legislation upon a bill, under the order of procedure there is but one way to get that legislation out of the bill, and that is to reject it in the Senate, or through a conference or a recession of the House of Representatives get it out of the bill by the action of the two Houses.

This agreement with the Wichitas came to the Senate upon the Indian appropriation bill. That bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and we undertook to consider it as best we could, not perhaps with the intelligence and with the care which would have been exercised by other committees of this body. We had a right to suppose, and I am sure it is the fact, that the Committee on Indian Affairs, the members of which are vigorous and alert, when an Indian appropriation bill comes to this body, give it examination as soon as it is printed, and if there is anything in the bill in the nature of legislation, or which pertains to their jurisdiction, they deal with it, without it being specially referred to them, I agree, but they give the Committee on Appropriations their advice and counsel regarding it. The Committee on Appropriations, having charge of these bills, are compelled to make such investigation as they can as to all the provisions they find in such bills. That is the custom, and that has been the custom of the Senate for a great many years, at least so long as I have been a member of it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I desire to correct the Senator of a misapprehension he is under. I made no suggestion whatever respecting the remodeling of the Committee on Appropriations. In replying to a question put to me by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] as to what I would do if we could not get the consideration by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the matters properly belonging to that committee, I gave him my answer. I had no quarrel with the Committee on Appropriations. I do not underrate for a moment the intelligence, ability, and capacity which has characterized that committee. I would not change it if I could; but when the Senator states that we have a Committee on Indian Affairs which deals exclusively with all questions pertaining to the Indian, he must have been under a misapprehension of the meaning of what he says when he follows it up by saying that when the other House sends over an appropriation bill with a treaty with the Indians in it it does not go to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

I rose not in an obtrusive way, not in any fault-finding way, not in any critical way, but seeking some information about this bill; and I ask the Senator from Iowa whether or not this bill in any way, officially or unofficially, has been considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs? The Senator from Iowa told me, I understood, that it had not. The Senator from Iowa now says that when the bill came to the Senate it was referred unofficially to the Committee on Indian Affairs. It will satisfy me as to this measure or any measure which affects the Indians if the Senator from Iowa can give us his assurance that the Committee on Indian Affairs, which is organized for the sole purpose of dealing with the question, whose members are appointed from States and sections of the country where their relations with the Indians give them peculiar facilities for dealing with the question, have been made familiar with the pending proposition and have given it their approval.

I am unable to get it. It seems to me it is a proper and intelligent inquiry, and if the Senator will assure me that the Committee on Indian Affairs or anybody competent to deal with the question has looked into the merits of the treaty on behalf of the Senate, I shall have no further word to say.

Mr. ALLISON. I knew the Senator from Colorado was not finding fault with the Committee on Appropriations. My remarks with respect to the division of duties in this body were only in response to the suggestion made in the colloquy between the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT]. I was endeavoring to show that under the existing order of business in the Senate, which can be changed at a proper time and under proper circumstances when a reorganization takes place, with which I have no fault to find, a different arrangement as to the Indian appropriation bill could be had. I repeat what I have so often said in the debate upon this question, that I understand the Indian Committee does favor this agreement.

Mr. PLATT. The Indian Affairs Committee of the Senate has never acted upon it. When the bill came over from the other House we did not present any objection to the Appropriations Committee, but we have not acted upon the bill in committee.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. I wish to say one word further. The Committee on Appropriations can know as to these questions only from such information as it gathers in the committee.

The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs was present when some of these amendments were considered, and was consulted respecting them. But what I desire to have understood is, that no one here, not even the Senator from Connecticut, criticises this agreement, and if the agreement had been submitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs, I have no doubt it would have been reported favorably. The Senator from Arkansas says they have reported it favorably, and I have no doubt—

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I corrected that statement. I stated that that was my impression. I said that the agreement had been in the Committee on Indian Affairs, had been considered by a subcommittee, and that the subcommittee was ready to report it favorably, but it had not been acted upon by the whole committee. I corrected the statement to which the Senator from Iowa alludes.

Mr. PLATT. What the Committee on Indian Affairs has recommended is a change in the character of the submission to the court. The amendment in that respect received the approval of the committee, and was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. So I understood. I do not think, with all deference to the Committee on Indian Affairs, that an elaborate measure such as is involved here and reported by the Senate committee, with the sanction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, could have been prepared without a careful analysis not only of every provision in the agreement, but a complete analysis of the House provisions respecting it. It is not possible that that committee can pick up a detail of this character and ask the Committee on Appropriations to add to the House provisions without having examined as a committee the House proposition in order to know what it contains.

I am not criticizing the agreement or any part of it. I am complaining that taking these legislative provisions by and large they nullify the fifth article of the treaty; at least it would so appear to the innocent minds of the Wichita Nation. They will see a provision here which gives them $1.25 an acre, and they will see a complicated measure submitting a great number of questions to the Court of Claims and finally to the Supreme Court, which in its effect and result may take from under their feet the $1.25 an acre. Therefore it is holding out to them a hope which, in my opinion, they will not realize under the agreement. That is the only objection I have made here.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the treaty made with the Wichita Indians is entirely agreeable to the Indians themselves. They are not dissatisfied with it. The Department charged with these matters is entirely satisfied with it. There can be no necessity of sending the matter to the Indian Affairs Committee or anywhere else, so far as that is concerned; and I presume it had some examination in the other House by their committee.

Mr. PLATT. In the other House the Indian Committee reports the bill to the House, I understand.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that the Indian Committee reports the bill in the other House, and that it comes from the House to the Senate committee.

I think Senators rather misapprehend what is the effect of the provision by which we propose to submit for the examination by the court of the title of the Choctaws and Chickasaws. We made a treaty with the Wichita Indians that we would pay them what we thought their title was worth in the land they surrendered. We could not agree with the Indians exactly what we should pay them. We proposed, I think, to pay them 50 cents an acre. They thought that was not enough. They said finally, "We will leave the whole matter to the United States." The Indians are to have their allotment. Then what is left they are to be paid for as we see fit to pay them. Article 5 of the treaty reads:

In addition to the allotments above provided for, and the other benefits to be received under the preceding articles, said Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians claim and insist that further compensation in money should be made to them by the United States for their possessory right in and to the lands above described in excess of so much thereof as may be required for their said allotments. Therefore it is further agreed that the question as to what sum of money, if any, shall be paid to said Indians for such surplus lands shall be submitted to the Congress of the United States, the decision of Congress thereon to be final and binding upon said Indians; provided if any sum of money shall be allowed by Congress for surplus lands it shall be subject to a reduction for each allotment of land that may be taken in excess of 1,000 at that price per acre, if any, that may be allowed by Congress.

Then the House saw fit, I understand, under the advice of the Interior Department, to insert the provision which was prepared in the Interior Department providing that if the Choctaws and Chickasaws raised a claim—

To have some right, title, and interest in and to the lands ceded by the foregoing treaty, as soon as the same are abandoned by said Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians, jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the said claim of the Choctaws and Chickasaws and to render judgment thereon.

That, of course, is not in the treaty with the Wichita Indians.

The court is to determine the question whether the United States is bound to pay the Chickasaws and Choctaws any further sum than we have paid them for the lands which the Wichita Indians have ceded to the Government. We treated with those Indians years ago, and they gave us the authority to settle the present occupants upon the land. We took it in trust for friendly Indians. Nothing was said about reserving any right of reversion on the part of the Choctaws and Chickasaws. But now we propose to change the trust, taking a portion of the land from the Indians and selling it to white men.

It was believed in another case of similar character that we were under obligation to pay the Indians; and we did pay them. I have no doubt we shall pay something to the Chickasaws and Choctaws for that right, for I think it is a valuable and existing right. I think they have not parted with their title except for a specific purpose, and when the Government of the United States ceases to occupy it for the specific purpose for which it was granted the land reverts to the Indians. It is their land and they have to be paid for it.

Now, whether we shall pay the Wichitas something also in addition is a question which they have left to us, and it is still left to us. It is not to be determined by the court. I do not think it can be said, if the court should determine that we should give the Choctaws and Chickasaws $1.25 an acre or any other sum, that that is a payment to the Wichitas under the provision of the fifth article of the treaty.

Mr. PLATT. They would have to have more.

Mr. TELLER. They would have to have more. In other words, it might cost us $3 an acre instead of $1.25. That is all there is of it, I understand.

The Committee on Appropriations were not satisfied that the machinery for the adjudication was good as to the rights of the Choctaws and Chickasaws. We discussed that question to some considerable extent, and we called in the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs to aid us. We did not have the committee, but we had the chairman of the committee. I have his permission to say that he consulted with us, and that we fixed upon this form of amendment which we thought would carry out in a proper manner the object and purpose of the amendment of the House of Representatives for the submission to the court.

Then we provided—

That the laws relating to the mineral lands of the United States are hereby extended over the lands ceded by the foregoing treaty.

That provision certainly will not be complained of by the Indians, because if the lands are sold under those laws they will be sold at a much higher price than if sold under the homestead laws, and the Indians will not be injured but benefited.

The Wichitas really have no interest in this matter of submission to the Court of Claims of the right of the Choctaws and Chickasaws for further payment. This is really a case between the United States and the Chickasaw and Choctaw nations. It is rather an indirect way of permitting the Chickasaws and Choctaws to bring suit against the United States to determine whether the United States owes them anything. We can not, in my judgment, with the provisions of article 5 intact, set up, in morals or in law, the fact that we have paid the Chickasaws and Choctaws anything as a discharge of the obligation incurred by accepting the land to pay the Wichitas something.

That is the way I look at it. The Indians are exceedingly anxious to have the agreement ratified. As to the white people, it will not be out of place for me to say that the delegate who represents the people was before the committee, and was exceedingly anxious that it should be ratified. He represents, I believe, the people of all kinds. Everybody knows that all these matters ought to be settled for the benefit both of the Indians and the white people. I believe the bill protects the Government of the United States by permitting the matter to go to the Court of Claims. The Choctaws and Chickasaws, I think, are willing to submit to that. I do not myself think there is any better way of settling it. I am satisfied we should pay the Choctaws and Chickasaws something, and I should be ashamed if we should turn around and say that because we had to pay them we decline to make any appropriation for the Wichitas under the fifth article, for those people very generously said, "We will not now insist on what we might insist upon; we will not insist upon any special price. We will just leave it to the Government of the United States, and let the Government settle it."

In addition to that, when we come to settle with the Wichitas we will have to settle another question. That is, whether when we took this land and gave it to the Choctaws and Chickasaws fifty years ago we did not despoil and take away from the Wichita Indians the land that they were entitled to as much as any other Indians are entitled to—land over which they roamed. While they did not have a great community settled all over it, yet they had communities that did travel over it and communities on it. They were the aborigines beyond question, and they have from that time to this maintained in a sort of indefinite way that they have some title which should be settled. That will have to be settled also. I suppose it is safe enough to say that when it comes to the settlement of this question with the Indians the United States Government will not be close with them, for whatever may be said about our treatment of the Indians there is in the history of the world no nation that has dealt so generously with the aborigines as have the people of the United States.

There is no other nation that has taken possession of the lands occupied by wild people and has paid them such vast sums of money as we have paid the Indians of the United States for a title that many of the European countries absolutely ignore. I think the history of transactions here in Congress, including the payment of the Choctaws and the Chickasaws, with the adverse action of the executive department that determined the payment should not be made, indicated a determination on the part of Congress that the Indians should have no reason to complain of us; that we would rather err in giving more money to the Indian than he was entitled to than to give him less.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I wish to say just one word. I am bound by the action of the committee on this amendment. I think it is very clear that the Wichita Indians should have what the Government agreed to pay them, and not be deprived of it by any submission to any court or anybody else. If it were in my power I should so amend the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. What amendment is that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment which has been under discussion.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to suggest that the practice which we have fallen into of deciding questions which are discussed here at great length by the Chair saying "Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to," is hardly a custom which gives a fair opportunity for the settlement of such questions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that he had no purpose of course to deprive a Senator of any right.

Mr. PLATT. Of course the Chair was following the custom which prevails here, but I think it is better honored in the breach than in the observance.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be read and let us take the vote on it.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to make one suggestion in view of what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has just stated. My observations respecting these provisions were based chiefly upon an answer given to me, I think, by the Senator from Arkansas, namely, that this $1.25 an acre to be given to the Wichitas might be wholly taken away from them by a judgment against the United States by the Choctaws and Chickasaws. I think the sum we pay the Wichitas should be fixed and settled here. Therefore, I suggest to the Senator from Florida, or the chairman of the committee, whoever has charge of the bill at the present time, that we put into the bill a provision that the Wichitas shall have 90 cents per acre or 80 cents per acre for the lands not allotted under the provisions of the treaty, and that that shall settle and satisfy the claim which they have against us under the fifth article of the treaty.

Mr. HIGGINS. Without going into court at all?

Mr. ALLISON. Why should they go to the court? We have provided that we would settle that question. Let us settle it in this bill, and then strike out the provision found on page 54. It seems to me that is a wiser and better solution of this question, and that it would secure a better feeling among the Indians than if we undertake to leave this provision in the uncertainty it now is.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa why we should decide that they shall have 90 cents? Who is to decide whether the land is worth 90 cents or 80 cents, or a dollar, or a dollar and a quarter? Should not somebody investigate the subject and decide what is a fair price?

Mr. ALLISON. The answer to that is this: Our commissioners who made the treaty offered them 50 cents and they asked $1.25. We paid 90 cents an acre to the Cheyennes and Arapahoes for precisely the same title and very nearly the same character of land.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then that is a very good reason. Then why not give the rest $1.25?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not admit that the titles were at all the same. I do not think the Senator from Iowa was justified in saying that the title of the Cheyennes and Arapahoes was of the same kind as the title of the Wichitas. The Wichitas have a claim anterior to any of these claims.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree to that.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I ask the Senator from Iowa, in the spirit of honorable compromise, in order to fix up this matter right, as we know all about it here, or are supposed to know all about it, why we should not give the Wichitas and affiliated bands 90 cents and give 85 cents an acre to the Choctaws and Chickasaws and have the whole thing ended right off, without going to the Court of Claims at all.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think that is a good suggestion.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest that we pass over these paragraphs until to-morrow morning. We are not going to get through with the bill to-night. I think there might be some amendments made to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Colorado that the amendment be passed over until to-morrow? The Chair hears no objection. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill on page 60, line 6. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 60, line 6, after the word "That," to insert "the laws relating to;" so as to make the clause read:

That the laws relating to the mineral lands of the United States are hereby extended over the lands ceded by the foregoing treaty.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 8 I move to strike out "treaty" and insert "agreement."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 60, after line 8, to strike out:

The proper accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to pay to Bartlett Richards, out of the appropriation for "support of Sioux of different tribes, including Santee Sioux of Nebraska," for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, the sum of $885.46, for beef actually delivered to the Pine Ridge Agency, S. Dak., in the month of November, 1894; said amount having been suspended or disallowed, under contract stipulations, for the reason that the average weight of 500 beef steers was not fully up to contract requirements, the deficiency occurring through the efforts of the contractor to comply with written request of the army officer, acting Indian agent, to deliver lighter cattle than had been previously delivered under the contract.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I hope that this paragraph will not be stricken out of the bill for the reason that it is right that it should remain in the bill. I introduced the amendment. It went to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and an adverse report was made, but I think if anyone will read the report that was made by the committee they will be convinced that this portion of the bill should not be stricken out.

Bartlett Richards was the contractor furnishing beef for the Indian service at Pine Ridge Agency. Calls were made at intervals for certain cattle that should weigh an average of so many pounds. At the request of the Indian agent a selection was made of cattle of light weight, as they could be more economically killed and served to the Indians. All of the cattle delivered previous to that particular time were above weight, and it appears that he took out of his herd these light-weight cattle to comply with the request of the Indian agent. The Indian agent says in express terms that the cattle were not of inferior quality. The Government was in nowise injured. So far as any provision of the contract is concerned it was not violated by Mr. Richards, as it appears from the testimony offered in this case that there was no necessity for the Indian agent to have received the lighter weight cattle unless he had actually wanted them.

It makes a difference of eight hundred and forty-odd dollars to the gentleman who furnished the beef. There is no excuse for the Government declining to pay the eight hundred and forty-odd dollars; it is a just claim against the Government. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommends that it shall be paid; the Secretary of the Interior says there is equity in the claim and it should be allowed. I can not see upon what ground, when you have read the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs, that they should have reported this provision adversely. The amendment was put in in the House. It was offered in the Senate, and the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate made a recommendation against it. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if he has examined the report.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have not examined it very carefully. I glanced over it and I thought it was correct. The amendment was reported adversely by the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I supposed it was correct. I think it is. I have not given the report a critical examination.

Mr. CAREY. If the Senator will read the report of the Secretary of the Interior and the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs I believe he will conclude that it is a just claim against the United States. I do not think that in the current affairs of the Government in the furnishing of beef to the Indians from day to day the contractor should be compelled to go to the Committee on Claims and employ attorneys. To press the claim probably during two or three sessions of Congress would cost him more than the $800 involved. He furnished the quality, he furnished the number of pounds, he furnished beef that was satisfactory to the agent, and the beef which it is stated could be most economically distributed among the Indians. I sincerely hope that the Senate will not concur in this amendment.

Mr. MANDERSON rose.

Mr. CALL. It is now 6 o'clock. If the Senator from Nebraska will give way to me, I will move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. MANDERSON. I will yield the floor for the purpose of an adjournment, if that is the desire.

Mr. PUGH. It is important that we shall have a short executive session.

Mr. QUAY. I should be glad if the Senator from Alabama would withhold the motion for a moment.

Mr. PUGH. Certainly.

DELAWARE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. QUAY. I merely wish to make a statement. On Tuesday last, the 12th instant, the Senate unanimously passed the joint resolution (S. R. 133) directing the Secretary of War to make an examination of the bridge to be constructed over the Delaware River between the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania. On the next day the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON] entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed, accompanying the motion with the statement that on the following day he would either withdraw the motion or ask the Senate to proceed to its consideration. A week has now elapsed, and I wish to give notice that after the conclusion of the morning business to-morrow I shall ask the Senate to consent that the motion to reconsider shall be disposed of.

ANTONIO MAXIMO MORA.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 134) calling on the President to take such measures as he may deem necessary to consummate the agreement between the Government of Spain and the United States for the relief of Antonio Maximo Mora, a naturalized citizen of the United States.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. MORGAN. In line 8, before the word "agreement," I move to strike out the word "aforesaid."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KYLE in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the word "aforesaid," in the last line of the joint resolution; so as to make it read:

Resolved, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to insist upon the payment of the sum agreed upon between the Governments of Spain and the United States in liquidation of the claim of Antonio Maximo Mora against the Government of Spain, with interest from the time when the said amount should have been paid under the agreement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. PUGH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-four minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 21, 1895, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 20, 1895.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

JACOB ECKERT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without approval, House bill No. 6244 entitled "An act to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Jacob Eckert."

This bill directs the Secretary of War "to cause the records of the War Department to be so amended as to remove the charge of desertion from the service record of Jacob Eckert, of New Philadelphia, Ohio, late a private in Company B, Sixty-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and to grant an honorable discharge to said Jacob Eckert from the service of the United States Army as of date when said company was mustered out of service."

The regiment and company to which this soldier belonged, except such members as reenlisted as veterans, were mustered out of the service October 17, 1864.

Jacob Eckert did not reenlist and was not mustered out with his comrades for the reason that he was then under arrest on a charge of desertion. In November, 1864, he was tried by a general court-martial and convicted of having deserted on the 1st of September, 1864, and again on the 3d day of September, 1864, and upon such conviction he was sentenced to forfeit all pay due him from September 1, the date of his first desertion, until the expiration of his term of service, to be dishonorably discharged and confined at hard labor for twelve months.

This sentence was approved by the reviewing authority, and I assume the convicted soldier served his term of imprisonment, since the statement contained in the report of the House committee to whom this bill was referred, that he was dishonorably discharged in 1865, can be accounted for in no other way.

It seems to me that the provisions of this bill amount to a legislative reversal of the judgment of a regularly constituted court and a legislative pardon of the offense of which this soldier was convicted. If this doubtful authority is to be exercised by Congress it should be done in such a manner as not to restore a man properly convicted and sentenced as a deserter, without even the allegation of injustice, to the rights of pay, allowance, and pension belonging to those who faithfully and honorably served in the military service of their country according to the terms of their enlistment.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 19, 1895.

WASHINGTON AQUEDUCT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication of the Chief of Engineers relative to the Washington Aqueduct; also draft of a bill authorizing the sale of certain lands pertaining thereto; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF CARABELL BAY AND HARBOR, FLORIDA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter of the Chief of Engineers, report of preliminary examination of Carabell Bay and Harbor, Florida; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF PATENTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the annual report of the Commissioner of Patents for the calendar year ended December 31, 1894; which was referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

STANDARDS OF ELECTRICAL MEASURE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the President of the National Academy of Sciences, transmitting the annual report on standards for electrical measure; which was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

THOMAS CORIGAN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5360) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Corigan.

The SPEAKER. This bill has been returned by the Senate accompanied with a resolution which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to return to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 5360) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Corigan.

The SPEAKER. This bill was reported adversely from the Committee of the Whole at a Friday night session. When the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole were subsequently taken up for consideration this bill was passed by the House under an impression that the report from the Committee of the Whole had been favorable, when in fact it was adverse. When the bill was passed a motion to reconsider the vote on its passage was made and laid on the table, and the bill was sent to the Senate. Afterwards, on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN], the Senate was requested to return the bill; which has been done, and the bill is now on the table. The Chair understands that gentlemen who are interested in this question propose to dispose of it in this way: That the vote by which the bill was passed shall by unanimous consent be reconsidered; that the House shall then vote on the question of agreeing to the adverse report from the Committee of the Whole, and if that should be voted down, that then the vote shall be taken on the passage of the bill.

The Chair understands that to be the agreement to which gentlemen desire the assent of the House. Without unanimous consent the matter can not be reached, as a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was made and laid on the table. Is there objection to carrying out the agreement which has been made, that the vote on the passage of the bill be reconsidered, that the question be then taken on agreeing to the report of the Committee of the Whole, which, if agreed to, disposes of the bill, and if the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole be disagreed to, that then the vote be taken again on the passage of the bill? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HULL. I understand that a vote will be taken on agreeing to the adverse report of the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. It will be.

Mr. HULL. And if that should be voted down the bill will be before the House and the question will be on its passage?

The SPEAKER. It will be.

Mr. HULL. I hope that the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole will be voted down and that the bill will be passed.

The SPEAKER. The vote by which the bill was passed will be reconsidered; and the question will be on agreeing to the report of the Committee of the Whole that the bill lie on the table. The Clerk will first read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5360) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Corigan.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and empowered to place on the invalid pension roll of the United States the name of Thomas Corigan, late a member of Company B of the Eighty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $50 per month, from and after the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on agreeing to the report of the Committee of the Whole recommending that the bill lie on the table.

Mr. HULL. Would it be in order to state that this bill was twice acted on favorably in the Committee of the Whole and was only defeated by the point of no quorum; and it was also twice acted on adversely? I only mention this to show that other action than that now coming before the House had been taken by the Committee of the Whole at a previous meeting.

Mr. SPRINGER. Can the report of the committee be read?

Mr. JONES. There are two reports—a minority as well as a majority report.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let both be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report of the committee and also the views of the minority will be read.

Mr. LACEY. Let the report of the Senate committee be read also, because the bill received the favorable action of the Senate committee before it came back here. The Senate report embraces the House report; and in this way both reports will be read.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman the report?

Mr. HULL. I have the Senate report, and I send it to the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman the House report?

Mr. LACEY. The House report is embraced in the Senate report.

The SPEAKER. The reading of the minority report is also called for.

Mr. JONES. Here is the minority report [handing the report to the Clerk].

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will first read the report of the House Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (H. R. 5360) to increase the pension of Thomas Corigan from $50 to $72 per month, and submit the following report:

Thomas Corigan was a corporal in Company B, Eighty-eighth Illinois Infantry, enlisted July 28, 1862, and was discharged on January 21, 1864.

At the battle of Chickamauga, September 20, 1863, he was severely wounded in the left hand, and is now drawing a pension of $30 per month for that injury, the arm being rendered wholly useless by the wound. At the same time he was wounded by a buckshot in the neck, and the soldier claims that this wound has affected his spine and has produced epilepsy.

The medical evidence shows that the wound in the neck produces distinct crepitus on movement of the neck. The epileptic fits have gradually increased until the soldier is totally helpless and requires constant aid and attendance and has become almost imbecile mentally.

The Pension Bureau in 1892 holds that it can not accept the "fits" as a result of the wound in the back of the neck, but no other cause is evident, and medical evidence has been furnished to show that the wound in the neck is the cause of his present condition.

The soldier's condition is helpless in the extreme, and if the wound in the neck is the cause of his injury he would be entitled to $72 per month under the general law. We are not disposed to criticize the action of the Pension Bureau in rejecting this portion of the soldier's claim, but we think that it might have very fairly decided the other way under the evidence and examination of the medical boards.

Your committee think that the soldier should be given the benefit of the doubt to the extent of being raised to the second grade or $50 a month. The committee is adverse to reporting bills changing the rate of pension as fixed by the Pension Bureau, but in a case of extreme helplessness like the present, where the wound has been followed by such helplessness, and there is much evidence to show that the soldier's condition is due to his wound, we are inclined to relax the rule.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out "seventy-two," in line 7, and inserting "fifty."

If the case were before us as an original question, we would probably have come to a different conclusion from that arrived at by the Pension Bureau, but in the doubt raised in the case we think that the second grade would relieve the wants of the soldier and ought to be granted, especially as the claimant was an excellent soldier, highly commended by Gen. F. T. Sherman, and his severe wounds received in the battle of Chickamauga are clearly shown.

The letter of Colonel Sherman is as follows:

HEADQUARTERS FIRST BRIGADE,
SECOND DIVISION, FOURTH ARMY CORPS,
Camp near Blains Cross Roads, East Tennessee, January 10, 1864.

To whom it may concern:

This is to certify that Thomas Corigan, an enlisted man of the Eighty-eighth Regiment Infantry Illinois Volunteers and corporal of Company B, same regiment, is a soldier good and true; ever faithful in the discharge of duty, never absent without leave, brave as a lion in action, and always at his post. He won the confidence and esteem of his commanding officers by his uniform good conduct and soldierly bearing. I therefore take great pleasure and bear willing testimony to his merit, and request that his wishes may be consulted, inasmuch as he is disabled from active field service by reason of wounds received on the hard-fought and bloody field of Chickamauga on the 20th of September, 1863.

F. T. SHERMAN,
Colonel Eighty-eighth Infantry Illinois Volunteers.

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass after being amended by striking out the word "seventy-two," in line 7, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

The views of the minority of the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read, as follows:

The minority of the Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (H. R. 5599) to increase the pension of Thomas Corigan, and submit the following statement of their views:

The records of the War Department show that this soldier served from July 25, 1862, to January 29, 1864, in Company B, Eighty-eighth Illinois Infantry. He was discharged on account of disability from gunshot wound of hand received at Chickamauga. He has been pensioned for this wound ever since discharge, and now receives $30 per month, since August 4, 1863. His application, filed February 12, 1864, alleged only this wound. A later application, filed September 11, 1866, states that he also "suffers pain in the neck from the effects of a wound there received." In 1867 he claimed that deafness had resulted from that wound, and states that the ball was removed in the field hospital; in April, 1868, he alleged resulting impairment of vision and of hearing; in September, 1868, he refers to "buckshot wound in back of neck;" in February, 1869, he alleged affection of sight and hearing and epilepsy as a result of said wound.

In September, 1862, the Pension Bureau accepted the fact that he had received this wound in the neck, but rejected the claim for additional pension on the ground that he had suffered no ratable disability from it at any time since the war, and none of the alleged results were accepted as sequences of such wound. This action was taken after a careful special examination of the claim, and was affirmed by Secretary Bussey on appeal, January 3, 1869.

In his deposition before the special examiner in June, 1862, the pensioner stated that he received the wound of neck at Chickamauga; that the doctor who took the bullet out put a sticking plaster over the wound and it remained until it fell off.

"The first time I felt any serious disability from the wound of my neck was about fourteen years ago (1878). I was flagging at a railroad crossing in Chicago. I felt a cloud come over me and I fell down right in the track. * * * It was a hot day just like this. * * * I have had convulsions for the past fourteen years, but not so much until the last eight years. I saw the shot that was extracted from my neck. I had it a long time. I lost it. It was a buckshot and went as far as the point of my ear. The doctor said to me when he extracted it, 'Pat, if the shot had gone a quarter of an inch further you would never eat any more potatoes.' * * * I was not bothered with the wound of my neck in 1873, but I knew I had been shot in the neck. In 1873 I was not suffering with the wound in my neck much."

His wife, Rosetta Corigan, corroborates his statement as to the first convulsion or fit about fourteen years previously.

An examination by medical officers of the Pension Bureau September 6, 1873, reports: "Flesh wound of the neck, not rated;" September 7, 1875, "slight flesh wound on the back of the neck, not rated;" September 4, 1877, "slight wound of neck, not rated;" June 22, 1882, "wound on posterior surface of neck, size of a nickel, white in color, nonadherent, nondragging, nondepressed; the vertebrae do not seem to have been injured, but there is thickening of soft tissues beneath the integument."

From the facts stated it seems reasonably clear that the pensioner's present condition as to epilepsy is not chargeable to the slight wound of the neck, but rather originated in 1878 in the manner described by himself and wife.

Moreover, he is in receipt of a pension of $1 a day and the question involved is purely one for the determination of the Pension Office, and the committee has repeatedly refused to interfere in the individual adjudications of the Pension Bureau in matters clearly within their jurisdiction and presenting no technical hardship. To pass this bill is squarely in violation of the principle enunciated in several adverse reports on bills of this character, and the minority do earnestly recommend that the bill do lie on the table.

JOHN J. McDANNOLD,
M. R. BALDWIN,
C. J. ERDMAN.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to ask, Mr. Speaker, whether the amendment reported reducing the amount from $70 to $50 was agreed to or is it the pending question?

Mr. LACEY. That was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. And the bill adopted after that amendment had been agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The bill reads "$50 per month."

Mr. SPRINGER. But, as I understand it, the question of reducing the bill from $70 to $50 a month has not yet been submitted to the House. The Committee of the Whole reported it adversely, with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

Mr. LACEY. But the committee had first adopted the amendment reducing the amount to $50.

Mr. HULL. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. The bill itself provides that.

Mr. LACEY. If the Chair will permit me, the bill provides for $72—the original bill—but by an amendment it has been reduced to $50.

The SPEAKER. The question will first be submitted on the adverse report of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is the recommendation that the bill lie on the table?

The SPEAKER. That is the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPRINGER. And that is not debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

The question is on the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole that this bill lie on the table.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 48, noes 100.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the House refused to concur in the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Now, without objection, the amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole reducing the bill from $72 to $50 per month will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is right.

Mr. BYNUM. The last question submitted was on the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole—

The SPEAKER. It was.

Mr. BYNUM. I make the point of order that where the House refuses to concur in the report of the Committee of the Whole the bill stands recommitted to the committee.

The SPEAKER. That is true under the rule. But unanimous consent was given this morning with reference to this matter, which takes it from under the operation of the rule.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is only where the enacting clause is stricken out, I believe.

The SPEAKER. No; it is the rule itself. But in this case the unanimous consent covers it, so that now, without objection, this bill will be considered as amended so as to provide for $50 a month, which amendment was agreed to in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection the bill will be considered as engrossed and read a third time; and the question now is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard briefly in opposition to this bill. This is a bold and inexcusable attempt, by legislative action, to override and reverse a carefully considered decision of the Pension Bureau.

It appears from the very clear and convincing report filed by the minority of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that that committee has heretofore refused to report favorably bills of this character. Indeed, that several adverse reports have by that committee been made upon bills involving the identical question raised in this case. The beneficiary in this bill was in the service for a period of a year and a half, and he now enjoys a pension of $30 per month, on account of a gunshot wound received in the hand. In the first application made by this soldier he alleged this wound as the one and the only one on account of which he asked to be pensioned, and made no reference to any other wound. He now asks to be given a pension of $72 per month for total disability, alleged to be the result of a wound in the neck. It is alleged that this old soldier is suffering from epilepsy and that he is subject to fits, all of which it is now claimed is the result of the slight wound in the neck, which the soldier himself testifies gave him no serious inconvenience until the year 1873, and to which he did not even refer when first he made application to be pensioned on account of his wounds and disabilities.

The Pension Bureau caused a careful special examination to be made of the alleged wound in the neck in the year 1893 and rejected the claim upon the ground that the claimant suffered no ratable disability from this wound and that the epilepsy complained of was not the result of any disability incurred in the service. The claimant states in his testimony that while flagging at a railroad crossing in the city of Chicago in the year 1878 he suffered what may be described as a sunstroke, and that since that time he had been subject to convulsions. It was about this time that the claimant first experienced any inconvenience from the slight wound in his neck, and it must be as clear to the members of this House as it is to the medical examiners of the Pension Bureau that the convulsions from which this man suffers are not the result of this scratch in the neck, but are rather to be traced to the sunstroke.

The majority of the Committee on Invalid Pensions admit that there is at least a doubt about this soldier's disabilities resulting from his wounds, and therefore it is recommended that his pension of $30 per month be raised to $50 per month and not to $72 which he asks and to which he is unquestionably entitled under the general law if his disability arises from his wounds. Mr. Speaker, it must be evident that this soldier is entitled to the increase he asks, or else he is not entitled to any increase.

But, Mr. Speaker, the medical examiners of the Pension Bureau, after most careful consideration, have decided that he has no ratable disability, and upon appeal being taken, Commissioner Bussey confirmed this finding. I am told that the Committee on Invalid Pensions had before them the ex parte statement of some local doctors, who gave it as their opinion that this soldier owes his disability to the wound in the neck which I have described. Those affidavits were submitted to the medical department of the Pension Bureau, but they failed to convince that department, and the Bureau adheres to the opinion which it has always expressed.

We are now asked, Mr. Speaker, to review and reverse conclusions reached by those whose duty it is to examine the questions involved, and who, every fair-minded man must admit, are best qualified to pass upon them. We are asked to do this when there is not a particle of evidence before us to convince anybody that the Pension Bureau is wrong in its conclusions. The questions involved are purely such as should be determined by the Pension Office, and it will be an unjust reflection upon that Bureau if this House, with no information before it, shall undertake to reverse a decision made by its skilled medical experts. Even were all the facts before the House, it is not competent to pass upon a purely technical question like this one. Every sensible man will admit this. If this bill is passed we may well abolish the medical examiners of the Pension Bureau and permit a half dozen members of one of the committees of this House to determine all the purely medical questions which, until now, it was supposed that medical experts were alone capable of dealing with. Mr. Speaker, I have said this much in order that the House may know just what it is asked to do.

This bill has been carefully and fully considered in the Committee of the Whole upon several occasions and has been twice acted upon adversely. It is now before this House upon an adverse report and we are asked, notwithstanding that report and notwithstanding the facts that I have stated, to pass it. This House may do it, but I want it to know just what it is doing when it assumes this responsibility. There is more involved in this question than the mere payment of $50 per month to a soldier who is now receiving $30. There is involved the establishment of a vicious precedent. There is involved the assertion that the medical examiners of the Pension Office are not as capable of passing upon purely medical and technical questions as the members of this House, most of whom know absolutely nothing about those questions.

Mr. Speaker, I am aware that many gentlemen upon this floor vote for all pension bills and examine none; but I trust that even those gentlemen will carefully consider this bill, which involves all and more than I have said. I hope, at least, that the vote which we are about to take will disclose the fact that the majority of the House is opposed to the unjustifiable and absolutely vicious policy which we are asked to adopt.

In presenting these facts to the House, and in calling its attention to the true character of this bill, I have at least discharged my duty.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. One moment, before the gentleman from Illinois begins. There is a verbal correction of the bill, to strike out the words "Secretary of the Treasury" and substitute the words "Secretary of the Interior." Without objection that amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] refers to the fact that the Pension Department has rejected the application of this pensioner for an increase of pension upon the ground that the proofs did not show conclusively that the disability which has increased his infirmities beyond the thirty-dollar limit was attributable to a wound received in the service. It is conceded, however, that he did receive a wound in the neck, and that this wound, after many years, became painful and troublesome. It appears that the Pension Office was not satisfied that this disability of epilepsy was attributable to that wound.

For that very reason this case should come before this House. I think if I had been the Commissioner of Pensions I should probably have decided just as that Bureau did. But because it is not proven by a preponderance of evidence that the disease which this man complains of was the result of that wound it does not follow that the disease was not the result of the wound. In this case there is no other source from which the disease could be derived except this wound in the neck, and therefore it is one of those cases that appeal to Congress to construe liberally the law in the interest of a pensioner who is admittedly entitled to this pension upon his present disability, if it results from wounds received in the service. And upon that ground, Mr. Speaker, I favor this bill, for the evidence shows that his present condition is such that he is entitled to the rating of $50 a month.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. Where is the evidence in this record that shows that fact?

Mr. SPRINGER. Shows what?

Mr. JONES. That this disability results from the wound in the neck.

Mr. SPRINGER. I did not state that. The gentleman misunderstood me. I stated that the evidence showed that his present disability was of that character that entitled him, if it were derived from wounds in the service, to an increased pension, and that the only question here was upon the technical matter as to whether this last wound referred to caused this additional disability. He did receive this wound in the Army, he is thus disabled, and he is entitled by his present disability to a rating of at least $50 a month; and this is one of the very cases that ought to come to Congress and appeal to our sense of justice, that we should do that which is just and right in a case of this kind.

Mr. WISE. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. WISE. What is the statement of the physician as to whether his disability is the result of the wound? What is the medical testimony?

Mr. SPRINGER. The medical testimony is conflicting. There are many affidavits here showing that his present disability is attributable to the wound he received, while others are not so certain about it; but the fact is that he was wounded, and that he is disabled in the manner described, and I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. HULL. I move the previous question.

Mr. WISE. If the gentleman will allow me to ask him another question, has there not been a special examination—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] moves the previous question. As many as favor ordering the previous question will say "aye," those opposed "no."

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. JONES demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 136, noes 45.

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now I ask unanimous consent that the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. MARTIN of Indiana] be heard for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is ordered. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN] be heard for three minutes.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I do not object if the gentleman confines it to three minutes, but I desire to call the regular order as soon as possible.

Mr. DOCKERY. Three minutes are all I ask for.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, unless—

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. JONES demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 130, noes 58.

Mr. JONES demanded tellers.

Tellers were refused, 33 members, not a sufficient number, voting in favor thereof.

Mr. JONES. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] be appointed in my stead.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] will act as tellers.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 152, nays 74, answered "present" 2, not voting 120; as follows:

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall of the House and failed to hear his name called?

Mr. MARSH. I had just stepped into the lobby, and was gone just a minute, and when I came back my name had been passed. I supposed it was the first call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain the request.

Mr. MARSH. Then I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not submit that, under the rule.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I was not here when my name was called, but was here at the beginning of the call of the roll.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain the request.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague [Mr. WOLVERTON] be excused for this day, on account of sickness.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. ABBOTT with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. MCRAE with Mr. GEAR.

Mr. HUTCHESON with Mr. DRAPER.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts with Mr. COGSWELL.

Mr. WOODARD with Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee.

For this day:

Mr. STOCKDALE with Mr. TAWNEY.

Mr. McLAURIN with Mr. QUIGG.

Mr. ENLOE with Mr. GROSVENOR.

Mr. RAYNER with Mr. SWEET.

Mr. McDANNOLD with Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. MOON.

Mr. ALDERSON with Mr. BELDEN.

Mr. RUSK with Mr. SHERMAN.

On this vote:

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama with Mr. HEINER of Pennsylvania.

Mr. ALLEN with Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BURNES with Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. McMILLIN with Mr. HOPKINS of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HALL of Missouri with Mr. MARSH.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MRS. EVALYN N. VAN VLIET.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 684) for the relief of Mrs. Evalyn N. Van Vliet, with House amendment disagreed to by the Senate.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I move that the House insist on its amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. MARTIN of Indiana, Mr. FIELDER, and Mr. MEIKLEJOHN.

DISCHARGE OF SOLDIERS OF THE LATE WAR FROM THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] calls up a privileged resolution—a resolution of inquiry to the head of a Department. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to furnish to the House the names of the soldiers of the late war discharged from the public service in his Department and the several bureaus thereof since March 4, 1893, and the cause in each case of such dismissal.

Mr. SPRINGER. Where did that come from?

The SPEAKER. This is a resolution that was introduced last December and referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, and no report having been made the gentleman calls it up as a matter of privilege.

The question was taken on the adoption of the resolution, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MEREDITH. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 63, noes 55.

So the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

MICHAEL GAUL.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I ask for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to withdraw that demand for a moment.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I withdraw the demand temporarily.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 5877, for the relief of Michael Gaul.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to correct the record of Michael Gaul by removing the charge of desertion which now stands against him on the records of the Navy Department, and to issue to him a certificate of honorable discharge from the United States Marine Corps.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs, was read:

Provided, That no arrears of pay or bounty shall be allowed to the said Michael Gaul by this act.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to hear some explanation of this bill.

Mr. HAINES. I ask that the report be read. That will explain it.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report will be read.

The report (by Mr. MEYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs have considered the bill (H. R. 5877) for the relief of Michael Gaul, and submit the following report:

The purpose of this bill is to remove the charge of desertion against Michael Gaul, who was a sailor in the United States Marine Corps and Navy.

The records of the Navy Department show that he enlisted in the Marine Corps October 26, 1861, and was honorably discharged November 6, 1865; enlisted in the Navy December 17, 1866, as first-class fireman, and was honorably discharged April 23, 1870; enlisted again in the Marine Corps January 25, 1871, and deserted February 16, 1871, and the Navy Department has no authority under the general law to remove this charge.

The petitioner states, in explanation of this charge of desertion, that he was on a spree with some of his old shipmates, and when he became sober he regretted what he had done, but his health not being good he returned to his home and never returned to duty; that he wishes the charge of desertion removed for the sake of his family; that he had one brother killed in the war and another who served through the war; that he never received any bounty or prize money.

There is on file an original number of a newspaper, the Higo News, dated September 24, 1893, containing a letter from an officer of the United States steamer Iroquois describing the rescue from drowning of a Japanese (whose boat had capsized) by the united efforts of William Hawkins and Michael Gaul, at the imminent peril of their own lives.

The petitioner states that William Hawkins, above referred to, assaulted a comrade with a razor and subsequently deserted from the Iroquois, but was reinstated in his rank as a petty officer by the President because of his assistance in rescuing the Japanese.

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass after being amended by adding the words:

"Provided, That no arrears of pay or bounty shall be allowed to the said Michael Gaul by this act."

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand from the report that this man was drunk and deserted.

Mr. HAINES. Yes, sir; after serving seven years in the Army.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. And that he was sorry afterwards. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STALLINGS. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I ask unanimous consent that the call of committees be dispensed with, and that gentlemen having reports to present have leave to file them with the Clerk.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not wish to object to that, Mr. Speaker, but I desire to submit an adverse report which is the unanimous report of the committee.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The following reports of committees were handed in at the Clerk's desk, referred to their appropriate Calendars, and otherwise disposed of, as indicated below:

BRIDGE OVER THE MONONGAHELA RIVER.

Mr. BARTLETT, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8880) to authorize the Monongahela and Western Railroad Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MAHON RIVER LIGHT STATION.

Mr. MAHON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8609) to establish the Mahon River light station on a new site; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RANGE LIGHTS STATION AT MORRIS RIVER, DELAWARE BAY.

Mr. MAHON also, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8612) authorizing the establishment of a range lights station at Morris River, Delaware Bay; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

STEAM LIGHT-VESSEL AT OVERFALLS SHOAL, NEW JERSEY.

Mr. MAHON also, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8611) for a steam light-vessel at Overfalls Shoal, New Jersey; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RELIEF VESSEL FOR FOURTH LIGHT-HOUSE DISTRICT.

Mr. MAHON also, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8610) for a relief vessel for the Fourth light-house district; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS ILLINOIS RIVER NEAR THE TOWN OF HENNEPIN.

Mr. DURBOROW, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8889) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Illinois River at or near the town of Hennepin; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. WEADOCK, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1515) to amend chapter 6 of Title XXXII of the Revised Statutes, relating to mineral lands and mining resources; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PORTRAIT OF DANIEL D. TOMPKINS.

Mr. BARTLETT, from the Committee on the Library, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 1909) to purchase a portrait of Daniel D. Tompkins, late Vice-President of the United States, painted by Jarvis in 1812; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CARE AND CURE OF INEBRIATES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. MEREDITH, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8630) to provide for the care and cure of inebriates in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARTERS OF CERTAIN STREET RAILROAD COMPANIES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported, in the nature of a substitute for House bill 8461, the bill (H. R. 8923) to amend the charters of certain street railroad companies in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill 8461 was laid on the table.

HARBOR OF PEEKSKILL, N. Y.

Mr. CATCHINGS, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, reported back favorably the joint resolution (H. Res. 267) providing for a survey of the harbor of Peekskill, N. Y.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ESTABLISHMENT OF MILITARY POST AT OR NEAR SANTA FE, N. MEX.

Mr. JOSEPH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported in the nature of a substitute for House bill 354 the bill (H. R. 8928) for the establishment of a military post at or near the city of Santa Fe, N. Mex.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 1483) to correct the military record of Elisha B. Bassett;

A bill (S. 2591) to amend the charter of the Metropolitan Railroad Company of the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 4693) for the promotion of anatomical science, and to prevent the desecration of graves in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 5624) to authorize the Oklahoma Central Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian and Oklahoma Territories, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 8681) authorizing the Arkansas Northwestern Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 8727) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CALL, Mr. BRUCE, and Mr. CULLOM as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1795) to aid in the erection of a monument to the memory of Gen. William Smallwood and the soldiers of the Maryland Line in the war of American independence;

A bill (S. 2388) for the relief of Fred Kormann;

A bill (S. 2508) for the relief of James Curran;

A bill (S. 2745) to authorize the Postmaster-General to refund to Volley P. Hart, postmaster at Sedalia, Mo., moneys sent him by the Post-Office Department for the disbursements and losses by the failure of the First National Bank of Sedalia; and

A bill (S. 3783) to postpone the enforcement of the act of August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea."

DAIRY TESTS.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, from the Committee on Printing, reported back adversely the joint resolution (H. Res. 235) for the publication of the dairy tests made by the Columbian Exposition; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request that the call of committees be dispensed with, and that gentlemen having reports to present have leave to file them with the Clerk?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the pending bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8865) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose last evening the Clerk had read as far as page 37, line 24. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of noncommissioned officers, musicians, and privates: For 1 sergeant-major, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 1 leader of the band, 1 drum-major, 50 first sergeants, 140 sergeants, 180 corporals, 30 musicians, 96 drummers and fifers, and 1,000 privates, and for the expenses of clerks of the United States Marine Corps traveling under orders, $381,847.67.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. On yesterday the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], whom I regret not to see in his place, as well as the gentleman in charge of the bill, made statements upon this floor that the marines were being used at the secondary batteries.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I made no such statement.

Mr. SAYERS. I did not say you; I said "gentlemen." If the gentleman from Maryland did not make the statement, I will except him, and I am glad to see he differs with the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I do not know how much I differ with the gentleman from Maine, but I made no such statement as that which the gentleman from Texas attributes to me. Now, in the testimony taken before the Committee on Naval Affairs regarding a bill which is pending before this House in relation to the marines the following is found in the statement of Colonel Heywood, colonel of the marines. He says:

As the matter stands now the marines are sent on board as sharpshooters, you may say supernumeraries, and they do not render the service which a body of men who are so well organized and drilled should perform.

Mr. MONEY. As a general thing do not they man the secondary batteries? Colonel Heywood. They do, until the guns are taken away from them. They are nearly always put there by the captain when first going on board ship, but are taken away afterwards upon orders from the Bureau of Navigation, Navy Department.

Again:

Mr. MONEY. There is no law now or regulation of the Department existing that prevents the marines from serving at the batteries?

Colonel Heywood. No; but when they are stationed there by the captain orders are at once issued by the Bureau of Navigation to remove them. We state to the committee that by stationing the marines at the guns of these secondary batteries their services could be extended, and consequently they would be more useful on board ship.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I offered on yesterday was to direct the Secretary of the Navy to assign the marines to man the secondary batteries in order to obviate the necessity of increasing the number of enlisted seamen, as provided for in this bill, and, if I recollect right, gentlemen on the other side stated—the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] especially; the gentleman from Maryland in charge of the bill denies it, and I of course accept his denial as true—and insisted upon it, that the marines were already in charge of the secondary batteries on the ships.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I reiterate what I said yesterday. The gentleman from Texas endeavored yesterday to amend this bill so as to authorize the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to place these men on board and behind the secondary batteries. All I did was to read a statement which showed that nearly one-half of them are now assigned on board vessels. The question has been disposed of, and I do not see why the gentleman from Texas should want to kill the time of the House.

Mr. SAYERS. I wanted to call attention to the facts of the case as developed in the testimony before the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. One of the troubles in the Navy, I suppose, is that the Marine Corps want to get into the line.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not know anything about that.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment before the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

That for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States the President is hereby authorized to have constructed by contract three seagoing coast-line battle ships designed to carry the heaviest armor and most powerful ordnance upon a displacement of about 10,000 tons, to have the highest practicable speed for vessels of their class, and to cost, exclusive of armament, not exceeding $4,000,000 each; and nine torpedo boats of from one to three hundred tons each, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, at a cost not to exceed an average of $170,000; and the Secretary of the Navy is further directed to construct three additional torpedo boats of from one to three hundred tons each, at a cost not to exceed an average of $170,000, one of which shall be constructed at the Brooklyn Navy-Yard, Brooklyn, N. Y., one at the Norfolk Navy-Yard, Norfolk, Va., and one at the Mare Island Navy-Yard, Mare Island, Cal.; and in the construction of all said vessels all of the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment," as to materials for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built, except as to premiums, which are not to be offered, the notice of any proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, and specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts shall be observed and followed, and said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act, save that in all their parts said vessels shall be of domestic manufacture. In making proposals for contracts for building the vessels authorized by this act it shall be required that one of such battle ships and three of such torpedo boats shall be built on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean or the waters connecting therewith; Provided, That if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the President of the United States, from the biddings for such contracts when the same are opened and examined by him, that the said vessels can not be constructed at a fair cost on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean, he shall authorize the construction of said vessels, or any of them, elsewhere in the United States; and if the Secretary of the Navy shall be unable to contract at reasonable prices for the construction of any of said vessels, then he may build such vessel or vessels in such navy-yard as he may designate: And provided further, That one of said battle ships shall be named Kearsarge.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I rise to offer an amendment.

Mr. SAYERS. I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] offers the amendment which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 46, by adding after the word "therewith," in line 15, the words "and two torpedo boats shall be built on the Mississippi River," and after the word "ocean," in line 30, insert the words "and that the torpedo boats above authorized can not be constructed at a fair cost on the Mississippi River."

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. We are ready to accept that amendment.

Mr. SAYERS. I should like to have some explanation as to the construction of these boats on the Mississippi River.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Chairman, the amendments which I have offered, although two in number, are substantially one, the second merely applying to the Mississippi River the same provisions which the bill applies to the Pacific Ocean. It has been the policy of the Government for some years to authorize the construction of a part of the ships carried by each bill in the shipyards of the Pacific Ocean. About two years ago a little shipbuilding establishment on the Mississippi River bid successfully for the construction of one of the torpedo boats authorized by the act of 1891. That boat has been constructed, has been launched, and is now awaiting final trial.

The success of the little shipbuilding firm at Dubuque, in the State of Iowa, has been very gratifying to the Department and had the effect not only of scattering the profits of shipbuilding throughout the country, but of interesting a large section of the country in the upbuilding of the Navy. Now, in the amendment which I offer I propose that in addition to requiring part of the ships to be constructed on the Pacific Ocean, a part of the torpedo boats authorized shall be constructed on the Mississippi River. I make this proposition because the shipyards of the Mississippi Valley are able to do the work, and in view of the immense population of that region are entitled to a share of the profits of the industrial enterprises connected with shipbuilding. They are entitled not only to the employment of their capital, but to the employment of their labor in these enterprises; and I think I shall have no difficulty in convincing the committee that if these boats are to be constructed there can be no harm done, but on the contrary much good done if their construction be scattered as far as possible throughout all the industrial communities of the United States.

Mr. SAYERS. Does not the gentleman believe that the Government should let the construction of these boats to the lowest and best bidder, without reference to the portion of the country from which the bids may come? I have heard a great deal about the unity of this country and about the flag of this country; but whenever you touch any gentleman's locality, or whenever he wants an appropriation made for work which will affect his locality, he proposes and votes for such legislation as will do that work at the expense of the General Government. Now, I believe that the building of these ships ought to be let to the lowest and best bidder, requiring at the same time that the bidder shall construct the ships just as cheaply as he constructs similar vessels for a foreign government.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Is there anything in this bill that does not permit that?

Mr. SAYERS. There is an invitation in the bill not to do it.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Oh, no.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I want to say to my friend from Texas that the amendment I have offered expressly authorizes and requires the Secretary of the Navy to reject these bids coming from the Mississippi River region unless they come at a fair and reasonable proposal.

Mr. SAYERS. Is it not left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy to say what is a reasonable price? And in justice to the Government ought it not to be required that these bids shall be let to the lowest, best, and most responsible bidders?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Let me say to my friend that the Department has two objects in view—one to get the ships and the other to establish the business of building ships in the United States.

Mr. SAYERS. The trouble with the Department is that it has sometimes been engaged more in establishing industries than in watching the interests of the Government.

Mr. DOLLIVER. By establishing the shipbuilding industry on the Pacific Coast, as the Navy Department did in the construction of war ships there, we have not only got as good ships as we would have obtained otherwise but have also got them as cheaply, and we have doubled the ship-producing ability of the American people, which is quite as important as getting cheap ships.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I should like to make an arrangement with gentlemen opposed to this legislation in regard to new battle ships so that we may limit the time for debate.

Mr. SPRINGER. Make it half an hour.

Mr. SAYERS. Oh, no; gentlemen must not be in such a hurry to pass this bill.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto terminate at half past 2 o'clock.

Mr. SAYERS. Let us understand each other on this proposition. To what point in the bill does the gentleman from Maryland wish to limit the debate?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Down to the end of line 24, on page 47. That includes the authority for the construction of the new ships, the armor and the armament, and the construction of the steam machinery.

Mr. DOLLIVER. What limit does my friend from Maryland suggest?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. To limit the debate on this part of the bill to half past 2 o'clock, the time to be divided equally.

Mr. SAYERS. I suggest to the gentleman from Maryland that it would be better to limit debate on the paragraph which has just been read, ending with line 2 on page 47.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Very well; I do not object to that, and I ask consent, Mr. Chairman, that the debate on this proposition, beginning with line 6, on page 45, and ending with line 2, on page 47, and all amendments to the same, be closed at half past 2 o'clock, the time to be equally divided.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT] to control one-half of the time, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] the other half.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I ask for a vote on the amendment I have offered, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SAYERS. I am not opposing the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa. Let it be adopted. But I wish to bring the House to know that the discretion that is being used by the Department in the construction of these ships will be not solely to build the ships the most cheaply, but also to promote another interest besides that of the Government.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word in respect to the amendment of my colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had agreed to recognize the gentleman from Maryland to control one-half of the time, and the gentleman from Texas the other.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. At this point, however, Mr. Chairman, I think it would be better to dispose of the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa. I understand the gentleman from Texas withdraws his objection to it.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Does the gentleman from Texas consent that this amendment of my colleague may go in?

Mr. SAYERS. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Then I do not desire to be heard upon it.

The amendment of Mr. DOLLIVER was agreed to.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out from the bill all after the word "contract," in line 9, on page 45, down to and including the word "and" on the same page, in line 14.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of the paragraph just read the following words:

"Three seagoing coast-line battle ships designed to carry the heaviest armor and most powerful ordnance upon a displacement of about 10,000 tons, to have the highest practicable speed for vessels of their class, and to cost, exclusive of armament, not exceeding $4,000,000 each; and."

Mr. SAYERS. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON].

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the whole of the discussion in regard to the various appropriations covered by the pending bill, but I have not heard as yet any defense that I regard as at all satisfactory for the construction of the proposed new battle ships, nor any reason given for their utility or their necessity at this time.

Gentlemen on the other side of this question who have discussed the bill, whether purposely or otherwise, have evaded that part of the discussion entirely. I would not oppose the bill if this proposition were not included. But I am opposed to the construction of the three new battle ships for the reasons that I have heretofore stated. I am opposed to it on the ground, in the first place, that it has not yet been fully or satisfactorily demonstrated by the experience of any nation on earth that these ships are really valuable as a means of defense; and the committee, I think, have totally failed to show that they are.

I oppose the provision also on another ground, that now, in a time of profound peace, with our nation in financial distress, with the Government borrowing money at a high rate of interest, it seems a most inopportune time, in the absence of any necessity whatever for the construction of these ships, to enter upon this work; and no good reason is given why we should incur the enormous expense which will be necessarily involved. I oppose it also because I think the people of the United States at this time—even if their construction was necessary, which, as I have repeatedly said, has not yet been demonstrated—can ill afford to appropriate so large a sum as must be paid to the shipbuilders during the next year or two for these battle ships.

Mr. BLACK. What does the appropriation carry?

Mr. SIMPSON. The total appropriation involved in the construction of these ships, with their armor and armament, steam machinery, and so on, will involve an expenditure of $23,000,000, in round numbers, before the vessels are complete and ready for service; and I say that this is an expenditure that, even if the value of these ships had been proven by actual demonstration, the people of the United States can not well afford to incur at this time. I do not know that I should object to an appropriation for the increase of the number of swift cruisers. I think they are necessary, and I regard them as the most useful of our vessels as a defensive arm of the Government. If we need a navy at all, it is to protect our interests, our commerce, and our citizens in foreign countries; and the swift, light-armed cruiser is undoubtedly the most valuable vessel for that service. But the great battle ship is not, as I think I proved the other day in the early discussion of this bill, by any means a seagoing vessel. The immense weight of the armor and armament with which the vessel is loaded down will prevent her, necessarily, from carrying a sufficient supply of coal or fuel for any long cruise. She is intended mainly for coast defense, if for anything.

I said at the opening of the discussion that a vessel of this class was not available in this country for the necessities of our service, for the reason that we have such a long line of seacoast with so many shallow harbors in which she can not enter to get supplies or to operate for the defense of the coast.

I can readily see, Mr. Chairman, why the Republicans should want a large navy and a great standing army. I can readily see that the men who believe in the policy of a strong government, of a centralized government, should want a strong army and a strong navy. They are the props on which a strong centralized government rests. They are the means which a strong centralized government has for enforcing its commands; but in a great Republic like this, resting upon the will of the people, I can see no necessity for burdening the people to build up a great navy or a great army.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. SIMPSON. Yes.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Just where does the gentleman draw the line for the General Government to cease to exercise its power in the preservation of peace and the performance of its functions? I want to know where it begins to be a strong and a centralized government. Just let us know about how far—

Mr. SIMPSON. That has been the trouble with all the nations, where it ceases and where it begins. The strong mailed hand of power is continually stealing from the people their power. It is through this process, little by little, that a strong government is organized out of the people's government, and year by year we have witnessed, for thirty years, the gradual encroachment of power by the executive upon the administrative and the legislative.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Could we not avoid all danger by just disbanding the General Government? [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMPSON. The danger of what?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Why, of a centralized government.

Mr. DINGLEY. And let each State maintain a navy.

Mr. SIMPSON. The gentleman is trying to be funny now.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. No; I am trying in good faith to find where the gentleman would draw the line, and what he means by a centralized government.

Mr. SIMPSON. The people who organized this Government, the men to whom we owe a free Government, the freest Government that has ever been organized among men, foresaw clearly, and realized from the past experience of the people, the danger of a strong army and a great navy. There is not one of the forefathers who organized this Government among the people who has not at one time or another expressed himself against the building up of a great army and of a great navy.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SIMPSON. Yes; certainly.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Does the gentleman object to this being a strong Government? Does he want to make the Government weak?

Mr. SIMPSON. I want to hold the power among the people.

Mr. BOWERS of California. They have it. It is the people's Government.

Mr. SIMPSON. I stated before that a great army and a great navy have, in the experience of every nation, at one time or another, proved the enemy of the people. If the gentleman from California has not intelligence enough to discern what I mean, why that is his fault and not mine.

Mr. BOWERS of California. One more question, then, right here. Did we ever have any other Government in the United States but a Government of the people, that came from the people, elected by the people?

Mr. SIMPSON. I am holding this up as a warning to the people of this country.

Mr. BOWERS of California. If the Government is wrong, it is because the people are wrong.

Mr. SIMPSON. I am speaking of the danger of building up a strong centralized force in the shape of an army and navy. What experience had Brazil here but a short year ago? From where did the danger come to her? Did it come from the people?

Mr. BOWERS of California. Free government comes from the people.

Mr. LOUD. I hope my colleague will allow the calamity howl to go on.

Mr. SIMPSON. There was nearly a successful attempt to overthrow the Government of Brazil through the organization of a strong and powerful navy. There is an experience that I hold up as a warning to the people of this country.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. SIMPSON. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me. I do not think the gentleman from California can add anything to this discussion.

Mr. BOWERS of California. No; I do not think either of us, probably, is adding anything to it.

Mr. SIMPSON. In conclusion, I want to say that I am opposed to the appropriation of this large sum of money for what I believe will be a useless number of battle ships. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTFLE], the only man, with one exception, on the Naval Committee who has ever had any experience in naval affairs or as a sailor, said here yesterday that nine years ago we built a cruiser which was at that time, as far as naval architecture and armament were concerned, in advance of any such ship that had been built in the world; yet after nine years' experience we find that she is now out of date and obsolete, and we have to expend a large appropriation to bring her up to modern times.

So it will be with these battle ships. In nine years or less, perhaps, they will have to be thrown away and another large appropriation made to build other battle ships, or other ships more in accordance with modern invention and discovery.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY].

Mr. MONEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas is really gorged with misinformation. He says that a battle ship that is nine years old is obsolete, when as a matter of fact she is one of the finest in the fleet. I simply want to say, as a matter of fact, that of the battle ships and cruisers that were engaged in the battle of Yalu River two were more than ten years old. My friend from Kansas says we do not want any battle ships, because they are not seaworthy. There is not a cruiser in the fleet more seaworthy than a first-class line-of-battle ship; and to show you how he differs with the aggregate wisdom of the world, I will state that there are 115 battle ships afloat in the navies of the different nations of the world, and 43 are now building; and under the Spencer programme 40 more are being built by the British Government.

My friend stated the other day in his remarks—not one single paragraph in which did not contain a misstatement—that one of the battle ships of China was struck by a torpedo from a Japanese torpedo boat and went down head first, her wheel revolving as she went down. As a matter of fact, there were only two battle ships involved in that engagement, and neither one of them sunk. The gentleman says they were sunk by a torpedo. Not one single torpedo was used by the Japanese in that whole battle. As a matter of fact, the vessel that was sunk was one of these cruisers of which he is so much in favor.

Mr. SIMPSON. The gentleman will excuse me. He has accused me of something I do not want him to do, because it is not correct. I stated that I read that from the Scientific American, and I did not state it of my own authority.

Mr. MONEY. I say that the gentleman is entirely mistaken. There is no such account given of the sinking of a battle ship at that battle of the Yalu River.

Mr. SIMPSON. I did not say it was.

Mr. MONEY. It is in your remarks as printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SIMPSON. You will not find it in my remarks.

Mr. MONEY. I read your speech, and found it there. As a matter of fact, the Japanese never fired a torpedo during the whole fight. The vessel that was sunk was struck by a 12-inch shell, and was one of the Chinese cruisers, one of the ships you want to build.

The gentleman says we ought to build cruisers and not battle ships. I ask you whether we should trust this matter to the judgment of the gentleman from Kansas or to the judgment of the Navy of the United States and the men who have it in charge? Who is the better informed—the gentleman from Kansas or those gentlemen whose business it is by the laws to consider all matters involved in the construction and maintenance of the Navy? If the gentleman will peruse his statement again he will discover other mistakes. He says battle ships can not carry coal. I will tell him that the coal-carrying capacity of a battle ship is greater than that of a cruiser. In the case of the Iowa, which is one of the battle ships just about completed, she has a capacity of 1,752 tons of coal, and at a moderate rate of speed she can run 7,073 knots without recoaling. There is nothing in the history of the late war that does not indicate that the battle ship is the arm of the future, and that all naval contests must be decided by the battle ship.

The fact of the business is, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman has gone so far that he declares that we do not want any navy; that we want to live at peace with the balance of the world and with the balance of mankind.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the American Congress is willing to see the country deprived of its defense, then it may follow the statesmanship of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS]. He talks about the continuing cost of these ships. As a matter of fact, there is no appropriation except an insignificant amount that will come in the fiscal year after the next one, as we provide in this bill. There will be no more payment for battle ships until the new system of construction has begun.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SAYERS. A parliamentary inquiry. There is some difference between the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT] and myself as to who has the right to close this debate. It is upon my motion, and I have the right to close.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There is an agreement that this debate shall close in forty minutes, and I being in charge of the bill have a perfect right to conclude this debate and control the bill.

Mr. SAYERS. I have offered an amendment, and the debate is upon that amendment.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. It is all amendments to this paragraph; and I claim the right to control the debate. I have only occupied five minutes of the time, and the gentleman has occupied ten.

The CHAIRMAN. The agreement was that the debate should be closed on the paragraph and all amendments to the paragraph, and therefore the chairman of the committee will have the right to close debate.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, Mr. Chairman, to be candid—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the gentleman that the other side have used but five minutes of their time.

Mr. SAYERS. I understood the Chair to be forcing me into the debate at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair made no such statement.

Mr. SAYERS. Then let the gentleman from Maryland proceed.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am for peace and against war, and therefore I am for these battle ships and torpedo boats. The surgeon can not wisely be without his surgical instruments because he does not happen to have at the time a patient needing their use.

My stock of patience has become pretty nearly exhausted by this eternal abuse of our Navy that comes from certain quarters. I think it would content some gentlemen best if on the back of every naval officer and seaman could be hung a tag on which was written: "This fellow is a scamp or a scoundrel." There is a spirit in certain quarters, most unworthy I think, which delights in constantly reflecting upon a gallant, educated, cultivated, and worthy branch of our public service, the Navy. Certainly nothing that has been done by the United States Navy, in all our past up to the present hour, merits this abuse.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON] says he does not wonder that Republicans support this measure, because "they are for a strong centralized government." I do not know whether or not the gentleman is bordering on State rights and secession when he makes that remark. He knows best. For my part I am for a strong centralized government, of which every State and each citizen shall be a royal and an interested part. [Applause.] I believe in a government that will protect every citizen, rich or poor, from the outside to the center of it.

I think we have had recent experiences enough to teach us that in order to protect the people we must be in a position to do so. I am against a large standing army. I am against a large navy. So far as the forefathers have stood on that platform I stand with them; but I believe in having so much of an army and such a navy as will prevent impudent fellows, governed by selfishness, from walking around with chips on their shoulders, or dictating to us on all questions of international or maritime policy. [Applause.] That is my feeling in regard to the Navy. The battle ships proposed in this bill I believe are needed. There is about $500,000 appropriated for them in this bill. It takes a long time to build a battle ship, but this inaugurates the work.

It proceeds on the system—a system which I do not approve of except when it is necessary—of making contracts anticipating the revenues of the Government. In this case, however, that must be done to some extent in order to have the work done.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I say that any man who believes in protecting his country in its just rights can not afford to belittle our Army or our Navy, both of which ought to be kept in such condition that, supplemented by our rich, patriotic people, they can at any and at all times command respect and protect the citizen and the property of the citizen everywhere. [Applause.]

Mr. SAYERS. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, in those two minutes I want to say that I am not going to discuss the propriety of this proposed authorization of torpedo boats and battle ships. I merely want to call attention to the conditions under which this work is proposed. These battle ships, contracts for which are authorized by this bill, are to cost when completed over $20,000,000. It may be that it is well to have them. This bill carries only $500,000 of the $20,000,000 plus that will be required, but it authorizes the contracts which beget the whole expenditure. I suspect that the bill has much of strength in this House from the fact that the authorization can be made now and the appropriation will have to follow in the next Congress.

Mr. SAYERS. That is so.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. So that we shall have a naval bill in the next House swelling up to, perhaps, $40,000,000, and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT], who now stands like a beacon light in the storm, and that illustrious mariner from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], to whose dulcet tones I always listen with interest, after making this authorization here will stand, twelve or eighteen months from now, talking about the terrific extravagance of the Republican House in bringing in a navy bill that carries $40,000,000. [Laughter.] Gentlemen, why do you not have the courage of your legislation? The manly thing to do is, along with this twenty millions of authorization, to make at least a decent portion of the necessary appropriation. But you will not do that. You will authorize, but you will shirk the responsibility of your convictions and your authorizations. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words, and especially to my Republican friends. I believe that my record in this Congress will show that I have endeavored, so far as I could, to discharge all outstanding contracts of the Government and to leave as few contracts upon the next Congress as possible, thus paving the way to a further and a larger reduction of expenditures by the Federal Government.

For that reason, among others, I am opposed to this legislation. I do not believe this House would be doing right to impose upon the next Congress the burden of discharging the contracts which it authorizes the present Administration to enter into. If I favored the construction of these battle ships I would also favor a larger appropriation, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois.

Now, I have no hopes of carrying this amendment. Why, sir, Mr. Cramp, the man who of all others in the country is most interested in this matter, has said that this bill would pass. How much has Mr. Cramp been paid by the General Government for the building of ships? Over $22,000,000.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Have we not got the ships?

Mr. SAYERS. The Bethlehem Company, who are receiving today, as I am told, $150 more per ton from the Government of the United States than they are receiving from the Russian Government for the same kind of material, has been paid nearly $7,000,000 by our Government, and Carnegie over $4,000,000. For this reason I do not expect this amendment to succeed. Parties are here from the Pacific Coast to pass this bill; they are here from Louisiana to pass this bill; they are here from Pennsylvania to pass this bill. Why do we want battle ships? How many ports and harbors in this country can these battle ships, if constructed, enter? Are there half a dozen?

Mr. LOUD. Oh, yes; twenty-five.

Mr. SAYERS. No, sir.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I published in the RECORD a list of about thirty.

Mr. SAYERS. I am speaking of the battle ships.

Mr. MALLORY. They can not enter the harbor of Galveston.

Mr. SAYERS. No; and they can not enter any harbor of Florida.

Mr. MALLORY. They can enter at Key West, where there is 27 feet of water at the bar.

Mr. SAYERS. I am tired of hearing gentlemen denounced on this floor as unpatriotic because they will not agree to swell the expenditure already authorized by the present Congress. My good friend from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] says that he is tired of hearing the Navy denounced. I have never denounced the Navy; the officers of the Navy are gallant and patriotic men; but I stand here to say that it is the duty of Congress to enable the Government to build these ships and construct these guns in any portion of the country where it can be done cheapest and best—I care not whether it is in Pennsylvania or California or in any other State of the Union.

Now, the statement has gone abroad that we are paying the Bethlehem Company $150 more per ton for gun steel and armor than is being paid to the same company by the Russian Government.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I should like to know the gentleman's authority for that statement.

Mr. SAYERS. It is so charged; and let me read the apology coming from the Department. I do not think that it is true, but the charge has been made; and when a resolution went from the Senate to the Secretary of the Navy to inquire into the truth of this matter, what was the answer?

Another reason, and one which may have impelled the Bethlehem Iron Company to acquire its recent contract, even at a serious loss, is that a far greater loss would be experienced if it was found necessary to break up the organization, disperse the skilled labor, and close the works through lack of orders.

Here is a Department of the Government that should always bear in mind the interests of the Government in all its contracts attempting to justify the fact that we are paying a larger price for armor and gun steel than the Russian Government is paying to the very same parties—

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit me—

Mr. SAYERS. I am not denouncing the Bethlehem Company; I am not reflecting upon that company. Why, Mr. Chairman, I heard one of the most prominent gentlemen on this floor say once that there is no patriotism in time of peace; that it is only in time of war that citizens are patriotic, and that the only object and use of Government in time of peace, so far as individual citizens and particular localities are concerned, is to furnish as much revenue to the citizen and to the localities as possible. I deny the truth of any such proposition. No man can be justly denounced on this floor as unpatriotic who insists that the expenditures of this Government should be brought within its revenues in a time of peace. I deny that any man is not patriotic who says that this Government ought not to pay any more upon its contracts with its citizens than a foreign government does. I deny that any man is unpatriotic when he refuses to burden future Congresses in time of peace with appropriations for contracts which ought to be appropriated for by the Congress that authorizes them.

It has been an effort with me since I have been honored with the chairmanship of the Committee on Appropriations to so advise the House. I have said: "Pay up all outstanding contracts; authorize none that are to be paid for in the future, so that the next Congress may have it within its power to reduce the appropriations by forty million or fifty million dollars per annum.<sup>6</sup> If that Congress should do this, its action shall have my hearty approbation. I will join with those gentlemen in reducing the overgrown expenditures of our Government in time of peace.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I have, Mr. Chairman, ten minutes of the time remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. And I yield five minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER].

Mr. BOUTELLE. Before the gentleman from Iowa proceeds, will he allow me to ask a question of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. If it does not come out of my time, I will yield to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is there not plenty of time?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. No; the time has been limited.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maine may be permitted to ask a question, not to be taken out of the time allowed for the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the gentleman will have that privilege.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to bring out more plainly a fact to which the gentleman from Texas adverted with a great deal of emphasis during the course of his remarks a few moments ago, and that is with regard to the matter of these contracts. Do I understand the gentleman from Texas to state, or does he desire this committee to have the impression, that this bill imposes on the Government any contract whatever to purchase armor or material of any description at prices higher than they are furnished to any other nation in the world?

Mr. SAYERS. I did not say that it did.

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the gentleman did not say that it did I think it altogether likely that he may have left that impression on the minds of some of the members here by what he did say.

Mr. SAYERS. If it will satisfy the gentleman from Maine or any other gentleman on this floor, I will disclaim such an idea.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not mean to say that the gentleman intended to do that; but my idea was that that impression might have been created by what he did say, that the bill proposes to impose upon the Government of the United States certain contracts for the purchase of material for the construction of ships at a higher price than such supplies are furnished to other governments.

Mr. SAYERS. I will say to my friend this: That I did not charge it to be absolutely true that this Government is paying $150 a ton to the Bethlehem Company more than is charged to foreign governments; but what I did say was that such a statement had been made publicly, and a resolution was passed by the Senate calling upon the Secretary of the Navy for information on that point. His answer to that resolution I have already given to the committee.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Has the gentleman any apprehension of danger that the Secretary of the Navy will make any contract, under the operation of this bill, at other than proper rates, and in the interest of the Government of the United States? I do not think there is any danger—

Mr. SAYERS. Well, it is not necessary for me to answer that question.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is not the inference a reasonable one even if the statement to which the gentleman refers is true, and the Bethlehem Company, or any other company whose plant involves the expenditure of an immense amount of capital, has been enabled by later improvements to furnish material to foreign Governments or to any individuals at a cheaper rate now than formerly, that it can furnish such supplies to the United States Government at a lower rate, and that hereafter there will be, in contracts which may be made with such establishments, a decided advantage in favor of the government over the contracts that were made when these works started?

Mr. SAYERS. If my friend from Maine has that impression, will he agree with me to add a clause to the bill forbidding the Secretary of the Navy to enter into a contract for armor or armament with this company, or any other company, at a larger price than is paid by a foreign government for the same material furnished by such contractors?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I should not object to it myself, if such a provision were regarded as necessary.

Mr. SAYERS. Very well. I propose to offer an amendment of that kind.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER].

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to be put in the position of antagonizing my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. I agree with him perfectly, as I said at the outset of this debate, that we ought to make a reasonable provision to pay for the ships we are authorizing in this bill. I do not desire, either, to be put in the position of acrimonious antagonism to my friend, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I presume there is nobody in the House who has any disposition or purpose to impeach his patriotism, or even to criticize the sagacity with which he usually guards the Treasury of the United States.

There can be no better argument, however, adduced in favor of this bill than the fact that my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], not to speak of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON], who has furnished so large a part of the vocabulary of this debate up to this time—that these three gentlemen, with all the influence they properly exercise in this House, have not been able to disturb in any degree the purpose of the House to proceed with the building of these three battle ships. [Applause.]

Mr. SAYERS. Because the "combine" is too strong for us to fight.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will my friend from Iowa permit me a moment?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will my friend be kind enough to place his finger on any proposition or word said by me that antagonizes this bill except for what it does not contain?

Mr. DOLLIVER. So far as my friend from Illinois is concerned that certainly is true. But we have seen the struggle on the part of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the stubborn fight he has made on the items regarding the manning of these ships, the increase in the number of men necessary for that purpose.

Mr. SAYERS. That is correct.

Mr. DOLLIVER. And we have also seen his fight against the items for the repair of ships when they are rotting down at the yards; his fight against the appropriation for putting these ships in proper condition, when both the President and the Secretary are united in saying that the repairs are necessary.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Will my friend allow me a word?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. He ought, in justice to the gentleman from Illinois, to admit that it would have been better if the committee had made an appropriation of the money which is necessary, instead of leaving it in such a way that it will have to be provided for by future Congresses.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I have already admitted that, and I have done what I could to impress upon this House the fact that the Committee on Naval Affairs, as I believe, true to the habitual instinct of Democratic management, has proposed to load on future Congresses the expense of these improvements to the Navy, to which their judgment has yielded a ready assent.

Now, I wish to say another thing: My friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] speaks of the fact that this is a united country, and I know there is nothing in his heart that would suggest a spirit of sectional contention in a debate of this character. And yet we are not without evidence from time to time in this House that a spirit of sectionalism is growing up in the United States. Within a week I have heard on this floor a suggestion that the West, that the Mississippi Valley is alien in interest to the Eastern Seaboard, if not already hostile to it in its purposes and in its conditions of growth and prosperity.

Mr. BOEN. Is not that partly true?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I do not believe it is true at all, and I believe this House has no better means of refuting that mischievous nonsense than by a liberal provision for these great national objects that concern the whole people of the United States. I will say to my friend from Minnesota that after infinite sacrifices we are one people, brought together in the common bond of commercial and political unity, and what God in His providence has joined together we ought not in this House to allow demagogues to put asunder. [Applause.]

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised to hear, over and over again, a reiteration of the amount of money that is to be appropriated in the next Congress for the support of the Navy. I stated to this House, in the beginning of this debate, that this appropriation bill carried every dollar necessary to complete the construction of all the vessels now authorized by law.

Mr. SAYERS. Not at all. There is an item of $750,000—

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I stated to the House, and I stand by it, that this bill carries enough money to complete all the vessels at present authorized by law to be constructed. I maintain that proposition now. The Secretary of the Navy, in his annual report for the year 1894, says:

The estimates for this year for "Increase Navy" will be the last of the large annual amounts required for the building up of the new Navy, so far as the same has been authorized. It may therefore be stated that this is substantially the last payment on account of the vessels provided for by law. Unless, then, new constructions are authorized expenditures under this head will fall with great rapidity after the next fiscal year and thereafter entirely disappear from the annual appropriations. It is estimated that with the expenditure of not more than $750,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, the existing new Navy will have been entirely paid for. Thus it will be seen that the expenditures under "Increase Navy" will decrease at one bound from the amount asked for this year, $13,250,302, to $750,000, as above stated.

I also state that the next House can make the regular and proper appropriations to continue the work on these battle ships, and that their bill will be less than $20,000,000 for the support of the Navy, including the construction of the vessels authorized by this act.

I do not like for any gentleman to get up and appeal to the prejudices of any one section of this land as against another when we are considering a bill that is national in its character. I do not think it amounts to a row of pins whether we paid the Cramps $22,000,000 or 22 cents, or paid it to someone else. The answer is always complete, that we have the vessels which are the best of their class built anywhere in the world.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I have not the time, but I will yield.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I understand that there is between $400,000 and $500,000 under the head of "Construction and steam machinery" which will be applied in the next fiscal year to the construction of these new battle ships and torpedo boats.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. The sum of $513,000 is carried for the fiscal year 1895-96 to begin these vessels.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. And that will be sufficient for that period.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. That will be sufficient, so the Secretary of the Navy says.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I am glad to know that.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is in accordance with the Secretary's letter.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman says the Bethlehem Iron Works received between six and seven millions of dollars. The gentleman knows and this House knows that the Bethlehem Iron Works engaged in this enterprise at the suggestion of Secretary Whitney, and they have not yet received a dollar more than they have invested in their plant.

But while the gentleman was giving this information to the House, why did he not state to the country what had been expended in other localities? The sum of $9,254,000 has been expended on the Pacific Coast. In this connection I will insert the following statement, showing in detail the sums paid to various firms who have contracted for the vessels and the armor and armament therefor in accordance with law since June 30, 1884:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, February 19, 1895.

SIR: In reply to your telegram of this date I have the honor to inform you that since the 30th of June, 1884, there has been paid by this Department to the firms mentioned below the following sums of money:

Cramps	$22,629,132.81
Bethlehem	6,795,959.30
Carnegie	4,269,861.54
Union Iron Works	9,254,429.95
Columbian Iron Works	2,073,395.90
Bath Iron Works	1,611,487.47
Harrison Loring	1,030,633.19
N. F. Palmer & Co.	1,794,077.85
Richmond Locomotive Works	639,520.39
Samuel L. Moore & Sons Co.	307,694.34
Iowa Iron Works	80,640.00

Of the amount paid to the Bethlehem Iron Company, as stated in the Bureau's indorsement of yesterday, $2,346,056.86 was for gun forgings.

Very respectfully,

WM. MCADOO, Assistant Secretary.

Hon. J. F. C. TALBOTT,
House of Representatives.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the brief space of time left to me I again call upon my Democratic associates upon the floor of this House. Let us once again put our party before this country as it stood before the war. This is patriotic in us; it will be as patriotic as then. Our country is united; we are united for all time to come; and I claim to be as good and as patriotic a citizen as stands upon the floor of this House. Now, I appeal to my colleagues with whom I associate to stand by this legislation. The gentleman says, and he lays great stress upon the fact, that two Chinese battle ships were sunk. The answer to it, and it is complete, is that they were not sunk at Yalu River. They were the last remnant of the fleet left; but the answer to all that you can say is that the Japanese Government, with their experience in this war, immediately contracted for two battle ships in England.

As to the reference made by the gentleman from Texas, and in answer thereto, concerning the reasons which impelled the Bethlehem Iron Company to acquire its recent contract with the Russian Government, I append the whole communication from the Navy Department bearing upon that question:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 4, 1895.

SIR: In compliance with the resolution of the Senate dated the 28th ultimo, directing the Secretary of the Navy to transmit a statement showing the prices paid per ton for armor plates for vessels of the Navy, comparing the same with prices paid by other nations, and also with the prices paid or to be paid under recent contracts to American manufacturers for armor plates for other nations, I have the honor to transmit herewith a statement prepared by the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, which statement contains all the information afforded by the records and files of this Department on the subjects covered by the resolution.

I have had some conversation with representatives of the Bethlehem Iron Company respecting its recent contract with the Russian Government, but am unable to state at what prices the armor to which that contract relates is to be furnished.

Very respectfully,

H. A. HERBERT, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY, BUREAU OF ORDNANCE, Washington, D. C., February 1, 1895.

SIR: In compliance with the Senate resolution requesting information as to the prices paid for armor plates for vessels of the Navy, comparing the same with the prices paid by other nations, with special reference to the prices to be paid under recent contracts to American manufacturers, the following statement is submitted:

The first armor contract which was made with the Bethlehem Iron Company, on June 1, 1887, was for 6,702.6 tons of simple steel armor. It was graded into exhibits varying in price from $490 to $600 a ton, according to the difficulty of manufacture.

The report of the Secretary of the Navy for 1887 contains the following in relation to this contract:

"The contracts for armor and gun steel are made at prices within 25 per cent of the European price for the similar material, not greater than the difference in labor between the two countries, notwithstanding the heavy outlay for plant (estimated at $2,500,000) necessary to be made to undertake the contract."

The prices agreed upon for the armor and its appurtenances, bolts, etc., averaged $538.76 a ton.

The first delivery under this contract was made in August, 1891. In the meantime, on November 20, 1890, a contract was made on the same basis with the Carnegie Steel Company for 6,000 tons of simple steel armor, the first delivery of which was made in January, 1892. Upon the decision of the Department to adopt nickel-steel armor an additional compensation of $11.20 per ton was paid the armor contractors to cover the cost of the introduction of the nickel and the increased difficulty of machining. The nickel was furnished by the Government.

On February 28, 1893, a contract was made with the Carnegie Steel Company for 2,927.29 tons of nickel steel armor, and on March 1, 1893, a similar contract was made with the Bethlehem Iron Company for 3,562.24 tons of nickel-steel armor.

The armor in these later contracts was likewise graded into exhibits, those similar to the exhibits of the first contracts ranging in price from $500 to $575 a ton, including the cost of the introduction of nickel. Two new exhibits of special difficulty of manufacture were created, one of 101.5 tons at $725 a ton, and one of 122.5 tons at $800 a ton.

A separate contract was later made, in which the armor makers agreed to apply the Harvey process at a charge of $50.40 per ton for plates of and above 8 inches thickness; $78.40 per ton for plates 5 to 8 inches thick; $100.80 per ton for plates under 5 inches thick. In addition, the Harvey Steel Company was paid a royalty of $11.50 a ton.

The price for the principal part of nickel-steel armor for vessels of the Navy under contracts signed two years ago is therefore as follows:

Ordinary	$500.00 to $575.00
Special	600.00 to 725.00
Cost of Harvey process	61.00

The prices paid abroad for armor can not be positively stated. The information which the Department possesses comes from a variety of sources—newspaper clippings, conversations, and confidential statements. All of these lack the official confirmation only conveyed in a properly executed contract, such as that to which the Department was a party in the purchase of compound armor for the Miantonomoh. The average cost of that armor was $535 a ton, and was purchased from Sheffield, England.

It must be further remembered that foreign armor contractors furnish various grades of armor at different prices. In France, for example, under recent contracts, three different prices are paid for the same exhibit of armor, according to its quality. In the United States the contracts stipulate that the manufacturer shall make the most resisting and enduring armor that he can; he must furnish and maintain the most improved modern plant; finally, the requirements for acceptance are now in many respects far more severe than those abroad.

The nickel-steel armor made in this country contains 3.25 per cent nickel; that made abroad contains from 2 to 2.5 per cent. It follows that not only is the actual cost of the nickel 40 per cent less, but the manufacture is less expensive, so far as the greater ease of machining is concerned. In England very little nickel-steel armor is made.

The following table of prices of armor is submitted, with full reservation as to the accuracy of those asked by foreign makers:

Price of armor in the United States and abroad, 1894.

The Department has no information as to the prices to be paid American manufacturers under recent contracts for armor plates for other nations. It will be observed, however, that the bids of English and French manufacturers for the foreign trade is far below the prices paid them for armor intended for ships of their own nationality. This is susceptible of various explanations, the most natural of which is that the quality of the armor manufactured for foreign navies is inferior to that made for their own. The requirements for acceptance are not so severe, and the inspection is less thorough and exacting. Another reason, and one which may have impelled the Bethlehem Iron Company to acquire its recent contract even at a serious loss, is that a far greater loss would be experienced if it was found necessary to break up the organization, disperse the skilled labor, and close the works through lack of orders.

Respectfully,

W. F. SAMPSON,
Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I desire to offer an amendment, and I suppose amendments are in order to this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly, amendments are in order.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I desire to offer the following amendment, at the close of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that the vote had better be taken on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas first.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Very well. What is the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 45, line 9, after the word "contract," strike out the following language: "Three seagoing coast-line battle ships designed to carry the heaviest armor and most powerful ordnance upon a displacement of about 10,000 tons, to have the highest practicable speed for vessels of their class and to cost exclusive of armament not exceeding $4,000,000 each; and."

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The gentleman from Texas proposes to strike that out. If that is stricken out I will have to change my amendment, but I am perfectly content that the vote shall be taken on that first.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I did not catch the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. It has not been read yet.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. SAYERS; and the Chairman announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. SAYERS. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 43, yeas 121.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 47, at the end of line 2, insert the following: "And the sum of $22,000,000 is appropriated to carry out the provisions of this paragraph."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Division! I hope all patriotic gentlemen will support this amendment. [Laughter.]

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 79, yeas 90.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to act as tellers.

The committee again divided.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask to have the amendment read again.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Several members objected.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of no quorum. The yeas have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I offer another amendment, Mr. Chairman. It is the same as the other except that it strikes out the words "twenty-two" and inserts the word "five."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 47, line 2, after the word "Kearsarge," insert the following: "And the sum of $5,000,000 is appropriated to carry out the provisions of this paragraph."

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 64, yeas 99.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I think we had better have tellers and therefore I make the point of no quorum, merely to get the tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, yeas 126.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAYERS and Mr. CAMPBELL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from Texas to offer an amendment, and will afterwards recognize the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SAYERS. I move an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 18, page 47, insert the following proviso: "Provided, That no higher price shall be paid for armor or gun steel than is paid the contracting party for like armor and gun steel furnished private parties or other governments."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. CAMPBELL] for five minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to say anything upon the question under consideration, as I thought it proper that the able Committee on Naval Affairs should be permitted to take care of their own appropriation bill. But I find distinguished members of the House opposing this patriotic and meritorious measure, and, further than that, I happen to have the honor of representing the old shipbuilding interest of New York, that has built some of the most magnificent vessels that ever floated on the waters of the world. Therefore I beg leave to submit a few remarks.

The question of whether or no we should build battle ships is really the same as the question whether or no we should have a navy at all. There can be no doubt that the country as a whole, irrespective of party, favors a Navy suitable for our needs. There is also no doubt that our Navy is not yet what it should be. Some of the economists who admit the necessity for a navy, and a larger navy, believe that no new construction should be authorized now because of the condition of the Treasury. Everyone, however, who knows anything about naval matters and the construction of ships, knows that if large ships are authorized now they will not be well under way for eighteen months, and it will be two years before any large proportion of the total cost can be drawn from the Treasury. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Possibly the gentlemen who plead poverty are sufficiently good prophets to vote upon present pressing questions from knowledge of what the condition of the Treasury will be two years from now, but less gifted mortals must act according to their lights. [Applause.]

If no new vessels are authorized now, it will be fifteen or eighteen months before the next Congress will pass the naval appropriation bill, and the work of building up our Navy will be at a dead standstill for a year.

The committee has very properly recommended that battle ships be authorized now. Common sense of the commonest kind would seem to indicate this as the proper course. [Applause.] A modern navy is built both to fight and run away. But in strict accordance with the maxims of political economy, it is found best to apply the principle of division of labor. Battle ships are built to fight, and cruisers to run away. No disparagement is meant to the cruiser; it has useful functions, and if, in time of war, the interests of the country are best served by a cruiser running away, it is its duty to run as fast as possible. [Laughter and applause.]

We have now a navy composed nearly entirely of fast cruisers. What we need is a few fighting ships; ships that can stand in the gate and meet all comers. [Applause.] It is nonsense to say that cruisers can tackle battle ships. A cruiser, by a lucky accident, might sink a battle ship, just as a little man might get the best of a big man in a personal encounter; but common sense of the commonest kind tell us that the odds are in favor of the big man, and so it is with the battle ship and cruiser. [Laughter and applause.]

The fact that the Japanese cruisers have finally disposed of the two Chinese battle ships does not show that cruisers are preferable to battle ships for fighting, but simply that the Chinese are not sea fighters. The Chinese had two battle ships 15 years old, but they also had a lot of cruisers. The Japanese cruisers ate up the Chinese cruisers as fast as they could get at them, but they found the old battle ships hard nuts to crack, though the Chinese were too much dispirited to put out their ships when they caught fire, and fired mostly clay shell, which, nicely painted, polished, and stacked, had been passing inspection for some years.

If we are to have a navy to do our fighting as well as our running away, we must have battle ships; and there are not too many to authorize now. There is one point to which due attention should be given in this connection. Gentlemen speak of these battle ships as unwieldy monsters because they are of 10,000 tons displacement. That they are not unwieldy is shown by the preliminary trials of those now building. If they are monsters, what are foreign ships which they may be called upon to meet? Italy and England have battle ships which are 50 per cent larger, and France and Russia are close behind them. Yet it is commonly admitted that the 10,000-ton ships designed by American constructors and built by American mechanics are fair matches, individually, for these 15,000-ton foreigners. Instead of grumbling at the large size of our monsters we should congratulate ourselves that they are so small.

There are some gentlemen who say, "if we build these vessels, they will be obsolete by the time they are completed, and so we should wait until we can take advantage of the latest improvements." That was the policy adopted by us for many years after the war, until our Navy became the laughingstock of the world, and our seacoast cities were all at the mercy of Spain, Brazil, Chile, or almost any comer.

I presume that the ancestors of the gentlemen who advocate that policy did not, in the days of bows and arrows, fail to provide themselves with these useful weapons because gunpowder and repeating rifles were going to be invented. Had they done so we would not now be favored with the presence of these gentlemen. [Laughter and applause.] That policy, fully carried out, would result in our beginning to build up our Navy the afternoon of judgment day.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in connection with what I have already said, I want to add that we have at the head of this department of the Navy one of the best naval architects and mechanics in the world. I refer to Commodore Philip Hichborn and assistants, who designed our cruisers and who is to design these battle ships, and I say to you gentlemen, pass these appropriations and you can rest assured that they will be placed in safe hands and will be used to do credit and honor to the American Government, which we in part represent here. [Applause.]

Carry on the noble work so ably begun under the auspices of Hon. William C. Whitney while Secretary of the Navy, and so zealously promoted by the late Secretary, General Tracy, and by the present Secretary, Hon. Hilary A. Herbert, formerly the honored chairman of the House Committee on Naval Affairs, aided by his efficient and intelligent Assistant Secretary, Hon. William McAdoo.

I have no desire to take up more of the valuable time of this committee, but I have here an article from the New York Herald discussing this subject in an exhaustive manner, and also an editorial from the same paper of Monday, February 18, which I ask leave to have printed in the Record in connection with my remarks.

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The newspaper extracts above referred to are these:

BATTLE SHIPS AND THEIR GUNS—GREAT BRITAIN'S MEN-OF-WAR ARE LARGER THAN OURS, BUT NOT AS EFFICIENT—TYPE SHIPS CONTRASTED—WHEREIN OUR INDIANA CLASS ARE THE SUPERIORS OF ENGLAND'S LATEST DESIGNED VESSELS.

While the general opinion, not only in this country but abroad, is that the chief success of the United States in navy shipbuilding has been made in the development of the fast cruiser, it is important to note that the few battle ships we have laid down are the equals of anything afloat or likely to be put afloat for several years. Other nations have built larger vessels and have given them heavier guns than ours, but the United States battle ships of the Indiana class would probably defeat anything yet built or projected for other navies.

This extraordinary result has been attained chiefly by the excellence of the designs for the United States vessels, though superior material and workmanship have also contributed to it. That our ships have secured a fighting value equal to that of the best British battle ships on a much smaller displacement is conceded by English experts.

A BRITISH OPINION OF OUR SHIPS.

Thus Brassey's Naval Annual for 1894 says: "Accepting the conclusions that had been arrived at by those powers who had been forced to push on continually, the United States authorities at once adopted types possessing the general features of such vessels as were most approved; for example, our Royal Sovereign class—that is, the 1890 design. Profiting by drawings giving all the necessary details, and even employing men who had been engaged in England in working out the designs, it was found feasible to spring, without a single false step or disappointment, to the very front and to work forward so as to rival those who had offices and dock yards full of all that hardly bought experience had furnished. It was, obviously, feasible but not by any means easy to command success in the striking way in which it has been achieved.

THEY WAS—THEY WAS!

"The United States authorities are then to be congratulated, first, on the judgment that chose the line to be taken; and, next, on the constructive ability and energy that was (sic) displayed exactly in the most profitable way. It naturally follows, from what has been said, that anyone would search in vain in the American fleet for such types as were developed in the twenty years following the close of the war in 1865. No mastless seagoing Thunderer (nor Dreadnought, no Infexible (nor Italia, no Monarch (nor DuParre is to be found in the United States Navy. In one tremendous stride the United States constructors pass, with hardly an intermediate step, from the small coast-defense Manhattan, with her 2,100 tons displacement and 19-ton smooth-bore guns, to the modern ship with the powerful quick-fire armament and steel armor."

At Portsmouth the English recently put afloat the Majestic, whose twin, the Magnificent, was floated out of her construction dock at Chatham just before last Christmas, both vessels having been built with unsurpassed rapidity, as they were designed in 1893, and the Magnificent was floated one year and a day from the time work began upon her.

The Majestic represents England's latest idea in battle ships. Her size—15,000 tons displacement—is greater than that of any other war ship except the Italia and Lepanto, of the Italian navy, which have a displacement of 15,960 tons each.

TORPEDO TUBES GALORE.

Besides the guns hereafter mentioned the Majestic is fitted with four submerged torpedo tubes and one stern tube above water, all discharging the 13-inch Whitehead auto-mobile torpedo, which carries 190 pounds of gun cotton.

Her machinery is designed to develop 10,000 horse power under natural draft and 12,000 under "induced" draft. Instead of forcing air into the fire rooms, with no means of escape except through the furnaces, the fire rooms are left open and the air is sucked through the boiler tubes. She has twin screws, each 17 feet in diameter.

Each of her two steel masts will have two fighting tops. She will also carry powerful electric searchlights on each mast and on each extremity of a midship bridge.

The 12-inch guns, 40 calibers long, will be of the latest pattern of the Woolwich 46-ton wire wound type—somewhat similar to the Brown segmental tube wire wound gun of this country, but far inferior to it in strength and velocity giving power.

The Majestic's full complement of officers and men, while serving as a flagship, will be, the English newspapers say, 750 men—a rather unusual crew for even so large a ship.

COMPARED WITH OUR INDIANA CLASS.

In view of the progress of these great men-of-war toward completion, there is a natural revival of interest in this country in the battle ships of the United States Navy. The Herald has heretofore pointed out the elements of superiority of our cruisers over those of foreign navies, and has given the testimony of foreign experts in proof thereof. Similar superiority can be shown for the United States battle ships over those begun by the leading naval powers of Europe. Although the Indians class were designed about six years ago, they need not fear comparison with the latest and largest armor clads of the British navy—the Majestic class heretofore mentioned.

The leading characteristics of the two classes are herewith set forth.

	Displacement.	Length.	Beam.	Draught.	Speed.	Coal supply.	Armor (thickness in inches).
	Tons.	Feet.	Feet.	Feet.	Knots.	Tons.	Belt.	Turrets.	Elsewhere.
Indiana*	10,231	348	80.2	24	16	1,800	18	17	6 to 8
Majestic†	15,000	390	75	23	17½	1,800	9	14	6

Battery—* Four 13-inch, eight 8-inch, four 6-inch, twenty 6-pound, and four 1-pounder rapid firing.

† Four 12-inch, twelve 6 inch rapid firing, sixteen 12-pound, and twelve 3-pound rapid firing.

As in point of displacement the Majestic is nearly half again as large as the Indiana, it might have been expected that she would have a corresponding increase in fighting efficiency; but an examination of the details of the two ships brings to light no such difference.

AN EQUAL SUPPLY OF COAL.

Although the amount of coal carried is the same for each, the Indiana, owing to her lighter draft and less tonnage, would have a considerably longer radius of action; that is, she could go much further with one supply of coal.

The axes of the Majestic's 12-inch guns laid level are 27 feet above the water line, while the Indiana's 13-inch guns are carried only 18 feet above the water. This would give the former some advantage in a heavy seaway.

A calculated speed of 17½ knots is allowed to the Majestic, and only 16 knots to the Indiana, again some advantage to the British ship. It is known, however, that the Indiana's actual speed is more than 17 knots, her builders, the Messrs. Cramp, having always improved upon the calculated speed of the vessels built by them. It is also well known, on the other hand, that the British builders rarely equal the speed expected of their ships; hence, if the Majestic should reach her contract maximum, she would have less than a half knot better speed than the Indiana, a difference so slight as to be almost a negligible quantity in calculating the fighting value of the two ships.

THE INDIANA'S SUPERIOR ARMOR.

For protection the Majestic has a belt of harveized steel armor, 9 inches thick, while the Indiana's belt is 18 inches thick. It is true that the Majestic's belt covers 300 feet on each side, while the Indiana's belt covers less than two-thirds of her length; but the important fact concerning the two belts is that the Indiana's will keep out the projectiles of every gun aboard the Majestic, while the Indiana has at least 12 guns which can send their shells clear through the Majestic's belt.

Similarly, the Indiana's turrets of 17-inch armor will withstand the attacks of all the Majestic's pieces at an ordinary fighting range, but the Majestic's barbettes have only 14-inch armor, and the Indiana's 13-inch guns could disable the barbettes with two well-placed shots.

Around the Indiana's 8-inch guns is a protection of 8-inch armor, and 6-inch armor protects her 6-inch guns. The Majestic could penetrate the former with her 12-inch guns only. Evidently, so far as protection is concerned, the Indiana has great superiority over the Majestic.

FACTS ABOUT THE MAJESTIC'S GUNS.

Coming now to the chief element of fighting power, we find the Indiana's main battery greatly superior to the Majestic's. The Majestic's 12-inch guns throw projectiles weighing 714 pounds each with a muzzle velocity of 1,014 feet a second, giving a power at the moment of leaving the gun to penetrate 22.6 inches of wrought iron; a penetration of 20.6 inches at a distance of 1,000 yards, and of 18.8 inches at 2,000 yards. The penetration in steel would be about four-fifths of the foregoing figures, and in Harveyized steel not more than one-half. Each projectile thrown by her 6-inch rapid-fire guns weighs 100 pounds. It has a muzzle velocity of 2,500 feet a second and a muzzle penetration of 16.4 inches in wrought iron, equal to about 13.2 inches in steel; at 2,500 yards it would have a penetration in steel of about 5.7 inches.

Straight ahead or straight astern the Majestic can bring to bear two 12-inch guns and four 6-inch rapid-fire guns. These will deliver at one discharge 1,828 pounds of projectiles, having on leaving the muzzle an energy of 53,590 foot-tons.

On either beam the Majestic can bring to bear four 12-inch guns and six 6-inch rapid-fire guns, throwing a total weight of projectiles of 2,456 pounds, having a total muzzle energy of 98,524 foot-tons.

WHAT THE INDIANA'S GUNS ARE.

The Indiana's guns throw projectiles having the following weights and velocities: Four 13-inch guns; weight of projectile, 1,100 pounds; velocity, 2,100 foot-seconds; muzzle energy, 33,637 foot-tons; penetration in wrought iron at muzzle, 30.1 inches. Eight 8-inch guns; weight of projectile, 250 pounds; velocity, 2,150 foot-seconds; muzzle energy, 8,011 foot-tons; penetration, 12.7 inches. Four 6-inch guns; weight of projectile, 160 pounds; muzzle velocity, 2,150 foot-seconds; muzzle energy, 3,204 foot-tons; penetration, 13.7 inches.

The guns which the Indiana could fire straight ahead or straight astern would be two 13-inch and four 8-inch guns, giving for one discharge of each a total weight of projectiles of 3,200 pounds, and a total muzzle energy of 99,298 foot-tons.

At any point between 60 degrees forward of and 60 degrees abaft the beam the Indiana can concentrate the fire of four 13-inch, four 8-inch, and two 6-inch guns, giving for one discharge of each a total weight of projectiles of 5,600 pounds, and a total muzzle energy of 172,960 foot tons.

THE BATTERIES COMPARED.

The battery power of the two ships may best be compared by placing the figures in tabular form, thus:

	Straight ahead or astern.		On either beam.
	Weight of projectiles.	Muzzle energy.	Weight of projectiles.	Muzzle energy.
	Pounds.	Foot tons.	Pounds.	Foot tons.
Indiana .....	3,200	99,298	5,600	172,960
Majestic .....	1,824	53,596	3,456	98,534

Inasmuch as the Majestic's 6-inch guns are rapid firers they would be able to deliver their projectiles faster than from breech loaders that are not rapid firers, and this would add somewhat to her fighting efficiency as compared with the Indiana; but the latter's superiority in weight of metal and in the energy of the blows delivered is too great to be offset by the rapidity of fire of a few light guns.

The Majestic has some advantage in her secondary battery, consisting of sixteen 12-pounders and twelve 3-pounder rapid firers, against the Indiana's twenty 6-pounders and six 1-pounder rapid firers. The Majestic's 12-pounders would do greater execution on the unarmored parts of an enemy's ship than the Indiana's 6-pounders.

But the enormous excess of fire that the Indiana could deliver upon the Majestic as they approached each other "bow on" would go far toward deciding the action before the bulk of the Englishman's guns could be brought to bear; and, while the value of rapid firers should not be underrated, the deadly blows will be delivered by the big guns.

The splendid protection given to the Indiana's guns would go far to prevent the Majestic's rapid-fire guns from doing harm to the former's battery, and it would not be long ere the American's 8-inch and 6-inch guns would wreck everything outside the Englishman's barbettes. Besides, our 6-inch and 8-inch breech-loaders can easily be replaced by rapid firers and then the whole advantage, except that contained in the secondary battery, would be on the Indiana's side.

OTHER STRONG FEATURES.

Besides the points of advantage heretofore described the Indiana possesses features which, it is believed, are not found to the same extent in any other war ship. For instance, her 13-inch guns can be loaded at any point of train, since all the supply and loading accessories are revolved with the turrets. Hence, in action the loading and firing of these guns will go on uninterruptedly with their muzzles always turned toward the enemy. In the British turret-ship Hood, however, it is necessary to bring the heaviest guns to the fore-and-aft position in order to load them. If the ship, therefore, should be fighting an enemy ahead she would be obliged, after firing her 13.5-inch guns, to revolve the turrets 90 degrees, then reload and revolve them back again 90 degrees before resuming fire.

Not only would there be dangerous delay from this necessity to take a fixed position for loading, but there would be a great additional risk of injury to the guns. More than one-half the length of the Hood's guns is outside the turrets, and turning back and forth they would present a far larger target to the rapid-fire guns of her enemy than the Indiana's guns would, as the latter would be continuously pointed at her antagonist. A 6-pounder shell striking a 13.5-inch gun squarely on the chase would so indent it as to make a bulge on the inside bore, thereby making it impossible to fire a projectile out of it without blowing off the chase beyond the injury.

AN ADMIRABLE AMMUNITION SUPPLY.

Again, the Indiana's provision for supplying ammunition is exceptionally efficient. On the deck below the protective deck there is a broad, high, well-lighted passage on each side of the ship, extending from the base of the forward to that of the after turret. On going into action a sufficient supply of ammunition for the day would be whipped out of the main magazines and shell rooms and would be stowed in smaller magazines opening off these two wide passages, below the belt armor and protective deck. Each gun would have its own ammunition thus stored directly below it, and there would be no shifting of ammunition about below and no possible confusion in supplying it. No more perfect arrangement for dealing with ammunition has ever been devised.

TO OFFSET WATER-LINE INJURIES.

Among other valuable defensive qualities the Indiana has a 6-foot belt of cellulose all around the water line, forward and abaft of her belt armor, so that no amount of damage that could be inflicted by gun fire in an ordinary battle could open the way to such an amount of water as would imperil her stability. Even though innumerable holes were shot through her 'twixt wind and water the cellulose, at the first touch of water, would so swell as to fill up every aperture, and the inflow of the sea would at once be checked. Even were this obstacle overcome, however, and the water were permitted to fill her forward compartments, the water-tight doors would shut it off from entering the rest of the ship, and she would still have not only enough buoyancy, but enough stability to float.

[N. Y. Herald, Monday, February 18, 1895.]

NEEDED INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

If the House of Representatives should fail to-day to provide for the battle ships recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, by the Naval Committee, and by all other persons well informed as to the Navy's needs, its failure will be cause for national regret. Whatever else may be postponed to a more convenient season, the construction of armored ships can not safely be delayed.

The Herald yesterday showed by detailed comparison that even the latest productions of the British shipyards are not superior to the United States battle ships designed nearly six years ago. If Congress will now authorize the building of three more such vessels we shall close this century as we did the preceding one—possessing a nucleus of the finest fleet afloat. It was just about this time one hundred years ago that the frigates of the Constitution class were laid down. If Congress at that time had shown itself unpatriotic and parsimonious by refusing the appropriation for those ships our navy might never have won the glorious victories of Truxton, Stewart, Hull, and Bainbridge.

To be certain of keeping the peace it is often necessary to possess the means of making an attack. Twelve millions spent on battle ships now might easily save us from a war that would cost a thousand millions. No Representative who votes for these ships will ever have cause to regret his vote, though he may be sorry he did not advocate building twice as many.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with these few observations, I thank the committee for the kindness they have extended to me on this occasion in giving me an opportunity to express my views on this important subject, because I believe that the safety of this country is in being always prepared for war, even in time of peace. [Renewed applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What is the amendment?

The amendment was again read as above.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words on that amendment. I want to congratulate the House and the country upon this wonderful demonstration on the part of the gentleman from Texas of the progress we have made here in the space of less than ten years. About six or seven years ago I had the honor, on the floor of this House, to offer an amendment to a pending appropriation bill which authorized and directed the Secretary of the Navy to purchase armor and gun materials for our ships. The amendment which I offered struck out all authorization for the purchase of any part of the material abroad, and provided that the Secretary of the Navy should be authorized and required to purchase this material of domestic manufacture if it could be obtained at a reasonable price and within a reasonable time. At that time it was utterly impossible to obtain such materials on this continent—we had no steel plant here that could forge the great ingots—and in moving to strike out the provision in the bill, I stated that rather than see a dozen or twenty battle ships put afloat within the next ten years thereafter, a large portion of the materials of which we had been compelled to buy abroad, I would prefer to wait without the ships for ten or fifteen years if, by any action of Congress, we could secure at the end of that time the establishment of a great plant somewhere in this country that would make us independent of the world in the production of materials for our ships.

In the Committee of the Whole that amendment prevailed; but it was a Democratic House, and when we got into the House my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], who was then on the Committee on Naval Affairs, and other gentlemen rallied their forces and defeated the amendment. The bill went from here to the Senate with the original provision, which made it substantially obligatory upon the Secretary of the Navy to buy in Europe all of the hollow steel shafting for our ships, all of the armor forgings for our ships, and all of the great steel forgings for our guns. But the agitation having been started, it was taken up at the other end of the Capitol, it was taken up by the press, and, as a result of the agitation on this floor in behalf of the emancipation of our Government from an intolerable dependence upon the great steel forgers of Europe, a measure was formulated and enacted into law by which the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy were authorized to call for bids for $10,000,000 worth of heavy steel forgings for armor and for guns from any corporation or company that would establish a plant on United States soil and guarantee, in bonds, to begin delivery within a certain time.

When the question was pending it was stated upon this floor that fifteen years would be an impossible time within which to accomplish the desired result. The measure was enacted and the proposition went out to our people. A bid was made by the Bethlehem Company, to which reference has been made on the floor to-day, and within a few years of that time—years ago—that great corporation had established in Bethlehem, Pa., not only one of the greatest, but incomparably the greatest steel-forging plant in the world. So, during the last four, five, or six years, instead of being absolutely dependent upon foreign governments or foreign manufacturers for these primary materials for our ships, we have been obtaining them from the hands of our own people, and now every ton, every pound of armor that goes into one of our ironclads, every forging that is turned into a great gun at our gun factory here in Washington is made from ore dug from American soil, heated in an American forge, and fashioned by the brawny right arms of American workmen. [Applause.]

Mr. SICKLES. We make them for Europe, too.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask indulgence for two or three minutes more, as this is an important question.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOUTELLE. This is the most striking picture in the history of American progress in the last generation. It is a new Declaration of Independence; for just as much as it is essential that a nation shall be able to maintain its own defense by its own arms, its own ships, its own weapons, it is essential that we shall be able to provide the weapons, to provide the ships, and to furnish the materials of which they shall be constructed.

To-day, as the condition which confronted me on this floor ten years ago comes back to me with the effect of a dream, the contrast is almost indescribable. Only those few years ago gentlemen arose on the one side and on the other with scorn and jibe and ridicule on their lips at the bare suggestion that we should have steel works capable of handling these monster forgings required for our ships of war. To-day, Mr. Chairman, neither the great Whitworth works, in England, nor those at Creusot, in France, nor the great Krupp works, in Germany, possess such ponderous machinery as is now forging the great armor plates that are to form the bulwark of the defense of the people of the United States upon the sea. And signaling that, I am delighted to find that we have already reached that point of independence which provoked such incredulity only a few years ago, so that no longer does any gentleman even on the Democratic side question the ability of our own people to furnish the material for our own ships; but we have reached a point where a distinguished Democratic Representative wants to proclaim to the world that we are now able to furnish this material for the world and to provide that we shall furnish it as cheaply to our own Government as we will furnish it to any other nation on the globe. I am glad that the gentleman from Texas thus recognizes that we have reached that point. It is a magnificent demonstration of what the building up of the Navy of the United States has accomplished for the industrial emancipation of the American people. [Applause.]

[Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. The committee accept that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. DURBOROW. I move to amend by adding at the end of the bill the paragraph which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

COLUMBIAN MUSEUM, CHICAGO.

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he hereby is, authorized to transfer to the trustees of the Columbian Museum of Chicago the reproductions of the caravels of Columbus, the Santa Maria, Nina, and Pinta, which were exhibited at the World's Columbian Exposition.

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to address myself to the pending amendment, but I take this opportunity of putting in the RECORD a communication which I find the Committee on Naval Affairs has received from the Secretary of the Navy and which, I believe, will remove from the minds of many members any doubts they may have had as to the advisability of voting for these battle ships. Many of us have hesitated in regard to that proposition on account of the idea that the Government is not in a condition now to contract any such heavy expense, and will not be for a year or two to come. This letter from the Secretary of the Navy which I send to the Clerk to be read shows that between this time and the 1st of July, 1896, there will be but $513,000 expended on account of this expenditure for battle ships.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, December 18, 1894.

SIR: In response to the verbal request of the committee I have the honor to state that, if the appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, contains a provision authorizing the building of three battle ships and three torpedo boats, the total estimates required for that fiscal year for these vessels, under "Increase of the Navy," will be as follows:

Construction and steam machinery ..... $463,200
Armament ..... 50,000

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully,

H. A. HERBERT, Secretary.

Hon. JACOB A. GEISSENHAINER,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
House of Representatives.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBOROW].

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. The Committee on Naval Affairs does not object to that amendment. We are very glad to have the Government get rid of those caravels and let the city of Chicago bear all expense hereafter connected with them.

The amendment of Mr. DURBOROW was agreed to.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I ask unanimous consent to return to page 45 of the bill for the purpose of inserting after the word "one," in line 19, the word "hundred," so that the language will read "torpedo boats of from 100 to 300 tons each."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SICKLES. I ask unanimous consent to return to page 13 of the bill for the purpose of adopting the amendment which I send to the desk.

Insert after the word "dollars," in line 7 of page 13:
"Provided, however, That no expenditure shall be made for the maintenance of labor-employment boards from the contingent fund or other fund until an appropriation shall be provided by law for such boards."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to return to the portion of the bill he has indicated for the purpose of offering this amendment.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I must object.

The CHAIRMAN. The reading of the bill is now concluded.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8685) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments and with the recommendation that the bill pass as amended.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I demand the previous question on the amendments and on the bill to its passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following motion to recommit the bill, with instructions, to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 8685) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes, be recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs, with instructions to report the same back forthwith, amended as follows:

On page 45, in lines 9 to 14 inclusive, strike out so much as authorizes the construction, by contract, of three seagoing coast-line battle ships, designed to carry the heaviest armor and most powerful ordnance upon a displacement of about 10,000 tons, to have the highest practicable speed for vessels of their class, and to cost, exclusive of armament, not exceeding $4,000,000 each.

Mr. SAYERS. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAYERS and Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland were appointed tellers at the desk.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 67, nays 202, answered "present" 0, not voting 79; as follows:

So the motion to recommit was rejected.
The following pairs were announced:

For the rest of the day:

Mr. COOPER of Texas with Mr. BELDEN.

Mr. BURNES with Mr. HEINER of Pennsylvania.

On this question.

Mr. WASHINGTON with Mr. COOMBS.

On this vote:

Mr. ENGLISH of New Jersey with Mr. EDMUNDS.

Mr. LESTER with Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. BYNUM with Mr. HOPKINS of Pennsylvania.

Mr. TRACEY. My colleagues, Mr. COOMBS and Mr. QUIGG, are absent, paired. If present they would vote in favor of the construction of the battle ships.

Mr. GEISSENHAINER. I desire to say the same for my colleague, Dr. ENGLISH, who is paired for the battle ships.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the passage of the bill.
The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the joint resolution (H. Res. 209) entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver condemned cannon to Asher Gaylord Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Plymouth, Pa., and to Eckley B. Cox Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Freeland, Pa.," the Clerk of the House be authorized and directed to enroll the title thereof so as to read as follows:

"Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver condemned cannon to Asher Gaylord Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Plymouth, Pa.; to William H. Tarbee Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of McGrawville, N. Y.; to the Eckley B. Cox Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Freeland, Pa.; and to the R. Carpenter Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Chelsea, Mich."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment the bill (H. R. 9499) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River in the county of Dakota, in the State of Nebraska, and in the city of Sioux City, in the county of Woodbury, in the State of Iowa, asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendment, and had appointed Mr. GORMAN, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. FRYE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 6750) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Yellowstone River in the county of Dawson, State of Montana.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I call up for present consideration the conference report on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

Mr. BROWN. Before that, Mr. Speaker, I gave notice on yesterday that I would ask the House to-day to consider the election contest of Williams vs. Settle, from North Carolina. The consideration of this case is urged upon me from all sides. It has been upon the Calendar for quite a long time, and the House ought to take it up and dispose of it, one way or the other.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. The consideration of this report, I think, will not occupy any considerable length of time.

Mr. BROWN. How much?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Not perhaps over half an hour.

The SPEAKER. The only way the gentleman from Indiana can antagonize the gentleman from Kentucky is to raise the question of consideration.

Mr. BROWN. I have just had a conversation with the gentleman from Kentucky, and he thinks that it will not take more than half an hour to complete the consideration of this report.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I think not more than that.

Mr. BROWN. My inclination is not to antagonize the gentleman from Kentucky if there is reasonable ground to believe that he can get through in time.

Mr. BUNN. In that connection, Mr. Speaker, representing the contestant in this matter, I want to ask the House to agree that this case shall follow immediately after the conference report; and I would like also to ask that we agree on the time now. It is satisfactory to all connected with the case that two hours' debate shall be allowed on each side. We have already discussed the matter with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and others having important measures on hand, and that time is entirely satisfactory to them. I hope, therefore, we may make an agreement now, that immediately after the conference report is disposed of the House will proceed to consider the election contest, and that the debate be limited to two hours on a side.

Mr. DALZELL. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky calls up a conference report which is a partial agreement. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 824) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 15.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14, and agree to the same.

On amendment numbered 5, the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

JAMES B. McCREARY,
CHAS. E. HOOKER,
ROBERT E. HITT,

Managers on the part of the House.

JO. C. S. BLACKBURN,
CALVIN S. BRICE,
EUGENE HALE,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement of the House conferees.

The statement was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 824) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, submit the following written statement in explanation of the action taken by the conference:

The Senate receded from its amendment to pay J. W. Pepper, United States consul at Milan, $9.65; R. W. Hemick, United States consul at Geneva, $24.12; Alton Angier, United States consul at Rheims, $38.70; A. H. Lowrie, commercial agent at Freiburg, $10.75; A. J. Bensusan, vice-consul at Cadiz, $5, being expenses incurred by order of the Department of State at the request of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the United States Senate in making investigation into the consumption and production of cotton in their respective consular districts, and Thomas E. Henan, consul at Odessa, for loss of salary occasioned by his absence under orders of the Department of State, in investigating cotton culture in Asiatic Russia, his report thereon having been furnished by the said Department to the said committee, $526.90.

The House agreed to the following amendments of the Senate:

The allowance of an annual salary of $2,000 to the consul at Zanzibar. Zanzibar is now the chief market of the world for the supply of ivory, gum copal, and cloves. The population of the island is estimated at 300,000. The nearest consulate to Zanzibar is at Mozambique, 700 miles away. The consul at Zanzibar has judicial powers, and is often called upon to preside as judge of the consular court. For years the United States had a consul and a vice-consul at Zanzibar, and the reestablishment of this consulate is recommended by the Department of State.

The allowance for the clerks at Bradford is increased to $1,800. It appears that $2,500 per year was allowed some time ago, and it was shown that there is more work in connection with this office now than there has ever been. This consulate in the last three years, during which time business has been dull, has reported to the United States Treasury fees amounting to about $50,000.

Erzerum, in Armenia, was increased from $1,500 to $2,000.

For the execution of the obligations of the United States and the protection of the interest and property of the United States in the Samoan Islands, under existing treaty with the Government of said islands and with the Governments of Germany and Great Britain, $6,000, to be expended under the direction of the President.

The salaries of envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Switzerland and Portugal, at $7,500 each, which is in accordance with the amounts allowed in the United States statutes.

JAMES B. McCREARY,
CHAS. E. HOOKER,
ROBERT E. HITT.

On the Senate amendment authorizing the President to contract for the entire work of laying a telegraphic cable between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands, to be owned and operated by the United States Government, and appropriating $500,000 as part of the cost of such cable, the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the first question will be upon agreeing to the report, which is a partial agreement.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before that is done I should like to inquire whether there are any points of disagreement except as to the cable.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the Senate added three or four amendments to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill as it passed the House. The committee of conference agreed to all the amendments except one, and that one is the amendment providing for an appropriation to aid in the construction of a submarine cable to the Hawaiian Islands. The report does not embrace that amendment, but it does embrace the other amendments. So that the committee of conference were enabled to agree on every amendment proposed by the Senate except two. The Senate receded from one, and the remaining one is the one I referred to, appropriating money for the submarine cable to Hawaii. I shall therefore move the adoption of the report, and then I shall ask the House to insist upon its disagreement to the amendment to which I have referred.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before that is done, Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky what was done in conference with various salaries that were increased by the Senate. Have the conferees agreed to the increase?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. There were not "various salaries increased." There were two.

Mr. DINGLEY. What was done with those two?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I have just explained; they were agreed to.

Mr. REED. What were they?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. The first one was the establishment of a consulate at Zanzibar. We had a consul at Zanzibar for many years. For some reason, which I am not able to explain, the consulate was not continued. Upon the recommendation of the Secretary of State we reestablished the consulate at Zanzibar. There is no other consulate within 700 miles of that point. It is a very important place, and the consul is given $2,000. The other increase was authorized by a statute which has been on the statute books for twenty-five or thirty years, and that is the increase of the salaries of the minister to Switzerland and the minister to Portugal. The committee of conference believed that, as the minister to the Argentine Republic and the minister to Chile received annual salaries each of $10,000, and as other ministers in that class were receiving the amounts provided for in the United States statutes as annual salaries, we could see no reason why the ministers to Switzerland and Portugal should not have the amount allowed by statute.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What was the increase?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. One thousand dollars.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Was not that increase as to Portugal attempted in the House and voted down?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. No, it was put on by the Senate.

Mr. REED. Did the Senate agree to all the increases of salary which the House proposed?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. The House, if I remember correctly, only proposed one increase, and that was very slight. The diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, as it left the House, was almost an exact copy of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill as it passed last year.

Mr. REED. But you maintained all the increases which were made last year, did you not, including those that were given on account of the politeness of the Belgian minister to the members of the monetary conference?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. There were very few increases last year.

Mr. REED. But you maintained them all, did you not?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I think the increases that were made last year were necessary and proper, and, of course, they were continued.

Mr. REED. They were retained, and the Senate agreed to all you made, and you have agreed to all that they made?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. We did not agree to all the amendments of the Senate, as the report will show.

Mr. REED. With our bonds selling 15 below par, you still agreed to them all?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I was not aware that we were discussing the bond question.

Mr. REED. Incidentally, you know, the question of how much money you have to borrow and the price you have to pay for it has something to do with the salaries which you pay your servants.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. We have plenty of money to pay our indebtedness.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is there anything in the bill to keep up the parity?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I move the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the amendment which is in issue between the two Houses.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I yield a moment to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT].

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I omitted, before the bill was finally disposed of, to ask unanimous consent that gentlemen having remarks they desire to print in the RECORD on the naval appropriation bill may have permission to do so, as the time for debate was so short.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the amendment in issue between the two Houses on the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 8, after line 25, insert:

"The President is hereby authorized to contract for the entire work of laying a telegraphic cable between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands and to direct the prosecution of such work whenever such a contract shall be made, and as a part of the cost of such cable the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated, said cable to be owned and operated by the United States Government."

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. SICKLES. I hope the House will not insist upon its disagreement; and I demand the yeas and nays on that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky has the floor.

Mr. SICKLES. I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. When the gentleman from Kentucky yields the floor the Chair will recognize gentlemen.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make an inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HITT. Would I not have the right to make a motion which has precedence of the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky—that the House recede from its disagreement?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman when the gentleman from Kentucky yields the floor.

Mr. HITT. I move, then, that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky has the floor on the motion which he has made. The Chair will recognize the gentleman, of course, whenever the gentleman from Kentucky yields the floor.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I will yield to let the gentleman make his motion.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Ah, but, Mr. Speaker, is not a motion that will bring the two Houses together the motion which has precedence?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly; but that does not take the gentleman from Kentucky off the floor. The gentleman is entitled to the floor. After he yields the floor the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HITT. I do not wish to take the gentleman from Kentucky off the floor in debating his motion.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I yield for the gentleman to make his motion.

Mr. HITT. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman to make that motion.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives should insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment, which is as follows:

The President is hereby authorized to contract for the entire work of laying a telegraphic cable between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands and to direct the prosecution of such work whenever such a contract shall be made, and as a part of the cost of such cable the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated, said cable to be owned and operated by the United States Government.

I am opposed to that amendment. It will be observed that the Senate amendment seeks to put the Government in the business of building, owning, and operating telegraph lines. Our Government has never yet been in that business. This is a departure from the usages we have adhered to for a century. There are today nine submarine cable lines connecting the United States with foreign countries. Every one of those cable lines was built by private subscription. Not one dollar has ever yet been given by this Government for the construction of submarine telegraph lines. If we are now to embark in the construction and operation of a submarine telegraph line to Hawaii, then we may also build a submarine telegraph line to Samoa, to Japan, to China, and other countries of the world. If we are to embark in the business of building submarine lines of telegraph we should also build overland telegraphs to Guatemala, or to Buenos Ayres in the Argentine Republic. If our Government should build and own telegraphs, why not railroads, and if railroads, why should not our Government own and operate mines and manufactories? The limit of the proposed policy can hardly be defined.

I am opposed to this new policy. I believe that the Senate amendment should be voted down. I believe that it should be condemned. I believe it should be defeated by the House of Representatives of the United States. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, the amendment of the Senate is a sugar-coated and carefully disguised proposition, but when it is properly scrutinized it means not only an appropriation of $500,000 at present, but of $2,500,000 in the future to build the telegraphic cable to the Hawaiian Islands.

In the past we have had subsidies on land and we have had subsidies on the sea, and now it is proposed that we shall have a subsidy under the sea. [Laughter.] Republican Congresses have granted subsidies to railroad corporations by donating to them millions of acres of the public lands and indorsing millions of dollars of railroad bonds. They have granted subsidies to ship-owners. They have granted large bounties to manufacturers under a generous protective tariff system; but, Mr. Speaker, no party has ever gone so far as it is now proposed to go, for the proposition now is that this Government for the first time in the history of our Republic shall embark in the business of building telegraphs, which must lead to the building of railroads also. But that is not all. In the eagerness of the Senate to put this amendment upon this bill the usual safeguards which go with every measure for the construction of a telegraph line or of a railroad have been omitted. There is nothing in this amendment providing for the time when this line shall be commenced or when it shall be finished.

Mr. COCKRELL. Did not the gentleman a few years ago vote for an appropriation of $85,000 to survey a railroad line down into Central America?

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, my answer to the gentleman is that the Pan-American Congress made an agreement that there should be a survey made to ascertain if it was practicable to build a line of railroad to connect the United States with Central and South America. Two appropriations were made by Congress under that agreement.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not by this Congress.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. By the Congress of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; but by the Fifty-first Congress.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. Two appropriations of $85,000 each were made by Congress as our part of the expense of that survey, and after the work was nearly finished and the United States was thoroughly committed to it by having made two appropriations, and when under the provisions of the agreement in the Pan-American Congress our country and each country in Central and South America was to pay $1,000 for every million of its inhabitants, the United States Government was bound to stand by the agreement made. I voted for it. We were honorably bound, and I believe it was right for us to pay our part of the expense of what was called a preliminary survey to ascertain if a railroad could be built to connect the United States with Central and South America. Our country was not asked to build and operate a railroad or to aid with money in the construction of a railroad.

I will say also to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COCKRELL] that the Senate amendment does not provide for a survey. I suppose the gentleman voted for the appropriation of $25,000 in the naval appropriation bill which passed in a preceding session of Congress, to pay for careful soundings to be made between San Francisco, Cal., and Honolulu to ascertain the practicability of laying a cable line between those two points.

But, Mr. Speaker, I was about to say when I was interrupted by the gentleman from Texas that, while this is an amendment of only six lines, it will lead, before we get through, to the appropriation of $3,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States to build this submarine cable line. There is nothing in the amendment which defines when the work shall begin or when it shall be completed. There is nothing in it which requires that there shall be a board of directors or other officers to look after the work and to make a report to the President or to the Congress of the United States. There is nothing in it which requires that the work shall be completed as soon as practicable, or that the telegraph line, when completed, shall be managed effectively. There is nothing in it which limits the amount of expenditure in any way whatever.

In the haste to draw this amendment and put it upon this bill—an amendment was not in order according to the rules of the Senate; an appropriation which, in my opinion, is not authorized or warranted by the Constitution of the United States—I say in the haste to draw this amendment and put it upon this bill the usual safeguards have not been thrown around it.

Mr. Speaker, it is said we should construct this submarine cable because it will improve our commerce with Hawaii. There is no country on earth that has been so costly to us as the little country of Hawaii.

In 1876 we made a treaty with that country by which we allowed her to send into the United States, free of duty, many articles, but the principal articles were sugar and rice, and we have already lost, because of allowing Hawaii to ship sugar and rice free to this country, $56,000,000. From 1876 down to this time—I have the figures before me—Hawaii has cost us, in consequence of that reciprocity treaty, $56,000,000. Yet it is now proposed that we should expend $3,000,000 more to construct a telegraphic cable. Why should we build this cable? Are we justified in departing from all the usages of the past and incurring this enormous expense?

The advocates of the appropriation say it will give us the commerce of the Hawaiian Islands. We have the commerce of that country now, and it is costing us about three millions per annum. A few persons in Hawaii have made millions of dollars on account of the privileges we extended under the reciprocity treaty; but the admission of sugar free of duty from the Hawaiian Islands did not cheapen the price of sugar to the people of the United States.

Another argument relied on by the advocates of this appropriation for the Hawaiian cable is that if we do not speedily build it Great Britain will build a cable line from Canada to the Hawaiian Islands. This is the same old threat which has become too common in the American Congress, and it is unworthy of the gentlemen who make it. Let Great Britain take care of her affairs—we are amply able to care for ours. I read from the treaty of 1884, Article II, which is as follows:

His Majesty, the King of the Hawaiian Islands, grants to the United States the exclusive right to enter the harbor of Pearl River in the island of Oahu and to establish and maintain there a coaling and repair station for the use of vessels of the United States; and to that end the United States may improve the entrance to said harbor and do all other things needful to the purposes aforesaid.

Under this treaty the authority is clearly granted to construct a submarine cable to the Pearl River Harbor, and this harbor is only a few miles from Honolulu, and soon enterprising business men of the United States and Hawaii will build the cable line as other submarine cable lines have been built which now connect the commercial centers of the United States with the commercial centers of other countries.

The Hawaiian Islands are 2,000 miles from San Francisco. They are not on the direct line from the United States to any important place on the globe. The straightest and shortest line from San Francisco to Japan and China runs over 2,000 miles north of the Hawaiian Islands, and the shortest line from San Francisco to New Zealand runs nearly 1,000 miles south of them. The line to Australia is the nearest and is over 500 miles south of the Hawaiian Islands. It has been claimed that we will need this submarine cable in time of war.

This claim is too remote. We have no prospect of war, and I hope all submarine cables will have time to wear out before we have another war; but if we have a war with any foreign power a cable 2,000 miles long could be easily cut, and I can not understand how we could get news from Hawaii that would be beneficial when we were at war with any of the great countries of the world. The Hawaiian Islands do not furnish even good coaling stations, and there is no coal there, and we will have to transport coal there if we establish a coaling station. It would be much more convenient and profitable to establish a coaling station on one of our Aleutian Islands south of Bering Sea rather than to have a coaling station at Pearl River Harbor. The Aleutian Islands are said to be within 100 miles of the shortest line between the United States and Hongkong.

In all Administrations from Washington to Cleveland our Government has always refused to do that which is now provided for in the Senate amendment. I can not believe that a time-tried and time-honored rule will now be violated and our Government build and own and operate a telegraphic cable.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to see this submarine cable constructed in the way that nine other submarine cables have been constructed. The enterprise and business energy of the capitalists of our country and the capitalists of the Hawaiian Islands will soon furnish a submarine cable to the Hawaiian Islands.

We now have before the Committee on Foreign Affairs (and the subcommittee has authorized me to report it favorably) a bill for the construction of a submarine cable from San Francisco by way of Hawaii to Japan. Admiral Irwin, William Alvord, William H. Diamond, Alfred S. Hartwell, John D. Spreckels, and a number of other men of wealth and enterprise have asked Congress to incorporate them under the name of the International Cable Company, with authority to build a submarine cable line from San Francisco by way of Hawaii to Japan. These men will construct the submarine cable line to the Hawaiian Islands and to Japan when they are incorporated and authorized to do so by the Congress of the United States.

I hope the House of Representatives will insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment. This is no time for a departure from the usages to which we have adhered for a century. This is not the time for our Government to embark in the business of constructing and operating telegraph lines or railroads. I read with some interest a statement made by one of the Senators from Nebraska, published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in which he said that he thanked the advocates of the Hawaiian cable amendment for their concessions to the controverted doctrine of the Populists.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very important question. It is one in which I think every member of this House should take an interest. The time has not come when we should depart from the position we have taken in the past. There is no necessity for this telegraph line to Hawaii. There is no emergency that justifies the construction of a telegraph line to Hawaii according to the plan proposed. There is no commerce that demands it. There is nothing that demands it. And I ask this House to vote down the motion to recede and accept my motion to insist upon our disagreement to the Senate amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. HITT obtained the floor.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] yields to me that I may ask a single question of the gentleman from Kentucky. I understood the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to state, among other negative reasons against this cable, that we have no commerce with Hawaii—

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I did not say that. I said we have no commerce that demands it. We have commerce with Hawaii.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Now, will the gentleman be kind enough to indicate any other port on the globe with which we had so much commerce during the last fiscal year as we had with the port of Honolulu?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Yes; England.

Mr. BOUTELLE. England is not a port, although I believe I did hear once that Europe was one of the principal cities of Liverpool. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I refer, of course, to Southampton and Liverpool.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will make my question more specific. Of course we all understand that these ocean steamers, flying like shuttlecocks to and fro, carrying passengers, pile up a great amount of tonnage.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I do not yield for a speech, but for a question.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask the gentleman whether he can name a port on the civilized globe to-day at which during the last year the American people have entered and cleared as large an amount of legitimate trading tonnage as they have at Honolulu?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. My answer to the gentleman is this: He intimates that we are doing a large business with Honolulu now; he says, which I deny, the largest done with any port. Yet we have no telegraphic communication with that port; we do this business without a telegraphic line.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But that is not an answer to the question. Mr. SNODGRASS. The gentleman from Maine seems to have this matter on the brain.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Well, I can not yield to the gentleman from Maine any longer.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] is the gentleman who is doing the yielding, and he will yield to me long enough to say that if the gentleman will examine the reports for the last fiscal year he will find that there is no port, either civilized or uncivilized, which has had such a large amount of American tonnage to enter and clear in legitimate business as the port of Honolulu—

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. If the gentleman will examine the last reports he will withdraw that statement.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I speak of American tonnage. Now, Mr. Speaker, I prefer to have a submarine cable to a subterranean diplomacy with Hawaii.

But I append a table in support of my statement:

Comparative statement of the number of American vessels and the amount of tonnage arriving at the principal seaports of the world for the year ending June 30, 1894.*

Port.	Number of vessels.	Tonnage arriving.
Antwerp .....	10	45,024

Yokohama (Kanagawa) .....	65	+165,074

* Compiled from statistics in the Bureau of Navigation.

† The amount of tonnage is augmented at these three ports by regular lines of American steamers. At Liverpool by the Ohio and Indiana, running regularly between that port and Philadelphia; at Southampton by the steamships New York and Paris; at Yokohama by four large steamships of the Pacific Mail Steamship Line.

Statement of the nationality, number, and aggregate tonnage of vessels arriving at the ports of the Hawaiian Islands for the year ending December 31, 1893. (From the Annual Report of the Hawaiian Collector of General Customs.)

Nationality.	Number of vessels.	Aggregate tonnage.
American .....	298	181,817
Hawaiian .....	* 23	15,750
British .....	58	+111,635
German .....	5	5,063
Japanese .....	4	7,167
Other nationalities .....	2	2,245

* Owned almost entirely by Americans.

† The greater part of this tonnage represents calling steamships of trans-Pacific lines; those of the Canadian Pacific Company, running between Vancouver and Yokohama; the Occidental and Oriental, between San Francisco and the same port, and a chartered British steamer in the Oceanic Line, from San Francisco to Sydney, New South Wales.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois to move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to protest at the first word against the assumption of the gentleman from Kentucky that the proposition to build a submarine cable to the Hawaiian Islands is either a Republican or a Democratic measure. There are some questions that appeal to a higher sentiment than mere partisanship.

This proposition was put into the bill by the joint action and opinion of a large majority of patriotic men in another branch of the National Legislature; and no word was heard in the debate there—a debate of high merit and wide range and well worth reading—of partisan appeal or recrimination. It is not a project for Republicans to assume or Democrats to assume as theirs; it is not a question involving politics in any sense of the word, although it has been recommended by the President of the United States in two messages—

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I deny it, and call on the gentleman for proof. The President of the United States—

Mr. HITT. I will furnish the gentleman the proof.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. The President of the United States has not recommended it, but—

Mr. HITT. If the gentleman will wait he will have ample opportunity to make a denial after the proofs are submitted. It was urged upon the House when the measure for a submarine cable to Hawaii was proposed in 1891—and the suggestion came from the other side—that instead of granting a subsidy to aid in the construction of the cable, as then proposed, it should be done by direct act of the Government, just as is proposed in the pending amendment to this appropriation bill.

The gentleman from Kentucky mentions a bill now pending which has been recently introduced, authorizing the construction of this cable by private enterprise. Do not be misled by that. No man ever pretended, either here or elsewhere, that this cable project was at this time a profitable investment for capital.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. HITT. Not now.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I only wanted to say that that bill was introduced by Mr. STONE of Pennsylvania on your side. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HITT. I do not admit, Mr. Speaker, that there is any "side" to this question except the side of Americans against influences hostile to American interests. [Applause.]

There have been various projects, coming on one after the other for many, many years, by private individuals and corporations to get charters, concessions, and franchises for this work, but always with the same ultimate view as the last one; that is, to be ready to take possession of the ground and then to get the advantages of such subsidies as this Government or any other government might grant to aid in building the line. The gentleman from Kentucky spoke of an eminent officer of our Navy—Admiral Irwin—who is named as a corporator in this last bill now pending. I saw him at the door of this Hall myself, and he told me then that he and his associates had no thought of proposing a project to contravene the measure adopted by the Senate and now before us.

In the course of the conversation I said to him, "Do you not know as a matter of fact that there is little prospect of immediate profit in such a cable; that it must be done on the broader principle of promoting national interests, and not on the mere cent per cent for individual investors' gain?" He understood that, but he said when the cable was built to Honolulu by the United States they would connect there with their line to Japan, for which they expected aid, perhaps one to China, one to the French possessions, the Tahiti Islands, and perhaps one to New Zealand and Australia. All these lines will no doubt be subsidized heavily, and the admiral's company will have the advantages of this and the connection through from Honolulu to the United States.

It is not a new thing to hear talk of building a Hawaiian cable by private enterprise. Ever since Belknap made the deep-sea soundings in 1874 this has been agitated—so many interests have been eager for a cable. Leland Stanford was on the first bill which was presented as one of the incorporators. He represented, as is well known, large capital. In 1877 Audley Coote, an Englishman, got a charter or concession for this work and a grant from the Hawaiian Government with the promise of a subsidy, but the English would not aid unless it made an exclusive cable right to the American coast.

They understood then, as they do to-day, that the most important matter was exclusive government control by one government, and that the connection by cable with these distant islands meant political advantage and not fixed return in dollars and cents. Cyrus W. Field took hold of it in this country, but when it was found that no subsidy could be obtained from the Government the work was given up.

Then there was a company formed at Honolulu in 1889, and they were to have half a million dollars from that Government, but that Government could not pay it. They worked for a while at a scheme of selling bonds to be guaranteed by the Hawaiian Government and the United States, and they tried for aid from the British Government, but could do nothing, and it dropped. General Hartwell was here in 1890 and 1891, and many of the members now in this Hall were members then, I suppose, when the Hartwell proposition for a subsidy was discussed here and voted down by the House because of the aversion which American Representatives and our people have to the subsidy system.

But in that debate there was not one word uttered against the proposition that the American Government and the American people ought to be connected with that island Government, which, more than any other spot of earth outside of our boundaries, is now part of our commercial system and becoming part of our future political system. [Applause.]

That subsidy was refused by a vote of this House in 1891. The vote I believe was 86 to 136.

It was asserted then that the cost of this cable would be nearly $4,000,000. The lowest figure I saw was $3,700,000 in the estimates, but there was no accurate information within reach at that time.

What did the House do? What did Congress do? The proposition for a subsidy to that company was voted down. But that Congress passed a provision appropriating money to immediately begin the survey of the route—

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I know my friend desires to represent the facts. The sum of $25,000 had been appropriated before that, and I referred to it in a speech that I made, which I now have before me.

Mr. HITT. That survey had not been made.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. The survey had not been made, but the $25,000 had been appropriated, before you, when you were chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, brought in a diplomatic and consular bill with an amendment to it seeking a subsidy in order to construct the submarine telegraph lines which a Republican House of Representatives voted down.

Mr. HITT. The gentleman can never rise above party or refrain from speaking of Republicans and Democrats. We were Americans, and we did not want—

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. And you voted it down because you were Americans.

Mr. HITT. And we voted it down because the American people do not like a subsidy; but not even you had the hardihood then to oppose any reasonable proposition for connecting this country with the Hawaiian Islands.

That survey was made. The Albatross and the Thetis took five or six hundred soundings. A path 300 miles wide was examined, and a full and favorable report was made. I have the volume before me, showing the facility with which this cable can be constructed from our coast to Honolulu. Here we at last have accurate data. The estimates made upon them are that it will cost about ten or twelve hundred dollars per mile for the 2,100 miles. Allowing for some margin, for such works always overrun the estimates, it will cost, say, about two million and a half of dollars.

Now, that sum of $2,500,000 will not be invested in this cable by any man or any body of men who have had business sense enough to make $2,500,000. It will not be done by private capital.

Last summer there sat at Ottawa a colonial conference of British statesmen from England, from Australia, the Cape of Good Hope, from Canada, to consider this whole question of improving communication between the different parts of the British Empire, the promotion of commerce, and the establishment of telegraphic cable lines. They examined this Hawaiian line most carefully. This was the line they discussed more than any other one, and the report made then by Mr. Sandford Fleming, of the Canada foreign office, was that though the cable would develop a great increase of commerce, yet in the mere matter of profit to be received from payment for messages it would require considerable time before it was self-sustaining, and the figures, most carefully prepared, which he submitted showed that it would probably be self-supporting at the end of about seven years.

Now, how can it be built except by the Government? It will not be done by private capital. The general benefit that commerce would receive might be vast; the political, naval, and military advantages might be inestimable, but all that would not help the private investor if he did not get dividends on his money.

But immediately comes into every man's mind the thought which the gentleman has just expressed: "Why should our Government for the first time build a cable outside of the country?" Are we to enter upon it as a system? Why construct a cable to the Hawaiian Islands?

The reason is very plain. Our relations with those islands are wholly different from our relations with any other part of the globe. In 1875, following up a policy which has been outlined by our statesmen for fifty years, we finally made the well-known treaty of reciprocity that absolutely incorporated the Hawaiian Islands into the commercial system of the United States. Now look at the result of it. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOULET] has just mentioned the striking fact that in the port of Honolulu we had more tonnage of American ships in the last fiscal year than we had in any other port in the world, unless, possibly, including calling steamers, you except Southampton and Yokohama, but more than at Liverpool.

Why, the trade of the Hawaiian Islands is not only incorporated in our commercial system by the treaty, but Americans own it. American enterprise and American capital taken there dominate all other interests. In the city of Honolulu, which contains one-fourth of the population of that Republic, a great part of the wealth of the place, the business, the living forces of the city, are purely American. Outside of the city American citizens own the greater portion of the land, the plantations and farms. The census report shows that the total valuation of these lands is $36,000,000, and of these American citizens own $21,700,000, and Americans, Hawaiian-born, own $4,400,000 more, so that we own there $26,000,000 out of the $36,000,000 of landed property.

Our commerce going there is not only more than that of any country, not only more than all other countries, but three times more than that of all other countries put together. That is our share of the imports there. As to their exports, the simple fact is, all the exports come to the United States. Twelve million dollars—

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him there?

Mr. HITT. I do not know of any occasion for an interruption.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I want to show you the $56,000,000 we have paid since 1876 for that commerce.

Mr. HITT. I shall state that in a moment. We remitted duties on their products by the treaty of 1875, and in turn secured the exclusion of all other powers from their soil. We by treaty obtained substantial control of the islands. Now, I appeal to any public man, when we have paid $56,000,000 in remitted duties for the exclusive right and control politically of that part of the world's surface, so immeasurably valuable to our national interests and future, to know if he will now oppose a measure like this, providing for a closer communication with that people by telegraph. Shall we drive them to ask us to annul the treaty that has cost so much to us; force them unwillingly to listen to British proposals to build a cable? You can not have this cable laid except by a government. The Government of the United States or the Government of England must pay for it. Now, are we going to be the dog in the manger, refuse to do it ourselves, and fall back upon the treaty and say nobody else shall do it? Is there not some broader statesmanship, some patriotism of a higher range than that in this House?

Mr. Speaker, I spoke of a sentiment broader than that the gentleman had appealed to. I take from a message sent to this House by President Cleveland a few words, terse and to the point, covering the question of the benefits of the treaty and the need of Congress building a cable. On the 3d of December, 1886, he cites the reasons for close and quick connection with the Hawaiian Islands, all of which are tenfold stronger to-day than at that time. The old treaty of 1875 was drawing near the end of its term and he wished it renewed, and he said:

I express my unhesitating conviction that the intimacy of our relations with Hawaii should be emphasized. As a result of the reciprocity treaty of 1875 those islands, on the highway of Oriental and Australasian traffic, are virtually an outpost of American commerce and a stepping-stone to the growing trade of the Pacific.

There is an utterance of a man who was broader than his party.

The Polynesian Island groups—

There are 1,100 islands in those groups—have been so absorbed by other and more powerful Governments that the Hawaiian Islands are left almost alone in the enjoyment of their autonomy, which it is important for us should be preserved.

If he sent the message to-day he could leave out the word "almost."

Our treaty is now terminable on one year's notice, but propositions to abrogate it would be, in my judgment, most ill-advised. The paramount influence we have there acquired, once relinquished could only with difficulty be regained, and a valuable ground of vantage for ourselves might be converted into a stronghold for our commercial competitors.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. HITT. Can not the gentleman let the President speak for one moment? Do not interfere with the President. Wait until I have read what Mr. Cleveland said.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I want to ask the gentleman if he can find anything in that message of the President in which he said a word about building, owning, and operating a cable.

Mr. HITT—

I earnestly recommend—

Says President Cleveland—

I earnestly recommend that the existing treaty stipulations be extended for a further term of seven years. A recently signed treaty to this end is now before the Senate.

And then he adds these words, which I trust the confusion raised a moment ago as I was about to read them will not prevent gentlemen from listening to:

The importance of telegraphic communication between those islands and the United States should not be overlooked.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Who wrote that?

Mr. HITT. Grover Cleveland in 1886. [Applause.] Two years later Great Britain took possession of the twelve Gilbert Islands, just south of the Hawaiian group; three of the Ellice group, five of the Enderbury group, three of the Union group, and six others, including Fanning Island, the very island that is now designated as a station. How fast they were swept up!

In 1899 they took possession of three others. In 1891 they took possession of Johnston Island. In 1892 they took possession of Gardiner group, the closest to the Hawaiian group. Two of those islands, Palmyra and Johnston, are claimed by the Hawaiian Government as within their jurisdiction, and have been since 1854, but the British are holding them simply by the right of might. These two islands are claimed by the Hawaiian Government to-day, while we, with this warning of the President before us, are refusing to facilitate communication with Hawaii, refusing to carry out in spirit that treaty of wise statesmanship which secured for us so much. Even after the President made this appeal Congress in 1886 did nothing, and when the next Congress opened he repeated it in stronger words. Let me read again from President Cleveland's utterances on this subject in his message of December 3, 1888:

Proclamation was duly made on the 9th of November, 1887, of the conventional extensions of the treaty of June 3, 1875, with Hawaii under which relations of such special and beneficent intercourse have been created. In the vast field of Oriental commerce now unfolded from our Pacific borders no feature presents stronger recommendations for Congressional action than the establishment of communication by submarine telegraph with Honolulu.

Here we have the President recommending for Congressional action the establishment of telegraphic communication by submarine cable with Honolulu.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would prefer a submarine cable to a subterranean diplomacy with Hawaii. [Laughter.]

Mr. HITT. Now, Mr. Speaker, that is a good remark; but Mr. Cleveland, when he is in this vein, talks even better than the gentleman from Maine, and in what I am now reading he is at his best. He says further:

The geographical position of the Hawaiian group in relation to our Pacific States creates a natural interdependency and mutuality of interest which our present treaties were intended to foster, and which make close communication a logical and commercial necessity.

And, Mr. Speaker, this cable is a logical and commercial necessity to the development of our national interests and their protection.

Now, the gentleman from Kentucky spoke of the authority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and, with resounding voice, he emphasized the importance of their recommendations. The Committee on Foreign Affairs in the Fifty-first Congress sent into this House a unanimous report by Mr. Chipman, the eloquent gentleman who used to represent the city of Detroit, and whose seat on that side of the House was a center of influence, and deservedly so from his great authority with those who knew him. I will not insult the memory of that honorable man by saying that he was in this matter a Democrat, for on such a question as this he was not a Democrat, he was an American; and I may say the same of many more.

But let me read a word or two from the views of the Committee on Foreign Affairs as expressed by Mr. Chipman:

Your committee regard the establishment of the submarine cable telegraph between San Francisco and Hawaii as a measure of high national concern, which will be an efficient factor not only in securing Hawaiian autonomy so long as the interests of the United States require, and a firm and permanent American influence in the Hawaiian Islands, but in securing for our country the commerce of the Pacific Ocean and the trade of the Australasian continent.

There spoke the representative not of a district but of a nation.

We also think that unless such action as is proposed to be taken, the danger is great that a large proportion of that trade and commerce will be diverted to Canada and England.

Mr. Speaker, the report of the consul of the United States at Honolulu, Mr. Mills, just published, January 30, 1895, confirms this prophecy, and describes in detail these very facts, and shows the diversion of that trade to Canada which is now going on.

Let me now read a word from what the Secretary of the Navy at that time said. I will not take time to read more than a line or two. The Secretary said:

I regard a submarine cable connecting the United States and the Hawaiian Islands as a matter of national importance, and that its advantages would in many respects be great and direct.

A MEMBER. Who was that?

Mr. HITT. That was Secretary Tracy.

Now, an officer of the Navy was before our committee, the same officer who was in charge of the vessels which made the survey in 1892, and he stated with technical knowledge and with singular clearness the vast advantage of a cable to our naval power; and he explained at length (gentlemen who care to read it will find his statement on page 5) the immense value of a vessel at the end of a cable, where, as he says, it may do the work not merely of one but we know not how many vessels.

What do you build the Navy for? For what did you vote those thirty-odd millions to-day in the naval appropriation bill? To have a ship at the very point where the fight is to take place. All the rest of the Navy is useless at such a moment. British statesmen understand this. We have on our eastern border the Bermuda Islands. There is no trade or commerce, no general interest of Great Britain that can make her need vast fortifications and depots and a cable line there; yet she has them. You can not send a cable message to Bermuda except by permission and under the view of a British officer if they choose to exercise the control.

They can in case of war instantly cut off all knowledge in the United States of what takes place there. They can at any moment order a body of armed vessels to steam for and attack any part of our coast; and they would burst upon us in forty-eight hours, no human soul in our Republic knowing it until the destroying shells fell like hail upon our undefended people. That is the value of a cable in making ships effective, in putting them in the very place where the struggle takes place. And all the Navy counts for nothing in the dreadful hour of battle, save the one that is in the thickest of the fight. Shall we not learn from this example confronting and threatening our eastern doors?

Now, this line to Hawaii takes us to the stepping-stone, as the President says, to the halfway house, to the central point, to the radiating focus of the great Pacific Ocean, the theater of the mighty events of the future. Other lines will undoubtedly be built there; but we should possess, and our Government should control absolutely, the line that runs from our border to the Hawaiian Islands; no other nation should hold that line.

On this question British statesmen can teach us. They have been in charge of great interests that concern many colonies, a vast empire, a prodigious commerce that has distanced all others. When they were in consultation at Ottawa on this very question that we are discussing, Sir Charles Mills, of the Cape of Good Hope, said that though you might cut a cable it was wise on the part of Great Britain to build cables to all her points of strategic importance, for the cable can not be cut in time of peace; and "if a cable only serves to enable a communication of the declaration of war to be made it will well repay the cost of its construction and maintenance."

He gives an example—it is too long for me to read, but it is given in this Blue Book which the British Government has published—showing how by one cable dispatch which he managed to get through to Cape of Good Hope he put the governor-general and the colonists there on the qui vive in the alarm of 1896, at the time of the scare about a Russian war. They immediately gathered up their old guns and repaired their fortifications. They had right in their presence two powerful Russian corvettes that could have blown them all to pieces.

Now, that conference at Ottawa went over this question with a great deal of care. Their proceedings make a large volume, containing a vast body of information on this subject carefully collected. They were called, as I said, to consider the extension of commerce and telegraphic communication and closer intercolonial connections. One point they dwell upon all through in the discussions and in the final resolutions which are the result of the conference. I read from the fourth resolution, showing how they kept in mind exclusive control of the cable for naval, military, and national interests:

That the home Government be requested to take immediate steps to secure neutral landing ground on some one of the Hawaiian Islands, in order that the cable may remain permanently under British control.

The Earl of Jersey, who was there representing the Imperial Government, reported back to the home Government in these words:

It was the decided wish of the conference that the cable should if possible pass entirely through British territory whenever it touches islands on the route. It was believed that the practical exigencies of the case from an engineering point of view might render it desirable that the cable might run from Vancouver to Hawaii, as this stretch is materially shorter than that to Fanning Island. In that case it would be desirable, if possible, that the exclusive use of one of the Hawaiian Islands should be obtained, in order that the cable might be as far as possible free from foreign control.

Listen to this, American legislators! A British statesman, urging the construction of a cable to what is virtually an American colony, advises the home Government that their colonial councillors were all determined upon one inexorable condition, that the cable should be wholly under British control, for political, naval, and military purposes. Yet we Americans are here saying that for us to establish a cable there would be a departure from the customs of one hundred years—that Jefferson never built a submarine cable! [Laughter.]

I spoke of broader views than those of the hour or of the day—of broader views than mere partisan views. Let me read the words of Mr. Forrest, the representative from Queensland, one of the English rulers of a large part of that great continent of the southeast. He says:

For my own part I do not concur with the idea that we can only look at these matters from the standpoint of an immediate advantage to ourselves—I mean pecuniary advantage. In the ordinary conduct of business which depends chiefly upon individual effort, each man must conduct his business so that he may receive an immediate return, because men must get their daily bread. But we ought not to look for immediate returns in national affairs, and particularly in conducting the affairs of the great British Empire.

Are we such little creatures that we must have smaller rules for the governance of our conduct in the affairs of the great Republic of the United States? Are we not of as good blood as our ancestors or far kindred, and can we not look as far as they? He says:

Had the great and far-seeing statesmen of England paused to count the cost, we might never have procured colonial possessions, and we are here to-day because they did not count the cost, and because, without looking for immediate returns—to use the words of Lord Rosebery—"they pegged out claims for futurity." * * * The mere question of the Vancouver cable paying to start with should not for a moment prevent us from advocating its construction.

But I will not read further. I have mentioned all of the essential facts; that this line, then proposed, was not expected to be and could not possibly be self-sustaining for at least seven years; and yet they went on and determined to do their utmost to have the cable constructed, letting each Government represented pay its share, without reference to the question of whether it would be a paying investment at the time or not. I will not speak of the development of commerce. There is a great deal here that is much better said than I could say it in advocacy of this principle as a doctrine and a system. But to show how much more than justice these gentlemen have done us in supposing that we had more sagacity than has been expressed on the floor of the House in this debate let me read just this single sentence from Mr. McKenzie Bowell, Canadian minister of trade and commerce:

Foreign nations whose interests are inimical to British interests—

At whom was he looking? Manifestly at us—recognize the necessity of a Pacific cable. France, on the one hand, and the United States, on the other, have already moved in the direction of establishing one, and unless prompt action be taken to establish a British cable across the Pacific the connection may be formed under foreign commerce, to the detriment of all British interests, and especially would this be the case in the event of international difficulties arising.

I know economic souls may say, have said heretofore on this floor, "Why can you not send a telegram by cable, after the British build it?" Well, you might for some short trip get passage by some influences, in case there was no other way, on a British man-of-war. But do you intend to rely on that? You can get transportation for our officers on the Cunarders at any time in peace. But it is not the custom of our people to abandon the construction of ships of war because they can get cheaper transportation for officers or hope to catch a ride on a British frigate. All that will fail you in time of war, just when most wanted. So of this cable. It will not be built by Great Britain except for her own benefit and under her exclusive control.

These islands are to-day virtually under our protectorate; we can and will prevent any other country from intervening. These gentlemen in that conference wanted one of the islands and went there for that purpose, representing British interests. Sandford Fleming, of the foreign office of Canada, and Mr. Mercer, of the British office, were appointed to negotiate for an island for this cable. They set about their work with great activity. They went to the Hawaiian Islands and made every effort to get the exclusive right and jurisdiction over one of the islands—Necker Island, Frigate Shoals Islands, or Bird Island, or some other of the uninhabited islands.

They drew up a form of contract and proposed to the Hawaiian Government that in view of the construction of the cable they should have this concession, the right to land on one of these uninhabited islands. The Hawaiians were eager to have a cable—that is only natural and human. Every soul there desired cable communication; and the English proposed that they should have Necker Island or some other ceded to them; that they should be given the whole jurisdiction and to be exempt from taxation as long as they chose to keep up the cable, which means a perpetual concession.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Why did not the British take one of their own islands? They have five or six hundred in that region.

Mr. HITT. Well, I will answer that question, though perhaps I might wait a moment.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Take your own time.

Mr. HITT. The Hawaiian Islands are the proper place in every way for the termination of the line. There are no others in the region which are available except through a long stretch of ocean, Fanning Island being the nearest, some 1,200 miles distant, farther south. They have seized it. They have it now.

To show the importance that statesmen upon the other side put upon this feature of the exclusive political control of the islands, they all declared in the conference, and have since declared, that they will have that control or they will not build by the Sandwich Islands at all, but will build to Fanning Island.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Do you not think—

Mr. HITT. Wait a moment. On last Saturday Hon. Sandford Fleming, of the Canadian foreign office, announced an important fact. He had heard from Washington. Through the press, the public men, the thousand forms of expression of sentiment, he had heard from the American people, and discovered that the treaty of 1875 could not be undone. Our Senate and our people never would suffer it, never would abandon our exclusive rights in Hawaii, the exclusion of all other countries from the Sandwich Islands. So it was left for British statesmen to decide where they would build their cable. I read the following press dispatch:

OTTAWA, ONTARIO, February 16.

The analysis made by Sandford Fleming of tenders received for the construction of the Pacific cable—

They had propositions from six construction companies—has been sent to the different colonial governments. For route No. 1, which seems to be the one which will have to be adopted—

There is an answer to the question of the gentleman from New York—in the event of arrangements falling through with Hawaii for a landing place on the Hawaiian Archipelago, the lowest offer, including maintenance for three years, is £1,517,000.

That amounts to $7,585,000. But an Englishman has courage. That does not make him shrink, when he comes to count the prodigious interests of a great empire, weighed by men of spirit so great that they have met and mastered events during the last two centuries and surpassed all other peoples.

This is for a speed capacity of 12 words per minute. The route in question is entirely within British territory, and would run from Vancouver Island to Fanning Island, Fiji, Norfolk Island, with branches from Norfolk Island to New Zealand and New South Wales.

Then it proceeds to the adjustment of details. That is the way in which this question is dealt with by those statesmen.

I want to read a word by Sir Henry Wrixon, who represented the government of Victoria, in Australia, at the Ottawa conference:

If we can have a cable through the Pacific, touching at Necker Island, which might be leased from the Hawaiian Government, we might be able to have the cable entirely on British soil, and entirely in seas under the command of the British navy.

For what were you trying to build up a navy when this afternoon you voted for four battle ships which will cost over $30,000,000 if you refuse $500,000 to make the Navy effective in a sea where to-day the British naval force in one part of that sea is seven times as great as the American and in another part of that sea five times as great as the American, measured by the respective guns of the squadrons?

The words which I now quote are by Sir Henry Wrixon on the importance of having this cable on British soil and under command of the British navy:

We take that to be a matter of the greatest importance, and we are perfectly willing to contribute our quota.

That man spoke from a colony thousands of miles away, but his patriotism was wider than his colony.

Mr. Speaker, I have talked longer than I intended, but the subject appeals to all that is best in the motives of those charged with the conduct of public affairs.

I have mentioned the commercial value of this enterprise to our country generally, and have imperfectly pointed out its prodigious, its measureless value as an instrument of war and an instrument of political power among nations. In the progress of events, in the developing commerce of the West we ought at least to have some share, and an increasing share. Instead of that, we have been losing, and losing rapidly, of late. Once we had a great volume of the Chinese trade. We had lines of steamers in China running from Shanghai 1,200 miles up those rivers.

The merchants of New York and San Francisco prosecuted an extensive and flourishing China business. It is gone. It has been taken from us, chiefly by the English. The subsidy to the English line of steamers that runs from Vancouver to Australia has so stimulated that line and trade that our commerce there has fallen off in comparison with that of British merchants in the Hawaiian Islands, where those vessels touch. Owing to the fact that the line running from Vancouver to Hawaii is heavily subsidized, the British can carry freight from Canada in competition with the products of the American firms in San Francisco cheaper than the American ships can carry them and sell them. They can charge the loss to ship's account. They are able to do this when they are repaid by the subsidy.

I referred to Consul-General Mills's report of January 30, 1895, where he gives in that month a list of goods such as formerly came from the United States, but are now replaced and superseded by the goods coming from Canada by the Vancouver, Canadian and Australian line, which is fast encroaching on the American line to San Francisco.

He mentions 8,160 barrels of lime, 6,000 barrels of flour, 535 tons of bran, 250 tons of rolled barley, etc., a long list of staple products that should have come from the United States, as heretofore, but now, owing to the breaking down of these lines of steamers and the additional facilities given to our rivals, are coming from other countries. So that trade is passing from us.

There is an American steamer line now running from San Francisco to Australia. They did receive an Australian subsidy, but recently, owing to the powerful pressure put upon them, the colonial government transferred the subsidy to the Vancouver line. The result is that the American line, in the report last made, had to admit the fact that during the last twelve months that line of steamers has not paid expenses. Is it any wonder that the Democrats, from California at least, have no partisan feeling here? They are not afraid of the company of Republicans in rising up to help their State's claim to a share of the vast commerce of the Pacific.

I have not dwelt upon the general considerations that will rise in every patriotic breast at such a proposition for the advancement of our country's interests and power, the approval that arises to the lips of every American, the glow in our hearts when we contemplate an extension of the prosperity of our country, the enlargement of its power, the enhancement of its commercial interests, its glory, and its honor. These are things that I do not believe it necessary to recall to the consciences of the members of this House. I only ask that this proposition be considered here by you as it was in another branch of Congress, in a spirit above all narrow partisan consideration, and where it passed by a strong majority of men of all parties.

Take the judgment of the President, which I have read, uttered in his calmest hour, when he stated reasons that to-day have still greater force than at the time they were first addressed to you, reasons which appeal to every American here. He there foresees the forces which will control largely the future of the Republic upon the vast western world. I hope to see our Government a great naval power. I voted for the bill which just passed this House heartily and cheerfully, though that is a bloody fashion of protecting and encouraging enterprise. I would rather do it by those peaceful, those powerful, those restless arms and instrumentalities of knowledge and commerce, benefiting all, those advances of civilization which bless both those who attack and those who are overcome.

I trust to see our commerce and our influence extending and widening westward and our flag in the same majestic march. We have voted guns to slay our enemies. Add a cable to quicken intelligence and bring peace and make us friends everywhere—bring the isles to our doors. Let us never forget our friends, our brothers, our children, the best blood of our people, who in the islands of the west have changed darkness to light, made a wilderness blossom, and built up a Republic, who if they have a fault, and have suffered for it, it is that they loved us not wisely but too well. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I suppose there are other gentlemen here who desire to address the House on this subject, and therefore I move that the House adjourn. But I would like to agree with my friend from Illinois as to the time to close debate on this question. I am informed the gentleman in charge of the general appropriation bill is very anxious to go on to-morrow, and there is also an election case pressing. I would like to have some agreement as to the length of time we shall consume to-morrow.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I must say that I have been so indulged by the House that I feel a very great hesitation in suggesting a time. I have spoken about an hour, and I do not know how much time other gentlemen may desire. I know of two gentlemen who would like to address the House, and I would ask the gentleman to let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I want to say that the election case is pressing, and the general deficiency bill is pressing, and I hope we can agree on time. Will an hour on each side be enough?

Mr. HITT. I will say that I do not know. Perhaps we will not use an hour, but I would not like to make any agreement. I have spoken so long myself that I would not like to make any agreement that might cut others off.

Mr. STORER. I will state to the chairman of the committee that, supposing I should have an hour, I have appropriated a part of my time to other gentlemen, and I should not be willing to enter into any agreement which did not allow me to have the hour.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I would suggest to gentlemen that Congress by law expires on the 4th day of March, which is but a few days off, and the deficiency bill must be passed. I gave way to the gentleman from Kentucky, understanding that we could get rid of this question and the contested-election case. An hour on each side has already been taken.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I only made a short statement myself, not over thirty minutes, and I have said to gentlemen that I did not expect to take much time in this debate. I shall not take much time, but some of the other gentlemen on the committee, the gentlemen from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER and Mr. MONEY], wish to make short speeches.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can test the sense of the House by demanding the previous question after a reasonable time.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I would ask the gentleman if an hour on each side would not be sufficient.

Mr. HITT. I can not make that agreement now. The Speaker has suggested that we can test the sense of the House in the morning if we can not agree. I do not like to make an agreement when that will cut others off, since I have been allowed to speak for about an hour.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The Committee on Elections and the gentleman in charge of the report of the conference committee thought that they would get through about 3 or 4 o'clock to-morrow, so that we might afterwards take up the general deficiency bill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Would there be any difficulty about having a vote upon this now? Gentlemen know just about as much as they will know after debate. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Kentucky yields the floor, the Chair will put the question to the House.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House adjourn. That cuts off an inquiry.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted, as follows: To Mr. COOMBS, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. MADDOX, for this day, on account of sickness.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent that the House meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. PAYNE. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the regular order, which cuts off the request.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SAYERS. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 65, noes 46.

So the motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until 12 o'clock m. to-morrow.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills were adversely reported and laid on the table, as follows:

By Mr. MARTIN of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: A bill (S. 501) to pension John P. Biehn. (Report No. 1868.)

By Mr. STRONG, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: A bill (S. 1383) to increase the pension of Russell N. Reynolds. (Report No. 1869.)

By Mr. LACEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: A bill (S. 244) to pension James Callison. (Report No. 1870.)

A bill (H. R. 4193) to pension David C. Allen. (Report No. 1871.)

A bill (H. R. 5822) to pension Henry Chaney. (Report No. 1872.)

PUBLIC BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York: A bill (H. R. 8920) to amend an act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes"—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LOUDENSLAGER: A bill (H. R. 8921) for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal station at or near Big Oyster Bed Shoal, New Jersey—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MALLORY: A bill (H. R. 8922) to provide American register for the bark Johan Ludwig—to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. WHEELER of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 8925) to grant a township of land to the State of Alabama for the use of the Alabama State Normal College—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. CAMINETTI: A bill (H. R. 8926) making an appropriation to carry out the provisions of "An act to create the California Débris Commission and regulate hydraulic mining in the State of California," approved March 1, 1893, and to protect the navigable waters of the Sacramento and San Joaquin river systems—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. HERMANN: A bill (H. R. 8927) providing for the appointment of a board of engineers to consider and report on a new project for deeper water on the bar of Yaquina Bay, in Oregon—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. HARMER: A joint resolution (H. Res. 290) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HARRIS: A joint memorial of the State legislature of Kansas asking that the pension laws be extended to the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Kansas Volunteer Cavalry—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a joint memorial of the State legislature of Kansas asking the restricting of the issue of license to retail dealers to sell intoxicating liquors—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. PHILLIPS: A bill (H. R. 8930) granting a pension to Elizabeth Jordan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CATCHINGS: A bill (H. R. 8929) for the relief of N. B. and E. A. Lanier, of Warren County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 21, 1895.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings will be read by the Secretary.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll; and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bate,	George,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Berry,	Gordon,	Martin,	Squire,
Butler,	Hale,	Mills,	Teller,
Caffery,	Harris,	Mitchell of Oreg.	Turpie,
Call,	Hawley,	Mitchell of Wis.	Vilas,
Cameron,	Hill,	Palmer,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Hoar,	Pasco,	Washburn,
Coke,	Hunton,	Peffer,	White,
Davis,	Irby,	Perkins,	Wilson of Iowa,
Faulkner,	Kyle,	Platt,	Wolcott.
Frye,	Lodge,	Proctor,
Gallinger,	McLaurin,	Pugh,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

CREDENTIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the credentials of Marion Butler, chosen by the legislature of the State of North Carolina a Senator from that State for the term commencing March 4, 1895.

The credentials were read and ordered to be filed.

Mr. IRBY presented the credentials of Benjamin Ryan Tillman, chosen by the legislature of the State of South Carolina a Senator from that State for the term commencing March 4, 1895.

The credentials were read and ordered to be filed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending that a clause be inserted in the general deficiency appropriation bill to refund to Noble C. Butler, clerk of the United States courts at Indianapolis, Ind., the sum of $49.30 costs in the case of The United States vs. Nettie Williams, inadvertently turned over to the United States and covered into the Treasury; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. JAMES KERR, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8665) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. TURPIE presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Fort Wayne, Ind., remonstrating against the proposed sale of the land belonging to the Government on Mackinac Island; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present resolutions of District Assembly No. 4, Noble Order of the Knights of Labor of North America, secretary's office, stating that District Assembly No. 4, Knights of Labor, of St. Louis, Mo., are opposed to the recommendation of the President in the financial message to Congress, and indorsing the stand taken by Senator Vest in his opposition to the issuance of bonds in times of peace and his attitude toward the Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis, Mo. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of the Board of Trade of San Francisco, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation reorganizing the consular and diplomatic service of the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., favoring the enactment of legislation reorganizing the personnel of the Navy; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of 400 citizens of Canal Dover, Ohio, and a petition of 130 citizens of Osnaburg, Ohio, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing that "no State shall grant the right of franchise to any person who is not a citizen of the United States;" which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of 46 citizens of Mount Eaton, Ohio, and a petition of 400 citizens of Canal Dover, Ohio, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the appropriation of moneys for sectarian institutions; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SQUIRE. I present a memorial of the legislature of the State of Washington, certified by the secretary of state, asking Congress to reject the bill of the House of Representatives, No. 8504, entitled "A bill to improve the public surveys, and for other purposes."

The memorial sets forth the object of the bill to consolidate the Coast, Geodetic, Geological, and public-land surveys under one head; and states that it would be injurious to the service to centralize all the surveys under such head and to abolish the present system of surveys of the public lands by contract under the supervision of surveyors-general.

The memorial also states that the passage of such a bill would very materially retard the settlement of the public domain and increase the expenses of the execution of the surveys of the public lands. The legislature of the State of Washington thinks that such an act would work great injustice to the settlers on unsurveyed lands by taking the management of said surveys from the surveyor-general, who resides in the State and knows the wants of the settlers better than can be known by a scientific bureau so far removed from the field of operations as Washington City.

The memorial further represents that the State of Washington is entitled to consideration in the matter in view of the fact that its payments for public lands are equal to those of any other State in the Union.

I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ask that it be printed in full in the RECORD.

Mr. HARRIS. I object to printing it in the RECORD. It may be printed as a document if the Senator desires.

Mr. FRYE and Mr. HOAR. It is a resolution of a State legislature.

Mr. SQUIRE. It is a memorial of the legislature of the State of Washington.

Mr. HARRIS. Oh; if it is the memorial of a State legislature, of course it goes into the RECORD.

Mr. SQUIRE. I ask that it be printed as a document, and that it also be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as follows:

[House memorial No. 13.]

Memorializing Congress to reject House of Representatives bill No. 8504, entitled "A bill to improve the public surveys, and for other purposes."

Whereas a bill has been introduced in the National House of Representatives to consolidate the Coast, Geodetic, Geological, and public-land surveys under one head, thereby centralizing all the surveys in Washington City and abolishing the present system of surveys of the public land by contract under the supervision of the various surveyors-general, and doing said public-land surveys by paid employees detailed from Washington City; and

Whereas the passage of said bill would very materially retard the settlement of the public domain and increase the expense in the execution of the surveys of the public lands; and

Whereas such an act would work a great injustice to the settlers on unsurveyed lands, taking the management of said surveys from the surveyor-general, who resides in the State and knows the wants of the settlers better than could be known by a scientific bureau so far removed from the field of operations as Washington City; and

Whereas the State of Washington is entitled to consideration in this matter in view of the fact that its payments for public lands are equal to those of any other State in the Union: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Washington (the senate concurring therein), That our Senators be instructed and our Representatives in Congress be requested to use all honorable means to defeat the passage of said bill; and be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy be transmitted by the secretary of state to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.
Passed the house February 12, 1895.

ELLIS MORRISON,
Speaker of the House.

Passed the senate February 13, 1895.

F. H. LUCE,
President of the Senate.

(Indorsed:) House memorial No. 13, memorializing Congress to reject House bill No. 8504, "A bill to improve the public surveys, and for other purposes." Filed in the office of the secretary of state February 14, 1895.

J. H. PRICE, Secretary of State.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, STATE OF WASHINGTON, Office of the Secretary of State:

I, J. H. Price, secretary of state of the State of Washington, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of the house memorial No. 13 with the original now on file in this office, and find the same to be a true and perfect copy thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the State of Washington.

Done at Olympia, this 15th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1895.

[SEAL.]

J. H. PRICE, Secretary of State.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of the Pennsylvania State Dairymen's Association, of Meadville, Pa., praying for the publication and distribution of the results of the World's Fair dairy test; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

He also presented petitions of 74 citizens of Oberlin, of 41 citizens of Oneida, of 60 citizens of Tippecanoe, of 51 citizens of Berwyn, of 80 citizens of Shamokin, and of 190 citizens of Pittsburg, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, prohibiting the appropriation of moneys for sectarian institutions; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of 66 citizens of Kempton, of 41 citizens of Oneida, of 50 citizens of Berwyn, of 40 citizens of Ryde, of 85 citizens of Shamokin, of 150 citizens of Coal Valley, of 190 citizens of Pittsburg, of sundry citizens of Philadelphia, and of 74 citizens of Oberlin, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing that "no State shall grant the right of franchise to any person who is not a citizen of the United States;" which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon presented the petition of Mrs. Louisa Boddy, praying that she be recompensed for the loss of her husband and two sons, who were killed by the Modoc Indians November 20, 1872; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Depredations.

Mr. WHITE presented a joint resolution of the legislature of the State of California; which was referred to the Select Committee on Forest Reservations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Senate joint resolution No. 1. Introduced by Mr. Matthews, January 18, 1895. Referred to the Committee on Forestry, etc.]

[Joint resolution relating to the passage of H. Res. 119, Fifty-third Congress, in the Senate of the United States.]

Whereas there is now before a Select Committee on Forest Reservations in the Senate of the United States a bill to protect public forest reservations and secure favorable conditions of water flow, which if passed will add greatly to the wealth of the nation, and particularly to the State of California: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate of the State of California (the assembly thereof concurring), That we instruct our Senators and urgently request our Representatives in Congress from this State that they use every means in their power to secure the passage of H. Res. 119, pertaining to "the protection of public forest reservations."

Resolved, That the governor be requested to transmit to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State a copy of these resolutions.

Mr. WHITE presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Fithian shipping bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Los Angeles, Cal., remonstrating against any reduction being made in the forest reservations in the United States, especially those in the State of California; which was referred to the Select Committee on Forest Reservations.

THE RAMIE INDUSTRY.

Mr. WALSH. I present, by request, a statement containing certain valuable information concerning the ramie industry. I move that it be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McLAURIN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2694) for the relief of the Baptist Church at Corinth, Alcorn County, Miss., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2695) for the relief of the Methodist Church at Brandon, Rankin County, Miss., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PASCO. I wish to state with reference to the two bills just reported that the action of the Committee on Claims was not unanimous. They are the reports of a majority of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bills will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1075) for the relief of Merrill Denham, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was recommended the bill (H. R. 5645) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River to the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, from some suitable point between the north line of St. Clair County, Ill., and the southwest line of said county, reported it with amendments.

Mr. PALMER. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for the immediate consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator from Illinois will let the morning business be concluded. I shall have to object until the morning business is over and the appropriation bill taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5234) for the relief of James Stewart, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5260) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Corigan, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BATE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8680) granting the Mount Vernon Barracks Military Reservation to the State of Alabama for public uses, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by Mr. QUAY on the 13th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by Mr. WOLCOTT on the 19th instant, intended to be proposed to the Indian appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by himself on the 20th instant intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE, from the Select Committee on Forest Reservations, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by Mr. BATE on the 20th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

DEATH OF HON. ISAAC P. GRAY.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported the following concurrent resolutions; which were considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House concurring), That the Congress of the United States has learned with high gratification of the special honors paid to the memory of the deceased by the Government of Mexico upon the occasion of the death of the Hon. Isaac P. Gray, late minister of the United States near the Republic of Mexico.

Resolved, That in token of the appreciation of the same, the Secretary of State be requested to forward to the Mexican Government an enrolled copy of this resolution.

MEXICAN FREE ZONE.

Mr. HARRIS. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 277) in reference to the Free Zone along the northern frontier of Mexico and adjacent to the United States, to report it without amendment.

Mr. COKE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to suspend the operation of section 3005 of the Revised Statutes, in so far as the same permits goods, wares, and merchandise to be transported in bond through the United States into the Free Zone of Mexico, so long as the Mexican Free Zone law exists, at any point between the western boundary of the city of Laredo, in the State of Texas, and the Pacific Ocean: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed so as to prevent the transportation of merchandise in bond to be delivered at points in the territory of Mexico beyond the limits of said Free Zone.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADOPTION OF CHILDREN.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yesterday I asked unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9711) to authorize the adoption of children in the District of Columbia. Objection was made to it, as well as to two other bills, at that time. The other bills have since been passed, and I now ask for the consideration of House bill 9711.

Mr. FRYE. Is the morning business finished?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business has not been concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. This will take but a moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the routine morning business will be concluded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PETTIGREW introduced a bill (S. 2786) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the extermination of fur-bearing animals in Alaska," and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TURPIE introduced a bill (S. 2787) granting an increase of pension to Capt. Samuel W. Scott; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 2788) granting a pension to Elvira Bachelder; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WHITE introduced a bill (S. 2789) approving an act entitled "An act authorizing the rebuilding of the Territorial capitol at Santa Fe, N. Mex., which was destroyed by fire May 12, 1892;" which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 2790) to amend section 1 of chapter 398 of the law of 1882, entitled "An act to provide for deductions from gross tonnage of vessels of the United States;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WHITE introduced a bill (S. 2791) to regulate final proofs in placer-mining entries; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. KYLE introduced a bill (S. 2792) granting a pension to Charles Leeper; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2793) granting a pension to James G. Laughlin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PERKINS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FRYE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SQUIRE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PASCO submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, the amendment providing for a survey of the proposed Nicaragua Canal route and ascertaining the feasibility and cost of the construction of the canal; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed.

AFFAIRS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CALL. By request of the labor organizations of the District of Columbia, I submit a resolution which I ask may be read. The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and are hereby, directed to furnish as soon as practicable for the information of the Senate a statement showing—

First. The names of all streets, avenues, alleys, and reservations in the limits of the cities of Washington and Georgetown partially or wholly unpaved, and the total length thereof so unpaved; also the lengths thereof unsewered; also the lengths thereof without water mains; together with the estimated cost of fully improving, paving, sewerage, and laying water mains in the same.

Second. An estimate of the amount required to carry out the provisions of an act passed March 2, 1893, to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown; and the amount and cost of condemning lands and buildings for said highways and reservations; also an itemized estimate of the cost of building bridges, culverts, grading and fully improving said highways, streets, avenues, alleys, and reservations as contemplated by said act of March 2, 1893; also an estimate of the cost of improvements in such other unpaved streets and avenues as lie outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown; also the assessed value of private and Government property lying outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown and in the District of Columbia.

Third. A statement showing the amount of taxes collected in the cities of Washington and Georgetown and the county, respectively, by years from 1878 to 1893, both inclusive; and in like manner the amounts expended in each of said sections from the District revenues during the same period.

Fourth. The amount of surplus revenues of the District of Columbia covered into the Treasury of the United States from 1878 to 1894, inclusive, and to what fund credited; also the amount of surplus now in the Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CALL. If there be no objection, I would ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the resolution be printed and go over. I do not think there will be any objection to it probably, but I should like to see it in print.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed and go over under the rule.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8665) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 20th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1667) to provide for coinage at the branch mint at Denver, Colo.; and

An act (S. 2699) for the encouragement of education in the State of Mississippi.

PROPOSED EVENING SESSIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] coming over from a previous day.

The resolution submitted by Mr. CALL on the 19th instant was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate meet at the hour of 11 in the morning and remain in session until 5 p. m., then take a recess until the hour of 8 p. m.

Mr. CALL. I ask that the resolution may lie over, and I ask that the Indian appropriation bill be now taken up and proceeded with.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Florida will allow the resolution I introduced yesterday to be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is not yet concluded. The resolution will, without objection, lie over.

Mr. HARRIS. There is another resolution coming over as a part of the morning business.

MUNICIPAL IMPROVEMENTS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] coming over from a previous day.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. HARRIS, as follows:

Resolved, That a night session be held by the Senate, beginning at 8 o'clock on Thursday evening, the 21st instant, to consider Senate bill No. 2068, being "A bill to provide for continuing the system of trunk sewers in the District of Columbia, to provide for sewerage disposal, to lay out highways, and other purposes."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, it strikes me that the resolution ought not to be adopted by the Senate at this time. The question that it is proposed we shall consider at the night session provided for by the resolution is the question of issuing seven and a half million dollars of bonds for the improvement of that portion of the District of Columbia lying outside of the city of Washington.

This question was before the Senate only a few days ago, and it was decided adversely to the issuance of the bonds. Why there should be a persistent effort, in view of the present financial condition of the country, to issue $7,500,000 of interest-bearing obligations for this Government to pay I do not understand.

Mr. President, this country is undergoing the throes of an industrial depression the equal of which we have never known. There is universal distress throughout the length and breadth of the land. There is a universal cry on the part of the people for relief from our present financial condition; and yet, within the last four weeks, there have been introduced in this Chamber alone I think I can say in round numbers fully one dozen bills, all calling for the issuance of bonds. The President has told us that we should authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds; the Secretary of the Treasury himself has called upon Congress to authorize him to issue bonds.

I see no reason why the District of Columbia should be made a pet in this instance; I see no reason why the taxpayers whose property is to be benefited by these improvements should not themselves pay for the improvements. A spirit has grown up here—I do not know how long it has existed, but it seems to be almost universal—that it is the duty of this Government to improve the city of Washington, and improve the District of Columbia outside of this city. I know of no more reason why the taxpayers of the United States should improve the city of Washington than that they should improve the city of Denver, Colo., in which my distinguished friend [Mr. WOLCOTT] resides. I know of no more reason why money should be taken from the Treasury of the United States for the pavement of streets and the laying of sewer and water mains in the city of Washington and in the District of Columbia than it should be taken for the same purpose to construct like improvements in the town in which I reside.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Is there not this difference, that the Government owns the District of Columbia and owns the streets, but does not own his town?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, that is nominally true; but the Government does own my town in the sense that it taxes the people of my town. The farmer in Nebraska, the artisan in my little village, pay the taxes which are expended to improve this city; they are citizens of the United States, bearing their full share of the burdens and obligations of the Government, and if this city is to be the recipient of a gratuity at the hands of the Government for the improvement of territory lying outside the city limits, why should it not go beyond the District of Columbia and be extended into other sections of the country?

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me again?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. I simply suggest to the Senator that the very point to which he is calling the attention of the Senate now is what is proposed to be discussed this evening, if he will give the Senate an opportunity to do it.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to suggest to the Senator from New York, if the Senator from Nebraska will allow me, that he labors under a very serious error when he says the Government of the United States owns the District of Columbia. The Government owns but a very small portion of the District.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will allow me, upon the very point he has suggested, I will say that within the limits of the city of Washington the Government owns more than half, and outside of the city limits, in the county, the United States owns much very valuable property. In the county the assessed value of such Government property outside of the two cities is as follows: Agricultural lands, $5,296,889; nonagricultural lands, $4,503,695, aggregating $9,800,584 outside of the city limits and in the county.

Mr. ALLEN. I have heard that argument used here repeatedly. Mr. HARRIS. It is not merely an argument, but it is a fact.

Mr. ALLEN. It is a stock argument upon the part of the residents of the city of Washington; it is a stock argument upon the part of those Senators and Members of the House of Representatives who believe in expending large sums of money in this city. There is not a city in the United States outside of Washington that would not be glad to pay the entire tax of the municipality if the seat of Government were located there. If the United States will place its capital at the city of Omaha, in my State, which is a city fully as large as this, a city of great commercial importance and great financial resources, and within 100 miles of the geographical center of the United States, I will guarantee that the people of that city and the people of the State of Nebraska will be willing to pay every particle of taxation that may be levied upon the property of that city and not ask the Government for one nickel.

No, Mr. President, with all due respect for the people of the city of Washington and the District of Columbia, there have gathered within the precincts of this capital city a certain class of people who believe it to be perfectly legitimate to take every hard-earned dollar of the taxpayers of the United States out of the Treasury they can get for the purpose of building up their own property, beautifying this city, and enhancing the value of their holdings here. I have no objection to appropriating every dollar that may be necessary to legitimately improve this city; I do not propose to be parsimonious in this respect; but let us take the money from the Treasury as it may be needed, and not issue interest-bearing obligations to rest on and burden the people of this country for several years yet to come.

I was speaking, when interrupted by the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], of the fact that we seem to have become bond crazy. Everything looks toward the issuance of bonds. The President wants bonds, the Secretary of the Treasury wants bonds, Senators upon both sides of this Chamber want bonds. Perhaps a half dozen propositions have come from the Republican side within the last four weeks looking to giving the Secretary of the Treasury unlimited authority to issue bonds. An equal number has come from this side of the Chamber. I am pleased, however, to note that not one of those propositions has emanated from a Populist in this Chamber.

The time has come when we must retrace our steps financially; the time has come when we must cease the issuance of bonds. We have in the Treasury to-day millions of dollars' worth of silver bullion, which the Secretary of the Treasury has ample authority to coin into money and pay out for the current expenses of the Government. He does not deny that this authority is conferred upon him in express language by existing statutes. There is no pretense among Senators upon either side of the Chamber that the Secretary of the Treasury does not possess ample authority to coin the seigniorage, amounting to $55,000,000, and yet the Secretary of the Treasury doggedly and persistently and without reason refuses to do so. I shall not by my vote or by my voice in this Chamber confer upon him authority to issue the interest-bearing obligations of this Government.

Sir, to-day every bond that has been issued by the Secretary of the Treasury is absolutely null and void. There is not a provision upon the statute books any more conferring authority upon him to issue the bonds of this Government than there is conferring upon me like authority. The act of July 14, 1875, is repealed; it is a dead letter; and it is a mere pretense and usurpation of authority on his part to issue obligations under that act. Every bond, if its legality were contested in a court, would be held to be void.

Mr. President, what have we seen transpiring during this session of Congress? We came here about three months ago realizing that this country had been undergoing a financial panic, the equal of which our people had never seen before. There was a universal cry throughout the length and breadth of the land for relief. It was within our power to relieve them promptly by the introduction of some measure looking to the enlargement of the volume of money. Nothing, however, was done until, I think, the 23d of last month, when a bill was introduced by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] looking again to authority to issue bonds upon the part of the Secretary of the Treasury.

That bill went to the Committee on Finance, where many a good measure sleeps to-day. It was held there until the 12th day of this month. Nothing was done upon it so far as the Senate has been informed, and then suddenly it comes before the Senate with a proposition for the free coinage of silver with a great many limitations. A great spectacular performance was advertised to take place in this Chamber the day before yesterday. The Senator from Arkansas forced a vote upon taking up his measure.

Mr. President, it must have been understood by Senators who have that bill in charge that it was reported so late that no action of Congress could be taken on it. There was not the slightest hope or possibility of having it pass this branch of Congress and the other and being approved by the President. The time was too late; the appropriation bills were pressing themselves upon us; it was impossible to get the measure before Congress and have it properly considered; and yet it was forced before our attention with all the display and pretense of a purpose of having it become a law.

Certain Senators, I suppose, who have not always hewn close to the line upon the subject of silver, who have been the advocates of giving power to the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds, suddenly conceived it necessary to place themselves right before their constituents, and before the closing hours of this Congress to show to their constituency that, after all, they are the true friends of bimetallicism.

Mr. President, night before last at 9 o'clock in this Chamber the war was being waged with vigor. There was roll call after roll call; there was seemingly a determination to force the bill to a vote. All of a sudden the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] introduced a harmless kind of a resolution, and the war was at an end. The display had been made, the country had been told that these Senators were the champions of bimetalism; that, after all, they were upholding the cause of the people in this Chamber and voting for the free and unlimited coinage of silver when it was apparent to them, and apparent to every man in this Chamber, that there was no possibility of passing that bill and having it become a law. It was merely a grand-stand play, a mere spectacular performance for the benefit of the constituents of some of these Senators.

Mr. President, in this condition of our public affairs, with the people of this country suffering as they have never suffered before, with 6,000,000 of men, women, and children in this country who sleep upon their couches nightly without sufficient food to satisfy their hunger, with starvation staring many of our people in the face, with universal industrial paralysis, with the universal cry of distress, here is an attempt to force an indebtedness upon the people in the form of bonds to the amount of seven and a half million dollars more.

Is it necessary, Mr. President, that this city should receive the benefit of so large a donation? Is it possible that bonds are to be issued because lying beyond the boundaries of this city some gentlemen own property which needs improvement, or is it possible that this city in a time of universal distress can not care for itself for one year more until Congress can do something for the relief of the people at large?

Mr. President, I am glad to announce that daylight is appearing, and that Democrats and Republicans alike are falling away from their party. I hold in my hand an editorial published in the World-Herald, in my own State, a paper of large circulation, announcing the accession to the Populist ranks of two distinguished Senators in this Chamber. I will read it. It is from the World-Herald of February 18, 1895:

THE EASTERN IDEA.

The silver Democrats have been called Populists in Nebraska until they have become accustomed to it, and it now appears that Senators TELLER and VEST are also called Populists. The Hartford (Conn.) Times says of them: "Senator TELLER of Colorado is a leader of the Populist party. He declared yesterday on the floor of the Senate that no financial measure should pass the Senate except it shall contain a free silver coinage provision, and another Populist from Missouri, declared that the entire exhaustion of the $100,000,000 reserve of gold could not come too quickly to please him. These declarations are supported by the entire Populist party, which holds the balance of power in the Senate, and shows something of the low degree in financial policy to which the Populist party has descended."

Our Eastern brethren will soon have to drop party lines and form "a more perfect union" between the Republicans and Democrats in order to oppose the West and South.

I am glad to know, Mr. President, that the Populist party is making progress in this Chamber. I feel confident that the rank and file of the Populist party, when they hear these glad tidings, will welcome to our ranks the distinguished and profound Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and the equally distinguished and brilliant Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. We need the benefit of the advice and the great ability of these gentlemen, and if we can hold Congress back for one year more from this mad craze of issuing bonds, I feel confident that the heaven is working, and that before one year elapses there will be a sufficient accession to our party from both the Republican and the Democratic sides of this Chamber to prevent the issue of more Government bonds.

Mr. President, I am opposed to these bonds sincerely and earnestly. If I thought the people of the District of Columbia needed these improvements more than the people of this country need relief I would not interpose any objection to this legislation, but I am satisfied that the first duty of Congress is to the people of the United States at large. Let us bring to the people of this nation, from the East to the West and from the North to the South, that full measure of relief to which they are entitled, and which they so much need, before we abandon their cause and enter upon legislation which is designed for the benefit of a few thousand people alone, and that, too, in a city which has been the recipient of the benefactions of this Government for over a hundred years, where millions of dollars have been expended out of the public Treasury for the sole purpose of beautifying this city as a national capital. Sir, to-day we are not only beautifying it, but in consequence of the expenditures we have made here we are building up the private fortunes of hundreds, and even thousands of men. Land syndicates and speculators go out upon the outskirts of the city and buy cheap land for a small sum of money, and then they come to Congress and ask for public money, or the issuance of bonds, for the improvement of those lands, which results in making enormous fortunes for the individuals who have the holdings.

I can not and will not give my voice or my vote for a measure of that kind. There is no necessity for this expenditure of money. If there is any necessity for improving the sewerage of this city, if there is a pressing necessity for anything of that kind, we can make a proper appropriation for it, but there is no necessity of issuing the interest-bearing obligations of this Government for a few speculators to invest in. I am well persuaded that one of the purposes which prompts the introduction of this measure is to afford a few men who have idle money a safe and secure investment at Government expense.

I can not and will not give my consent to the setting apart of an hour, in violation of our rules, for the consideration of this measure. We have had measures of vastly greater importance than this brought before this Congress from time to time and debated, and yet there never has been a request for a night session to consider such measures. Here is an exception. The people of the District of Columbia say: "We want this improvement, we want the Government to issue its bonds to the amount of seven and a half million dollars; we can not get that measure, we can not get it passed by Congress and become a law at these closing hours of the session unless we can get a special session set apart for that purpose," and the Senator from Tennessee, who is the chairman of the District Committee, asks the Senate to make this exception in its course of business, and to set apart a special hour, a special time, when the interests of 70,000,000 of our people are to be entirely ignored and set aside, and the interests of a few land speculators are to be taken up and considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. GEORGE. I hope the vote will not be taken on that resolution this morning. I shall feel compelled to make some remarks upon it before the vote is taken, and I do not wish to consume the morning hour in doing so. If the Senator from Tennessee will allow the resolution to pass over until to-morrow, retaining its place, I shall be glad; if not, I shall have to proceed now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Mississippi that it is impossible to hear his remarks.

Mr. WOLCOTT. We see the Senator from Mississippi is standing up, but we can not hear a single word he says.

Mr. GEORGE. I was not saying much of anything.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That may be true, but we should like to know what the Senator does say.

Mr. GEORGE. I have not been saying much of anything, except that I was opposed to the passage of the resolution, and that I desire to say something on this subject before it is acted upon; but I do not desire to say it now. That is about all. If the Senator from Tennessee will not allow the resolution to go over, I will make a motion to lay it on the table, and have a vote on that. If it is voted down, we can then discuss the question.

Mr. HARRIS. I want no roll call upon dilatory motions. It is now 12 o'clock, or within a minute of it. I will give notice that at five and a half o'clock this evening I shall move that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock, and I give further notice that, when the Senate reassembles at 8 o'clock to-night, if it shall so assemble, if I can get the floor, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated in the resolution.

Mr. GEORGE. And I give notice that I shall move to amend the motion of the Senator by substituting the bankruptcy bill as the bill to be proceeded with.

Mr. HARRIS. Which motion will not be in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 12 o'clock having arrived it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. COCKRELL. I insist upon the regular order.

DELAWARE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. QUAY. I desire, in pursuance of the notice which I gave yesterday evening, the hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the motion of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON] to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the joint resolution (S. R. 133) directing the Secretary of War to make an examination of the bridge to be constructed over the Delaware River between the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 12 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8479) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

Mr. QUAY. I ask the Senator from Florida in charge of the appropriation bill to agree that it may be informally laid aside, without prejudice, in order that the Senate may dispose of the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the joint resolution (S. R. 133) directing the Secretary of War to make an examination of the bridge to be constructed over the Delaware River, between the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

Unless the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON] has some reasons to give for persisting in his motion, with the consent of the Senator from Florida, I will merely ask the Senate to vote upon the motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. McPHERSON rose.

Mr. QUAY. I shall be pleased to hear what are the reasons of the Senator from New Jersey for making the motion to reconsider.

Mr. McPHERSON. I wish to say that the subject is somewhat important, and, in my opinion, will provoke considerable discussion before a vote can be had upon my motion.

Mr. FRYE. I will state to the Senator from Florida that it will undoubtedly take an hour or two to dispose of the proposition.

Mr. CALL. I must insist upon proceeding with the appropriation bill under the instruction of the committee.

Mr. QUAY. I thought when this matter was mentioned in the Senate yesterday afternoon that there was, in a manner, unanimous consent that the question should be disposed of at 12 o'clock to-day. I do not know what the RECORD shows.

Mr. CALL. I was not advised of any such consent.

Mr. QUAY. Very well; I shall not interpose. However, I will ask the Senate to dispose of the question after the Indian appropriation bill is passed, and I hope it will be done. The Senator from New Jersey has tied up the joint resolution for a week by a motion to reconsider, and there are only ten legislative days left of the present Congress. The joint resolution must go to the other House or fail.

INCOME RETURNS FOR 1894.

Mr. VEST. Notwithstanding the statement of the Senator from Florida, I feel it my duty to ask the Senate to consider the motion to reconsider the action of the Senate in concurring in the conference report upon the amendments to the income-tax law, a motion submitted by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] yesterday. It is a matter of such general importance and the time is so short in which it can be determined that I must ask that it be disposed of now.

Mr. GORMAN. It is a privileged motion.

Mr. CALL. If it be a privileged motion I have no right to object to it. I will give way if it be a privileged motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the joint resolution (H. Res. 273) extending the time for making returns of income for the year 1894. Is there objection?

The Chair hears none; and the question is on agreeing to the motion to reconsider.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, when the conference report was submitted by the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], with an explanation which he made of the alterations that had been made in the joint resolution as it was passed by both Houses of Congress, it was not at the moment clearly understood by myself. I found the next morning, which was yesterday, on reading the conference report which was presented to the other House that the conferees in the consideration of the measure had inserted a provision exempting corporations from furnishing a list of the salaries of their employees to the collector of internal revenue in the district in which the corporation is located.

The act required all corporations to report the amount of salaries paid up to $4,000 or less to each person employed and the amount paid in salaries of more than $4,000. They were to make that return to the collector without being sought for. It was a provision, as a matter of course, intended to facilitate the collection of the income tax, one that looked to economy in ascertaining who were liable to the tax. It was a wise provision in my judgment. I have found since, however, by inquiry and from conversation with the distinguished Senator from Missouri, that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue recommended this change, and the conferees on the part of the other House insisted upon exempting corporations from making this return.

I think myself that it was an unwise change in the law, that the only possible way by which you can ascertain properly and speedily and without expense to the Government the immense amount of money that is disbursed by corporations to their employees is through that provision as it stood. When I glanced over the report and found that the conferees had inserted this provision, while it had not been considered, I understand, by either House of Congress in the discussion of the joint resolution, it struck me as extraordinary. As I have said, my belief is that the provision of the law as it stood, requiring corporations to make this return as to all the amounts they pay to their employees beyond $4,000 per annum, was a wise one.

The fifth requirement of the original act, that corporations should return all salaries paid of all sorts and descriptions and of all amounts, was an unwise one. I have had applications made to me, as I take it for granted every other Senator has, by the representatives of corporations in my part of the country, begging that this change be made and that they be exempted from making this return. It is very natural for them to do so, but so far as I am concerned, so long as the income tax stands—and it is distasteful to me—I believe that that was a wise provision and the only one which would enable the Government to get a full return.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Maryland permit me? I do not want to discuss the matter.

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. I call the Senator's attention to the change that was made in the tariff bill as it came from the House of Representatives. When the bill came to us originally from the other House it contained a provision that every corporation should pay the income tax upon all salaries of their employees over $4,000 and deduct the tax from the salaries. The Senate changed that mode of procedure entirely and required the employee to make his own individual return and pay his own taxes; and the corporation has nothing whatever to do with it as the law stands now.

The complaint to which the Senator from Maryland alludes came from the employees, the officials, who could not see, and I can appreciate that very well, why as they made the return and as they paid the tax they should be put upon a different footing from other individuals throughout the country. It is an invidious distinction upon citizens who happen to be the salaried employees of corporations. That is the whole question as presented by the conferees of the House, and the conferees of the Senate were unable to answer that objection.

Mr. GORMAN. The whole thing is invidious. There is nothing fair about it from beginning to end.

Mr. GRAY. That is true, too.

Mr. GORMAN. The distinguished Senator from Missouri, and I give him full credit for it, has tried to modify it the best he could; and a comparison of the provision as it came from the other House and as it passed the Senate results so enormously in favor of the work the Senator from Missouri has done that I have no complaint whatever to make of him. I am not now complaining of him or the conferees on the part of the Senate, for I understand this modification was forced upon the Senate conferees. It was forced upon the Senate conferees by a body so radical that nothing was too extreme for them to do against corporations. It was forced upon this body by gentlemen who have held up the Senate as the protectors of corporations. I am not complaining of my distinguished friend from Missouri. I think he intended to be absolutely fair about it with his views, which are more extreme than mine. Therefore I beg him to understand that I am not criticizing him.

But in the very last days of the session the conferees of another body in making a moderate change in the law, so as to extend the time for making returns from the 1st of March to the 15th day of April, inserted a provision which is a great boon to the corporations of the country. The Senator from Missouri says it is an invidious distinction. That has been done with the corporations in every line of the law. What is it, Mr. President? That the corporation shall take 2 per cent from the amount due to the Senator from Missouri or myself and hold it and pay it over to the Government. Congress required another thing of corporations in the original law, drafted by my friend from Missouri.

In order to enable the Department to ascertain who is getting $4,000 a year from corporations, the law required them to make a return to that effect. It was a simple and easy matter. To relieve them from it and to require the deputy collectors to go all over the country and ascertain who are employees of corporations is an immense work, and will require an army of men. I understand the Commissioner of Internal Revenue prefers now to make this change, and to have his deputies ascertain facts that he could get from the corporations in fifteen minutes.

Mr. President, the truth of it is that this act, being retroactive, taxing the incomes of last year, the year 1894, has found individuals and corporations in a position where they do not care to make the returns officially. Individuals are required to make returns who have not kept books of account, because they did not expect to make income returns.

Corporations have made expenditures and have employed persons as to which they do not want to make an official return. I say now, sir, that the matter comes back here from another body which insisted that we wanted to make the law so as to let the corporations escape, and the very first act which is brought before us is a measure to modify the law as it relates to corporations. The proposition, I am aware, comes at a time and under conditions when we probably can not resist it, because everybody in this body and elsewhere is pressing for an extension of time. But this provision was insisted upon by another body and by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and I simply desire to enter my protest against the change.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President—

Mr. VEST. I move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think I was recognized before the motion was made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will hear the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, it seems that the provision to which the Senator from Maryland has addressed his remarks was no part of the Senate amendments to the bill. It is a new condition concerning a new subject-matter entirely, and was introduced by the committee of conference. This provision, which is a change in the income-tax law, requiring corporations to report the names and salaries of their employees for the year 1894, is changed now by the conference report, although nothing in the original amendments of the Senate had any relation to that subject.

This, as I said, is a very adroit piece of legislative work. It shows the danger that lurks in conference committees, and it shows that the Senate should scrutinize with care all conference reports.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator from New Hampshire mean to say that the conference committee have introduced in their report a feature that was not considered by either body?

Mr. CHANDLER. I say so in this case.

Mr. HALE. That is very remarkable, if it is true.

Mr. VEST. It is not true.

Mr. ALLISON. I beg to assure the Senator from New Hampshire that he is wholly mistaken as to the fact.

Mr. CHANDLER. Perhaps the Senator from Iowa will be able to demonstrate that fact.

Mr. ALLISON. I will try to do so if the Senator from New Hampshire wants me to.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Iowa will please wait until I get through and then try.

The amendments of the Senate were threefold, and they will appear in the report if it is read. There was not in the amendments of the Senate a single word on the question whether corporations should return the names and salaries of their employees. The House conferees insisted as a condition of accepting the Senate amendments that a provision should be put in exempting corporations from making returns of the names and salaries of their employees. I say that had not the slightest reference to any one of the Senate amendments. It was a new matter entirely.

I understand very well why the amendment has been run into the conference report. It is very inconvenient for the great corporations of this country to give the names and salaries of all their employees. The law is inquisitorial. It was fought here by this side of the Chamber because it was an inquisitorial law, but it suited the majority to pass it, to make it a law and to fasten this inquisitorial enactment upon the people of the country; and it should rest upon the corporations of the country just as much as it rests upon the individuals of the country. Now, here is an attempt to change the law in this very important particular simply for the reason that the great corporations of this country are unwilling to give to the collectors of internal revenue, and possibly to the public, the names and salaries of certain of their employees.

Mr. President, the united railroads of this country, with $11,000,000,000 of capital, are standing at the doors of the Senate and the House of Representatives, seeking to pass the pooling bill which the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] advocated with so much ability the other day. This eleven billion dollar partnership or aggregation of railroads has hundreds of employees to whom it pays large salaries, and did pay those salaries in 1894. Some of them, perhaps many of them, are in this city to-day seeking to influence and to control legislation. That is one class of employees that it is very inconvenient for the great railroads and great corporations of this country to furnish a list of to the revenue officers. It would be very annoying, very inconvenient, very inquisitorial, no doubt, that those returns should be made; and I congratulate those gentlemen and the railroad corporations and the other corporations which employ them upon the skill, ingenuity, and ability which they have shown in influencing conference committees of Congress.

Mr. HALE. I should like to have some member of the conference committee make it clear to the Senate that the conference has not violated what is a rule of the Senate, never that I know of varied from, that no new matter not considered by either House shall be introduced into a conference report. Unless that rule is steadily maintained all legislation is in the hands of conference committees. The Senate has always taken ground clearly and squarely upon this question, and its conferees have always taken that position. In the Appropriations Committee, where in the last days everything depends upon the legislative integrity of the conferees of this body and of the other, it has always been maintained, as a rule, that no new matter shall be introduced.

I hope and believe that the conferees in this case can explain to the Senate that it has not been done now.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, compared with the action of the Senate heretofore as to the rule which has been established with respect to conference committees, we have not gone by any means as far as has always been done at every session since I have served here in regard to conference reports. I remember very distinctly when a whole tariff bill was brought in after some of the provisions in it had been voted down by both Houses of Congress, and that became the law in 1883.

Now, in this case, while we were considering the question of returns made by corporations, which we found in the second subdivision of the resolution, this amendment was suggested by the House conferees with the approbation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. It is a matter germane to the subject which we were considering, and was not outside of the province of the conference committee at all.

Mr. HALE. What was the provision which was amended?

Mr. VEST. It was the resolution—

Resolved, That in computing incomes under said act the amounts received as dividends upon the stock of any corporation, company, or association shall not be included in case such dividends are also liable to the tax of 2 per cent upon the net profits of said corporation, company, or association, although such tax may not have been actually paid by said corporation, company, or association at the time of making returns by the person, corporation, or association receiving such dividends.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator to read also the third resolution which was put in by the Senate, relating to inquiries.

Mr. CHANDLER. The conferees backed out of that.

Mr. VEST. The third resolution says:

Resolved, That no taxpayer shall be required in his, her, or its annual return under said act to answer any interrogatories except as specifically provided in said act.

That was the third resolution. Now, we added:

And returns or reports of the names and salaries of employees shall not be required from employers unless called for by the collector in order to verify the returns of employees.

I desire to say in answer to the Senator from New Hampshire that any intimation that corporate influence brought this about is absolutely false.

Mr. HALE. I myself think, after hearing that read as a part of one of the amendments, that it gave the committee jurisdiction over the subject. I am glad to see that the committee does not exceed its authority.

Mr. VEST. It has not exceeded it.

Mr. HALE. I did not know that was the case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. ALLEN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BURROWS (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to withdraw my vote. I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. DUBOIS. I am paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. WHITE (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP]. I withdraw my vote. If the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] were present I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 57, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—57.

Aldrich,	Frye,	McPherson,	Quay,
Allison,	Gallinger,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Bate,	George,	Mantle,	Squire,

So the Senate laid the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. HOAR. I simply ask leave to state that if there had been time to deal with this matter more carefully I should have voted against laying the motion to reconsider on the table. I am not at all satisfied with the way the legislation is left, but the shortness of time seemed to compel a disposition of the measure now.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the Indian appropriation bill be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8479) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

Mr. COCKRELL. There was considerable discussion yesterday evening between the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] as to the meaning of the Wichita agreement. Two amendments have been prepared which, I think, cover the entire case and are satisfactory to all parties. I move to strike out on page 54, from line 13 down to the word "agreement" in line 20, and insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 54, after line 13, strike out all down to and including the word "agreement" in line 20, in the following words:

That the said Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians be allowed as compensation for the cession of the lands described in article 1 of the foregoing agreement the sum of $1.25 per acre for so much of said land as will not be required for allotment to the Indians as provided in the foregoing agreement, subject to such reduction as may be found necessary under article 5 of said agreement.

And insert:

The compensation to be allowed in full for all Indian claims to these lands which may be sustained by said court in the suit hereinafter provided for shall not exceed $1.25 per acre.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, on page 56, at the end of line 16, I move to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the United States shall pay the Indians for said reserved sections the same price as is paid for the lands not reserved.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. On my own account I offer an amendment. I move to amend, on page 60, after line 5, by inserting:

Provided, That such judgment shall not be binding on Congress, but only advisory.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Florida for the purpose of offering the individual amendment after the committee amendments have been disposed of. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be stated.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment of the committee, beginning in line 23, at the bottom of page 57, should be agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "precedence," in line 23, page 57, the committee report to strike out the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be accepted or construed as a confession that the United States admit that the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations have any claim to or interest in said lands or any part thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Committee on Appropriations which was pending at adjournment yesterday will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after line 8, page 60, down to and including line 23, in the following words:

The proper accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to pay to Bartlett Richards, out of the appropriation for "support of Sioux of different tribes, including Santee Sioux of Nebraska," for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, the sum of $385.46, for beef actually delivered to the Pine Ridge Agency, S. Dak., in the month of November, 1894; said amount having been suspended or disallowed, under contract stipulations, for the reason that the average weight of 599 beef steers was not fully up to contract requirements, the deficiency occurring through the efforts of the contractor to comply with written request of the army officer, acting Indian agent, to deliver lighter cattle than had been previously delivered under the contract.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, this amendment is to strike out a portion of the bill that was inserted in it by the action of the House. It is not a proposition to insert an appropriation either by the suggestion of the Committee on Appropriations or by the suggestion of any standing committee of the Senate or any individual member of the Senate.

I take it that the action of the Committee on Appropriations in striking out this paragraph inserted by the House is because of an adverse report coming from the Committee on Indian Affairs and submitted by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], adverse to an amendment of like character that was proposed by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY]. I have with great care examined the adverse report submitted. I will say in passing that while a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs I was not in the committee room when this matter was under consideration by the committee. Had I been I certainly would have antagonized an adverse report there as I antagonize it here.

I think it quite likely that if the Senate of the United States were sitting as a court of law without equity powers it might come to the conclusion suggested by the Senator from Louisiana and presumably to the conclusion that has been reached by the Committee on Indian Affairs by its majority; but the Senate of the United States and the Congress has no such limited power. It is not governed by law. It makes law; and constantly and ever it applies principles of equity and fair dealing between the Government and its citizens. Unfortunately for the citizens, it does not apply these principles so frequently as it should.

This contractor, having a contract with the Indian Office to supply certain beef cattle to feed the Indians at Pine Ridge Agency, gathered his stock for the purpose of making the supply. He gathered them near the agency that they might be delivered at such times and under such calls as might be made by the agent. It appears from this report that most of the cattle he had gathered were what are known as heavy beef cattle, averaging in weight perhaps 1,000 or 1,100 pounds, and those are the cattle he would have preferred to have delivered under his contract. It was to his advantage and pecuniary gain that he should deliver that class of cattle instead of those lighter in weight.

These cattle, when they come to be distributed by the agent among the Indian families, it is found, are more readily and evenly distributed—there is less trouble in apportioning them from the corral, whether they are delivered on the hoof or whether they are slaughtered and delivered—by having them of lighter weight. The request and desire of the Indian agent, Captain Penney, was that cattle should be delivered of the lighter weight instead of the heavier.

I will now refer to a statement contained in the report, being the affidavit of Bartlett Richards. Let me say in passing that this gentleman is a citizen of the State in which I live, one of its most reputable citizens, a man who would ask nothing of the Government that he is not fairly entitled to receive, a man who stands eminent in his neighborhood for his virtues, his honesty, and his integrity. And he is asking this comparatively small sum on this contract, not so much because of the amount involved as because it is fair treatment to him, and decent and honorable on the part of the Government that it should recognize and pay his claim. Mr. Richards in making his affidavit sets forth among other things the calls that had been made upon him for light cattle, those averaging about 900 pounds in weight. He sets forth the facts, about which there is no dispute, and can be no dispute. He says:

The average weight of your petitioner's 3 and 4 year old steers, as shown by deliveries under the above contract and former ones, is more than 1,100 pounds per head; that your petitioner culled with special care all the lightest cattle from his herds to comply with the acting Indian agent's request, though it was to his, the petitioner's, disadvantage; that your petitioner had 1,000 heavy beef steers ready for delivery within a few days' drive of said agency; that the delivery of cattle weighing less than the prescribed average weight was not because of his inability to comply fully with the requisites of the contract, but solely through his efforts to oblige the acting agent in delivering lighter cattle than were previously delivered, and that the cattle selected were somewhat lighter than he had estimated when cutting them out of his herds for the purposes of said delivery; that the 599 beef cattle—all steers—so delivered were weighed and found to average 824 pounds instead of 850 pounds each, but that said cattle were inspected by Alfred B. Jackson, first lieutenant, Ninth Cavalry, United States Army, who certified that he found the same to be good, merchantable cattle and of quality fully up to the requirements of the contract of Bartlett Richards, dated May 18, 1894, under which they were delivered, and that Capt. Charles G. Penney, United States Army, acting United States Indian agent for the Pine Ridge Agency, receipted for said cattle, as follows, after stating numbers and weight:

I hereby certify that the beef here receipted for is fully equal to the requirements of the contract above mentioned, and in this delivery and receipt each and every condition, provision, and stipulation of the contract has been fully and honestly complied with, and that payment has not been made for the same. Received under article 6 of the contract." And that said acting agent subsequently informed the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, by telegram of November 21, 1894, that said cattle were received under article 6 of contract, "not by reason of inferior quality, but because below stipulated average weight."

Your petitioner further states that the cattle so delivered were in fine condition and of excellent quality of beef; that the Indians received good, merchantable beef, fat and otherwise in fine condition, not lean and of large frame, and that it is a serious hardship to insist upon a deduction from the contract price of said delivery of beef steers, under a provision of the contract designed solely to protect the Government and the Indians against beef of inferior quality, and especially is it a hardship in making a deduction from said issue in this case, working an injustice that the Government should not and, it is believed, will not insist upon when it is clearly shown that the light weight, i. e., smaller beef cattle, but in excellent flesh and otherwise fine beef cattle, were delivered through a desire solely to turn in such cattle as were desired by the acting agent.

This sworn statement of the contractor does not stand alone. It is corroborated by all those who have knowledge of the facts, and no one contradicts it. Not only that, upon the showing made that here was an effort to comply with what was desired by the Indian agent, both the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior say, upon full investigation of the matter, that this account should be paid. It has received their hearty approval, and it receives the disapproval of the majority of the Committee on Indian Affairs simply because, as I believe, they do not understand the condition. Here is not an effort to collect money for that which has not been delivered. Here is an effort to enforce the penalty of a contract and have the Government prevented from paying for that which it has received simply because here is a penalty clause that certainly under the circumstances should not be enforced.

Mr. President, it seems to me beyond question that upon a full understanding of this matter by the Committee on Appropriations they will not insist that the amendment striking out this portion of the bill shall prevail. I have nothing further to say about it, for I find myself talking under extreme difficulty on account of my throat.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. President, before the Indian appropriation bill came to the Senate from the House the proposition to pay Mr. Bartlett Richards the $885.46 was embodied in the form of an amendment intended to be proposed to that bill by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY]. The amendment was referred by the Senate to the Committee on Indian Affairs. After reaching that committee, it was sent by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], to the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for report upon the amendment and for the facts of the case.

It seems that this proposition to pay Mr. Bartlett Richards $885.46 is predicated upon a petition which Mr. Richards addressed to Congress, and when analyzed will be found to be nothing more nor less than an attempt on the part of a Government contractor to be relieved from certain stipulations of his contract. Matters of this sort come up frequently. The Senate should be very careful what it does in cases like this. Where an executive officer of the Government makes a contract for certain governmental purposes with an individual or individuals under law authorizing him to do so, the contractor should be held with reasonable strictness to the stipulations of his contract. For the Senate to do otherwise would be to set a dangerous precedent. The equity must be very strong indeed that would justify the Senate or justify Congress in a contrary course. Now, what are the facts of this case?

Mr. Richards, in May, 1894, made a contract with the Indian Office to supply to the Pine Ridge Agency in South Dakota 4,500,000 pounds of gross beef, at the rate of $2.99 per hundred pounds. The price that he was to receive for his beef is stipulated in article 1 of the contract. Article 5 of the contract stipulates as to the quality of the beef, and also as to the average per head that the beef cattle actually presented in compliance with the contract should weigh. If Senators will turn to page 2 of the adverse report, article 5 of this contract is set forth in full. It will be there seen that this contractor stipulated with the Government that he would furnish beef cattle to average not less than 850 pounds. Then follows section 6 of the contract, which is also copied in full in the report. In this section 6 the contractor distinctly agrees and stipulates that if he does not furnish cattle of the required average weight as set forth in section 5 he will suffer a deduction on the contract price of 1 per cent upon every 5 pounds, or fraction thereof, that the beef cattle may be under the stipulated average weight.

Here is what article 6 says upon that subject, and language can not be plainer:

ART. 6. That it is also further agreed by and between the parties hereto that for all the cattle offered under this contract which are not in conformity with the requirements of article 5, but which the respective Indian agents may be compelled by the necessities of the service to receive, there shall be a deduction of one (1) per cent in the price agreed upon in article 1, for each and every five (5) pounds, or fraction thereof, that said cattle so received shall fall short of the standard weights agreed upon in the preceding article.

As stated, the average weight agreed upon in the preceding article was 850 pounds per head for the cattle to be furnished under the contract.

Mr. Richards furnished on the 3d day of November 599 head of beef cattle aggregating 493,570 pounds gross. It was discovered that these cattle instead of weighing an average of 850 pounds per head, as his contract called for, weighed 834 pounds per head; and the Indian agent, who by the way is an army officer, Capt. Charles C. Penney, in receiving the beef cattle distinctly stipulated that he received them under section 6 of the contract.

When the account came up to the Indian Office for settlement the following telegram was sent by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the Indian agent at the Pine Ridge Agency:

On receipts issued to Richards for delivery of 3d instant, you say the cattle were received under article 6 of the contract. Were they so received because the necessities of the service required it, or for some other reason? Wire explanation, if practicable; if not, report fully by mail.

To this Captain Penney replied by telegram on the same date, as follows:

Telegram received. Cattle received from Richards on 3d instant because the necessity of the service required it; taken under article 6 of the contract, not by reason of inferior quality, but because below stipulated average weight.

In the contract with Richards it is stipulated that though the beef cattle be found to be below the average weight per head required by the contract, yet if the necessities of the service demanded they be received anyhow, the Indian agent could receive them and throw upon the contractor the penalty embodied in section 6 of the contract, viz, a diminution of price.

This is what Captain Penney, the acting Indian agent, did in this case. The necessities of the service required he should receive the 599 head of cattle. He did receive them, though they were under size and under weight; but he received them under section 6 of the contract, and the penalty of reduction of price was incurred by the contractor.

Why should Mr. Richards be relieved from this penalty? Why should he not be held to the letter and the law of his contract? We are told here by the Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from Nebraska that he should be relieved from the operation of section 6 of his contract because he could have furnished beef of the required average weight, but that he did not do so on account of the Indian agent having "expressly required beef of a certain average weight." There is nothing in the record of this case to justify that assertion except the statement of Mr. Richards himself—

Mr. CAREY. I did not understand the Senator. Will he repeat his statement?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I said there is nothing in this record as to the cattle delivered on November 3, the date in question, showing that the Indian agent requested Mr. Richards to deliver cattle of a certain average weight except the statement of Mr. Richards himself. If there be anything, I will pause for the Senator from Wyoming to point it out.

Mr. CAREY. I wish to ask the Senator from Louisiana a question in this connection. The minimum weight is fixed in the contract?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes.

Mr. CAREY. The evidence before the committee showed this state of affairs: That the Indian agent, Captain Penney, requested that the cattle for these various issues should weigh about so much. Now, the contractor had to go to the herd and gather those cattle and bring them up, guessing what their probable weight would be. The cattle delivered just previous to this issue weighed a little more than was required by the contract. It so happened that he, in selecting these cattle to oblige the Indian agent, obtained cattle of a lighter weight than the contract required; but if you take the average of the cattle from time to time that were issued you will find the issues were above the minimum weight. At the same time he was complying with the request of the Indian agent.

In addition to that, I want the Senator before he has completed his remarks to read what the Secretary of the Interior says, and also what the Commissioner of Indian Affairs says about this matter.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I repeat there is nothing in this record whatever except the statement of Mr. Richards himself to show that in the delivery of cattle required on November 3 the agent said one word about the weight of the cattle to be delivered at that time.

It is very significant that Mr. Richards, in his petition, omits the order of the Indian agent for the delivery of the cattle upon the 3d day of November, 1894. Does it not seem to you, Mr. President, if the Indian agent had stipulated in his order that he desired cattle of a certain weight (the order having been in writing) Mr. Richards would have produced that order in connection with his petition? He does not do it; but he has furnished three other orders for cattle which he had received from Captain Penney, the Indian agent, two of them for the delivery of cattle prior to November 3, and one of them for the delivery of cattle on the 21st day of December, all in writing. Yet the very order upon which the cattle in question were furnished he omits to make any mention of. That will not be disputed by the Senator from Wyoming. Here are Mr. Richards's orders which he had received for beef cattle prior to November 3, and one subsequent to that date. I will read them:

PINE RIDGE AGENCY, S. DAK., September 1, 1894.

SIR: You are hereby notified that I will require, on September 17, 1894, for issue to Indians, 488 head of beef cattle—

And he puts this in parentheses—

(to weigh about 440,000 pounds gross, or to average about 900 pounds) to be penned on the evening of September 16.

Please acknowledge receipt of this letter.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. G. PENNEY,

Captain, Sixth Infantry, Acting United States Indian Agent.

MR. BARTLETT RICHARDS,

Contractor, Chadron, Nebr.

Mr. CAREY. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BLANCHARD. In one moment. They were not the beef cattle involved in this controversy.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President—

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask the Senator to wait until I go a little further.

On the 26th of September, 1894, the Indian agent gave another order for cattle, which reads as follows:

PINE RIDGE AGENCY, S. DAK., September 26, 1894.

SIR: You are hereby notified that I will require, on October 15, 1894, for issue to Indians, 84 head of beef cattle—

And, then, in parentheses—

(to weigh about 75,000 pounds, or to average about 900 pounds), to be penned on the evening of October 14, 1894.

Please acknowledge receipt of this letter.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. G. PENNEY,

Captain, Sixth Infantry, Acting United States Indian Agent.

Mr. BARTLETT RICHARDS,
Contractor for Beef, Chadron, Nebr.

That order is not for the beef cattle over which this controversy arose. Then comes the delivery of the cattle on November 3, 1894, but no order for this delivery is furnished by Mr. Richards, though it is the one above all others he should have furnished, since it was the delivery over which this controversy has arisen.

Then, on November 19, about sixteen days after the delivery of the cattle in the instant case, another order for cattle was given and we find Mr. Richards furnishing that order in writing, received by him from Captain Penney, the Indian agent. That order is as follows:

PINE RIDGE AGENCY, S. DAK., November 19, 1894.

SIR: You are hereby notified that I will require on December 21, 1894, for issue to Indians, 484 head of beef cattle—

Then, in parentheses—

(to weigh about 441,000 pounds gross, or to average about 900 pounds), to be penned on the evening of December 20, 1894.

Please acknowledge receipt of this letter.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. G. PENNEY,

Captain, Sixth Infantry, Acting United States Indian Agent.

Mr. BARTLETT RICHARDS,
Contractor, Chadron, Nebr.

I cite these orders to emphasize the concealment by Mr. Richards of the order in question upon which the delivery of cattle of November 8 was made. He could furnish two preceding orders and he could furnish the first succeeding order, but he omits entirely from his statement the order of most importance to his case. The statement, therefore, that there is nothing in this record to show that the Indian agent had stipulated any weight for these particular 599 head of cattle delivered on the 3d of November, except the statement of Mr. Richards himself, is correct.

But suppose we assume, for the sake of the argument, that the order he gave for the delivery of cattle on the 3d of November was in precise terms similar to the two orders which I have quoted preceding the 3d of November and the one order which I have quoted following the 3d of November, what does it show? If you will scrutinize the language, it is plain that the Indian agent did not intend to confine Mr. Richards to any particular weight per head of cattle, that he did not intend in any way to relieve him from the obligation of his contract to furnish cattle of a certain average weight, but merely used a general term to designate that he wanted about so many hundred thousand pounds of beef gross, or so many head of cattle to average about 900 pounds.

Mr. CAREY. Now, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I yield.

Mr. CAREY. I think the Senator from Louisiana is stating the case very unfairly.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I do not think so.

Mr. CAREY. Bartlett Richards under this contract could have delivered cattle that weighed 1,600 pounds or 2,000 pounds. The agent had no right to request him to send cattle of a certain average under this contract. Bartlett Richards selected cattle out of his large herd for the purpose of obliging Captain Penney, who distributed these cattle. Now, the Senator asks why he wanted a certain average weight, or about a certain weight. It was for the purpose of distributing them to the Indians. They bunched 22 Indians together, giving to each such band one head of cattle to butcher for themselves. Nine-hundred-pound cattle made about the right distribution to these 22 Indians.

I think it is very unjust to say that Mr. Richards purposely omitted that order.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Why did he not furnish it, then?

Mr. CAREY. It was probably only a letter or request; he may not even have had it; he may not have kept it.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Let me ask the Senator from Wyoming if it is not a little singular that Mr. Richards could furnish us the two preceding orders and the first succeeding order, all in the form of letters, and totally omit the very order in question upon which the delivery of cattle was made from which this controversy has sprung? Is it not a matter requiring explanation?

Mr. CAREY. The Senator from Louisiana, whenever there is a bounty involved in which the State of Louisiana is interested, is not so particular—

Mr. BLANCHARD. I did not yield to the Senator from Wyoming to indulge in matters irrelevant to this controversy or in personal flings at myself.

Mr. CAREY. Very well; I shall have an opportunity to make my speech afterwards.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I wish to say that I have no feeling in this matter. Why should I have? I had never heard of Mr. Bartlett Richards until this claim came before the Committee on Indian Affairs. I am merely the organ of the Indian Committee in reporting to the Senate its conclusions in this case. The conclusions of the Indian Committee are assailed by the Senator from Wyoming, and the report made by me embodying those conclusions is assailed by him. I am an humble member of the Indian Committee, who was deputed by the committee to formulate in the way of a report the reasons which induced the committee to report this claim adversely.

If the Senate of the United States, in its larger jurisdiction, shall see proper to override the committee, override the plain letter of the law of the contract made with Mr. Richards, and pay him, upon some idea that the law must give way to the equity of the case, then I will accept its decision in good part. In opposing the claim I am but discharging a duty which was delegated to me by the Committee on Indian Affairs; and it is unbecoming in the Senator from Wyoming to charge me with being unfair in the statement of the case.

The Indian agent, in stipulating in his various orders that he would require cattle about the weight of 900 pounds, was merely using a general term to indicate about how many head of cattle he wanted. He nowhere expressly requests Mr. Richards, as Mr. Richards states in his petition, to furnish him beef cattle of a certain weight, but merely uses the general term already referred to.

Mr. President, it will be observed that "the 900 pounds," which the Indian agent mentioned in the several orders, which I have quoted, were 50 pounds above the average weight required by the contract, and in all of his preceding deliveries Mr. Richards did furnish cattle which averaged more than 900 pounds, or more than 50 pounds above the weight required in his contract; but on the 3d day of November Mr. Richards, according to his own statement, seemed to have culled out of his herds, not at the agency, or even near the agency, but three days' march from the agency, 599 head of beef cattle, taking upon himself the risk that those cattle in point of weight would meet the contract requirement. When the cattle reached the agency and were placed upon the Government scales, it was found that an important stipulation in the contract had not been complied with; that 599 head of cattle weighed only 824 pounds per head, or 26 pounds per head less than his contract called for. If he had complied with the request of the agent (so far as we may be able to judge of what that request was in this particular case by his orders given in other cases) the beef cattle would have averaged 900 pounds per head, or 76 pounds more than they did average.

Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming stated yesterday in his speech as follows:

So far as any provision of the contract is concerned it was not violated by Mr. Richards, as it appears from the testimony offered in this case that there was no necessity for the Indian agent to have received the lighter weight cattle unless he had actually wanted them.

That statement of the Senator from Wyoming, if he will permit me, is negated by the dispatch received from the Indian agent at Pine Ridge Agency by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. On page 3 of the adverse report you will find the dispatch. There he will see that the Indian agent telegraphed:

Cattle—

This particular delivery of cattle he means—

Cattle received from Richards on 3d instant, because the necessity of the service required it, taken under article 6 of the contract, not by reason of inferior quality, but because below stipulated average weight.

Mr. CAREY. I ask the Senator to read the entire telegram.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have already read the telegram, but I will read it again. It is as follows:

Telegram received. Cattle received from Richards on 3d instant because the necessity of the service required it; taken under article 6 of the contract, not by reason of inferior quality, but because below stipulated average weight.

Now, if the Senator will turn to article 6 of the contract, he will see that the Government reserved the right to receive cattle offered, notwithstanding they were under the average weight specified by the contract, if the necessities of the Indian service at that time required it, and so the agent did receive these 599 head of cattle, notwithstanding the fact that they were under the contract weight. He received them because, as he stated in his telegram to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the necessities of the service required their reception. I will read article 6 again:

It is also further agreed—

Says article 6 of the contract—

by and between the parties hereto that for all the cattle offered under this contract which are not in conformity with the requirements of article 5—

That means if they be of inferior quality he could reject them. If the cattle were underweight, but not inferior in quality, he could still reject them; but if the necessities of the service required him to receive them in either case he could do so, but in that event the remainder of article 6 would apply, and the contractor was to suffer a reduction in the price.

Article 6 says:

That it is also further agreed, by and between the parties hereto, that for all the cattle offered under this contract which are not in conformity with the requirements of article 5, but which the respective Indian agents may be compelled by the necessities of the service to receive, there shall be a deduction of one (1) per cent in the price agreed upon in article 1 for each and every five (5) pounds or fraction thereof that said cattle so received shall fall short of the standard weights agreed upon in the preceding article.

So, when these cattle were offered on the 3d of November, while they came under the contract requirement as to the quality of beef, they did not come up to the requirement as to the average weight of the cattle, and the Indian agent, this army officer there, in the discretion vested in him by article 6 of the contract, knowing and stating that the necessities of the service required him to receive these beef cattle anyhow, did receive them and receipted for them, not under the terms of article 5, where the full contract price would have been paid, but expressly under the terms of article 6 of the contract, which imposed the penalty of a diminution in price upon the contractor.

That is the whole case, Mr. President. The Indian Committee reported it adversely; it could hardly do otherwise. Whatever equities there may be, they must give way before the plain letter of the law. This contract made between the Government and Mr. Richards is a law unto the contracting parties, and when Mr. Richards stipulated that if his beef cattle did not come up to the required weight he would suffer this diminution in price, it must be held by the Senate that that stipulation was there to subserve some good purpose.

It rests with the Senate to say whether they will uphold the contract or override it and pay Mr. Richards this amount of money. The Indian agent held to the letter of the contract. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs wanted to pay Mr. Richards the price stipulated in article 1 of the contract, but the language of article 6 was so imperative that he had no discretion in the matter, and he stated the account in such a way as to enforce the deduction. Had the cattle not been of light weight Mr. Richards would have received for the delivery of November 3, $14,757.74. He actually received $13,872.23, the difference being $885.46, or the amount now claimed.

The Indian Office appended this to its statement of the account:

The deduction is made in accordance with article 6 of Mr. Richards's contract that a deduction of 1 per cent in the price shall be made for each and every 5 pounds or fraction thereof that said cattle so received shall fall short of the standard weight agreed upon, viz, an average of 850 pounds per head. The 599 steers averaged but 834 pounds, making a shortage of 26 pounds to each head, for which a deduction is made of 6 per cent on the contract price, or a total deduction on the 493,570 pounds of $294.46.

If Congress does what the Senator from Wyoming now asks it to do it renders inoperative article 6 of the contract so far as this delivery of cattle on the 3d of November, 1894, is concerned. Is this a politic thing for Congress to do?

I have not much sympathy, Mr. President, with contractors who stipulate one thing in their contracts and do another, and then come before Congress and ask relief under pretense of equities existing in their favor justifying them in the failure to execute all of the provisions of their contracts.

It is true the Indian Office, in its letter on this claim, uses this language:

Although the cattle received at this particular delivery were below the average weight prescribed, I do not understand that such fact was any detriment to the service or that the Indians suffered any loss thereby; and inasmuch as it appears that the cattle received were fully up to the contract requirements as to quality, I see no objection to the adoption of the amendment proposed.

It will be seen that the Commissioner does not "recommend" Congress to pay this amount to Mr. Richards. He merely states, in a guarded way, that he sees no objection to the adoption of the proposed amendment.

The Secretary of the Interior, in his letter inclosing the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, is still more guarded. He closes his statement of the facts with this observation:

For these reasons I am of the opinion there is equity in the case.

Neither of them recommends to Congress to pay this money, but both think there is some equity in the contention of Mr. Richards. So there may be, Mr. President, but equity must give way before the plain letter of the law of the contract. Mr. Richards made the contract, and article 6 of the contract, relating to reductions, is as much a part of it as that article which provides that he be paid $2.99 per hundred pounds.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Louisiana has stated the case very unfairly. An Indian contractor, Mr. Bartlett Richards, had agreed to deliver cattle that should not average below a certain number of pounds. He proceeded to deliver those cattle on the request of the Indian agent as to weight. So far as this contract which is exhibited to us shows, he could have delivered cattle which weighed 1,600 pounds or 2,000 pounds, but it was the practice of Captain Penney to request so many pounds of beef or so many head of cattle which should average a certain weight. He selected these averages out of a large herd he had in the vicinity.

Mr. Richards is the owner of a very considerable herd of cattle, not a very great number of miles from this Indian reservation. Immediately before the bunch of cattle were delivered which are concerned in this controversy, it seems that he delivered to the Government cattle of about the weight which were requested by the Indian agent. He had to go to his herd to select the cattle and he had to get cattle of a certain weight. There were undoubtedly in the bunch some that were over the average and some that were under it. His contract simply stipulated that they should be of a certain average weight—not less than a certain number of pounds. In this particular delivery it seems they fell a little short in weight. When the attention of the Secretary of the Interior was called to the matter he said he saw no objection, under the circumstances, to this amount being allowed, because the Indians had not been injured, the Government had not been injured, and the quality of beef was up to the standard. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs virtually made the same statement with reference to this matter.

For the purpose of properly getting this subject before the Senate, I ask the Secretary to read what I have marked in a letter addressed to the Committee on Indian Affairs by the Secretary of the Interior.

The Secretary read as follows:

In reply to your request for the facts and opinion in the case, I beg to hand you herewith a copy of a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated the 17th instant, wherein the circumstances relating to the delivery of the beef cattle in question are fully set forth.

It appears that Mr. Richards has a contract for supplying the agency named with beef cattle; that the contract provides for a standard of weight, the minimum of which shall be an average of not less than 850 pounds at each delivery; that Mr. Richards had made several deliveries prior to the one in question, all of which were far in excess of the weight above stated; that at the request of the acting Indian agent in charge of the agency named, who desired cattle of an average of about 900 pounds each, he, Richards, culled out with special care all the lightest cattle from his herds to comply with the acting agent's request, though to his disadvantage to do so; that the cattle so delivered failed to come up to the standard specified, weighing an average of only 834 pounds per head; that said cattle were received and accepted by the agent in charge as fully equal to the requirements of the contract, and that the same were received under the provisions of article 6 of the contract, which provides for a penalty in case the delivery is not of the standard weight, "not by reason of inferior quality, but because below stipulated weight."

Mr. CAREY. In this case it is proposed that Mr. Richards shall be punished because he was complying with the request of the Government. I do not believe this Government should take that which does not justly belong to it. I believe it should pay its honest debts, and I do not care whether they arise in a court of equity or a court of law. Mr. Richards tried to do that which was requested by the agent of the Government. The Interior Department is well satisfied that he did this; the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is also satisfied that in making this delivery of beef he was doing that which was required or requested by the Indian agent.

It involves the sum of $842, and there is no reason under the circumstances why Mr. Richards should not be paid that amount. That is all I desire to say on the subject.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is no punishment of the contractor. To refuse to pay this amount is in strict accord with the letter, the spirit, and the object of the contract, pure and simple. If there are equities in this case, then article 6 of the contract ought not to have been put into it. It is a part and parcel of all the Indian contracts, and if we are to trample upon this contract, we ought to instruct the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that it does not make any difference what a steer weighs, that he shall pay according to the highest price for the heaviest-weight cattle.

One clause of the contract was for cattle weighing 850 pounds or over. There is another clause that if cattle of a less weight than that shall be delivered a deduction shall be made. That is a part and parcel of the contract. When light cattle are received the net weight of which does not equal what the net weight would be if the cattle were heavier, a deduction is made. The deduction is in accordance with the contract. It is not a punishment; it is not a deprivation of any right, but it is simply granting to the contractor the right he claims of receiving 1 cent less on every 5 pounds where he delivers light cattle. If this contract is to be construed as an equity, then every Indian contractor who for years and years has delivered cattle of lighter weight than those contracted for, and who has not received the highest price, will come in upon a supposed equity and claim full price for light-weight cattle, which do not net so much beef to the Indians as the full-weight ones do.

The amendment was inserted in the other House. It came to the Senate, and I found that an amendment to the same effect was pending before the Committee on Indian Affairs. I asked the committee's consideration of the amendment in the pending bill. The Committee on Indian Affairs reported the amendment adversely. We have stricken it out, and I fully sustain the report so ably prepared by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. It sets forth the facts and shows there is no equity in the matter. It is simply a matter of contract pure and simple. The contractor agreed to take less for light cattle than for heavy cattle. That is all there is about it.

Article 6 is just as much a part of the contract as article 5, and there is not a line from any Indian agent calling for light-weight cattle. The officer in charge said he wanted so many cattle averaging about 900 pounds. Now, necessarily he expected some weighing a thousand and some weighing 800 pounds, but they were to average about 900 pounds. Instead of that they only averaged 824 pounds. That was no compliance with the contract at all. Those cattle were not worth so much as if they averaged higher. They did not net so many pounds to the Indians. I hope the amendment of the Senate committee will be sustained.

Mr. CAREY. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether Mr. Richards was compelled, under his contract, to comply at all with the request of the Indian agent which is printed on page 8 of the report.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is, a request to deliver cattle of certain weight?

Mr. CAREY. No; he requests so many head of cattle to average so much.

Mr. COCKRELL. Averaging about 900 pounds. That is above the standard. He does not ask for light-weight cattle under the contract—not a bit of it. He does not say he wants those which will come under article 6 of the contract. He left that to the discretion of the contractor. He said, "I want cattle that will average about 900 pounds." Necessarily, to average that weight, some would weigh a thousand, some 900, some 950, some 850, and so on.

Mr. CAREY. I wish to ask the Senator from Missouri another question. If he will look under the article he alludes to, article 5, he will see that Richards would have filled the contract if he had delivered cattle that weighed 2,000 pounds. The minimum weight was fixed in the contract. If the Senator will read the entire statement he will find that Mr. Richards fell into his trouble and loss of $842 because he was supplying the cattle on the request of the agent who wanted so many head. I have explained the reason for that, that the Government issues an animal to each 22 Indians, and the agent wanted the cattle of about a certain weight so that he would get the average number of pounds for each Indian. It is now proposed that because in guessing at the weight of cattle in picking them out of his herd, which he did to oblige the Indian agent at this particular time, as he had been doing theretofore, and fell a few pounds short, Mr. Richards is to lose $842, notwithstanding the Secretary of the Interior says the Indians were not injured and the Government was not injured, because the beef was up to the standard quality. I say the Senate can not afford to take that position.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Wyoming is mistaken. This is simply a provision of the contract. It is a part and parcel of all Indian contracts, and if it is to be nullified here it ought to be nullified in every instance, and we ought to tell the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to strike it out and annul it; that it does not make any difference whether a steer weighs 840 or 900 or 1,000 pounds; a 600-pound steer is just as good as a thousand-pound steer or a 900-pound steer. Anybody who knows anything about cattle knows that the net weight is very material, that the heavier the steer is the greater the net weight. The Indians were the sufferers by that action. The contract specifies the price according to weight, as all contracts do, and we have paid the contractor every cent he is entitled to in equity or in law or in justice or in right. We have paid him all he could have gotten in the market for cattle of that weight, and there is no equity here at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that there be a modification made of an amendment which was adopted a few minutes ago. It is a clerical correction. Instead of striking out, on page 54, as was suggested by the Senator from Missouri, from line 13 down to and including the rest of the paragraph, I suggest that we simply strike out lines 13, 14, 15, down to and including the words "per acre" in line 16, leaving the remainder of the paragraph as it is in the present text, with the amendment proposed to come in just after that in lieu of the words stricken out.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read as proposed to be modified.

The SECRETARY. On page 54, after line 12, strike out:

That the said Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians be allowed as compensation for the cession of lands described in article 1 of the foregoing agreement the sum of $1.25 per acre.

And insert:

The compensation to be allowed in full for all Indian claims to these lands which may be sustained by said court in the suit hereinafter provided for shall not exceed $1.25 per acre.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection to the modification proposed it will be agreed to. The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 62, line 16, after the word "lands," to strike out "or entitled to select lands for educational purposes;" in line 17, after the word "law," to insert "may select such lands;" in line 18, after the word "Territory," to strike out "from the surplus lands thereof;" in line 20, after the word "reservation," to strike out "the surplus lands purchased by the United States;" and in line 22, after the word "settlement," to insert "may select such lands from the surplus lands thereof purchased by the United States;" so as to make the clause read:

That any State or Territory entitled to indemnity school lands under existing law within the boundaries of any Indian reservation in such State or Territory, after allotments have been made to the Indians of such reservation, and prior to the opening of such reservation to settlement, may select such lands from the surplus lands thereof purchased by the United States.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to have this paragraph passed over. I am opposed to the committee amendment because I think it is unjust and unfair and entirely unnecessary. It seems to me the committee will not insist upon it. I should like, however, to have it passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the amendment will be temporarily passed over.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BRICE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3092) "making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "and," and strike out all after the word "surgeons," in line 20, down to and including line 23, on page 2 of the bill; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "And it is further provided that from and after the passage of this act, all pensioners now on the rolls, who are pensioned at less than $6 per month, for any degree of pensionable disability, shall have their pensions increased to $6 per month; and that hereafter, whenever any applicant for pension would, under existing rates, be entitled to less than $6 for any single disability, or several combined disabilities, such pensioner shall be rated at not less than $6 per month: Provided also, That the provisions hereof shall not be held to cover any pensionable period prior to the passage of this act, nor authorize a rerating of any claim for any part of such period, nor prevent the allowance of lower rates than $6 per month, according to the existing practice in the Pension Office in pending cases covering any pensionable period prior to the passage of this act;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. GALLINGER. When the bill was under consideration in the Senate three amendments were added to it by the Senate. I desire to inquire of the Senator having the bill in charge as to what became of those amendments. My own impression is, from hearing the reading of the conference report, that one of them was agreed to as it passed the Senate; that another was agreed to in an amended form, which I think is a very proper change; and that perhaps the third amendment was disagreed to. I will ask the Senator first as to the amendment repealing the provision of the law that prevented the payment of pensions to widows and others residing in foreign countries. Was that agreed to by the conference committee?

Mr. BRICE. The House conferees receded, and the Senate amendment is retained in the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. The second amendment was an amendment offered by myself, as was the first one, requiring boards of examining surgeons to state the rating to which, in their judgment, the applicant is entitled. I judge from the reading of the conference report that that amendment has been stricken from the bill.

Mr. BRICE. The conference struck out all after the word "surgeons," in line 20, and down to and including line 23, on page 2 of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator refers, of course, to the engrossed bill, and it does not appear in the print before me; but I judge it is the provision on page 3 of the print I have. I regret that the conferees on the part of the Senate agreed that that might be stricken from the bill; but I will make no contention about the matter. I simply content myself by saying that I think, during the entire period since the war, examining boards have stated what in their opinion the rating should be for the several disabilities. For some reason or other the Pension Bureau very recently instructed the boards not to make such rating, and it is utterly impossible even for a person somewhat well versed in pension matters, on examining the papers in the Bureau, to get a very accurate notion as to what the allowance should be in any individual case. I say I exceedingly regret that that provision has not been retained in the bill; but I will make no contention about it beyond stating my own dissent from the views of the committee of conference.

The additional amendment was the amendment submitted by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] providing that $6 a month should be the lowest pension for any degree of pensionable disability hereafter. I observe that the committee of conference has enlarged that provision, which it strikes me is an improvement on the language used by the Senator from Connecticut when he submitted the amendment. I feel very confident that it will not only accomplish the purpose designed but will protect the pensioners even to a larger extent in the future in the matter of securing pensions. The conference committee amendment seems to provide that hereafter if any pensionable disability is found, either a single or a compound disability, the pension shall be granted at a rate not less than $6 per month, which I feel sure was the purpose the Senator from Connecticut had in view.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, the conferees extended to me the courtesy to show me the proposed changes in the amendment which I had the honor to offer, and they are all in the direction of increased caution. It occurred to me that the original provision was definite enough, but out of abundant caution they added some phrases and made some slight changes which do not affect the main purpose and perhaps guard it more carefully. I myself cheerfully agree to the changes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish simply to add that it is to me a matter of great personal gratification that the conference committee saw fit to keep in the bill the provision relating to nonresidents. I have in my desk now probably a dozen letters from people in Ireland, England, Canada, and other foreign countries, some of them of the most pathetic description, showing the great injustice that has been wrought to those people by the provision in a former appropriation act. I am extremely gratified and want to extend my thanks to the conference committee for having done this act of justice to a class of people who were greatly wronged by the hasty legislation of a former Congress.

Mr. BRICE. In view of the statement made by the Senator from New Hampshire that the change of amendment numbered 3 in the report enlarges the provision which was inserted in the bill on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut, I desire to say that there has been no enlargement of the amount.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; of course I do not mean that.

Mr. BRICE. It remains at $6 a month. The enlargement was rather by adding words of caution to see that the evident intention of the Senate was carried out.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is my understanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

MRS. EVALYN N. VAN VLIET.

Mr. PALMER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 634) for the relief of Mrs. Evalyn N. Van Vliet, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

The Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment. Strike out the word "thirty," in line 4, and insert the word "twenty-five;" and the House agree to the same.

ADOPTION OF CHILDREN.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Florida in charge of the appropriation bill has very kindly consented to allow me to call up for present consideration a bill that was partly considered yesterday. It is the bill for the adoption of children in the District of Columbia. It will take but a moment to pass it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3711) to authorize the adoption of children in the District of Columbia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INSPECTORS OF HULLS AND BOILERS.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator from Florida allow me to have a pretty important bill of general interest passed? It will take but a moment. The bill is one regulating the salaries of inspectors of hulls and boilers. A similar bill has passed the Senate three times, and finally the House concluded to take it up and has passed it under a suspension of the rules. However, it will require two or three amendments. I report it back from the Committee on Commerce with amendments. There is no need, in my judgment, of reading the bill. The amendments can be read and acted on. The bill has been read in the Senate over and over again.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2377) to amend "An act to amend section 4400 of Title LII of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the regulation of steam vessels," approved August 7, 1883; and also to amend section 4414, Title LII, of the Revised Statutes, "Regulation of steam vessels."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported from the Committee on Commerce will be stated in their order.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 8, after the word "also," to strike out the word "section" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sections;" so as to make the section read:

That the "act to amend section 4400 of title 53 of the Revised Statutes of the United States," approved August 7, 1882, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out from the first section thereof all after the word "aforesaid," in the fourteenth line of said section; also sections 2 to 6, inclusive, of said act.

The next amendment was, in section 2, to insert after line 20:

In districts inspecting 100 steamers and less, to a salary of $1,200 per year each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 25, after the word "inspecting," to insert "over one hundred and;" so as to make the paragraph read:

In districts inspecting over 100 and less than 150 steamers, to a salary of $1,500 per year each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 41, after the word "Treasury," to insert "the number of inspections for the year next preceding the approval of this act and thereafter;" so as to read:

The Supervising Inspector-General shall report to the Secretary of the Treasury the number of inspections for the year next preceding the approval of this act and thereafter, at the end of each fiscal year, the number of steamers inspected in each local district in that year, which number shall be the basis upon which shall be determined the salaries to be paid to local inspectors for the following fiscal year, in the ratio described in the preceding paragraphs of this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 54, after the word "Massachusetts," to insert "Chicago, Ill.;" so as to read:

For the district of New Orleans, La.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Baltimore, Md.; Boston, Mass.; Chicago, Ill., and San Francisco, Cal., at $1,800 per year each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 3, in the following words:

Sec. 3. That this act shall take effect July 1, 1895.

And insert in lieu thereof:

Sec. 3. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. RANSOM, Mr. VEST, and Mr. FRYE were appointed.

Mr. FRYE. I am obliged to the Senator from Florida.

WILLIAM W. BUCKLEY.

Mr. PALMER. I ask the Senator who has charge of the pending appropriation bill to allow me to call the attention of the Senate to House bill 8237. It is a very short bill and will occupy but little time.

Mr. CALL. I can not consent to any further interruption of the appropriation bill at this time.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator from Florida will allow me, I will state that this bill is one that was introduced in the House by a gentleman one month older than I am. He is very anxious for its passage, and holds me responsible for its passage by the Senate. I hope the Senator will allow me to have it passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CALL. After that appeal I will yield.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 8237) for relief of William W. Buckley, late first lieutenant One hundred and ninety-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments: In line 3, after the word "the," to strike out "Secretary of War" and insert "President of the United States;" in line 4, after the word "authorized," to strike out the words "and directed," and in line 8, after the word "to," to insert "direct the Secretary of War to;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to revoke the order mustering out of service William W. Buckley as first lieutenant of Company K, One hundred and ninety-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, on October 15, 1865, and to direct the Secretary of War to issue to him an honorable discharge as of that date: Provided, That under the terms of this act the said Buckley shall not be entitled to receive any pay, bounty, or other allowances to which he would not have been entitled under his original muster out of service.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now let us proceed with the appropriation bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8479) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 63, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

For pay of employees at substation, and saw and flour mills at the Flathead Agency, Mont., $3,500.

The next amendment was, on page 63, after line 3, to insert:

To enable the President to cause, under the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians," such Indian reservations as in his judgment are advantageous for agricultural and grazing purposes to be surveyed, or resurveyed, for the purposes of said act, and to complete the allotment of the same, including the necessary clerical work incident thereto in the field and in the Office of Indian Affairs, and delivery of trust patents, so far as allotments shall have been selected under said act, $20,000: Provided, That whenever it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that by reason of age, disability, or inability any allottee of Indian lands under this or former acts of Congress can not personally and with benefit to himself occupy or improve his allotment or any part thereof the same may be leased upon such terms, regulations, and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary for a term not exceeding five years for farming or grazing purposes, or ten years for mining or business purposes: Provided further, That the surplus lands of any tribe may be leased for farming purposes by the council of such tribe under the same rules and regulations and for the same term of years as is now allowed in the case of leases for grazing purposes.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out the last proviso, in the following words:

Provided further, That the surplus lands of any tribe may be leased for farming purposes by the council of such tribe under the same rules and regulations and for the same term of years as is now allowed in the case of leases for grazing purposes.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 64, after line 2, to insert:

That the allotments of land made to the Quapaw Indians, in the Indian Territory, in pursuance of an act of the Quapaw national council, approved March 23, 1893, be, and the same are hereby, ratified and confirmed. And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue patents to said allottees in accordance therewith: Provided, That said allotments shall be inalienable for a period of twenty-five years from and after the date of said patents: And provided further, That the surplus lands on said reservation, if any, except 100 acres where the Quapaw school buildings now stand, which shall be reserved for school purposes, may be allotted from time to time by said tribe to its members, under the above-entitled act, and after said allotments shall have been made the remainder may be disposed of by the national council at not less than $1.25 per acre and the proceeds used by said council for the benefit of said tribe.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask the Senate to disagree to this amendment relative to the Quapaw Indians.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. COCKRELL. That proposed amendment was transferred from page 81, lines 5 to 15, which is the House provision in the bill. We struck it out there because it was not in its proper place, and, supposing that some provision had to be retained, we modified it as we thought best. Now that the modification has been disagreed to, I ask that the amendment of the committee striking out the paragraph on page 81, from lines 5 to 15, inclusive, be agreed to. That will end the whole matter.

Mr. PLATT. And strike out the whole thing.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 81, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 81 the committee report to strike out from line 5 to line 15, inclusive, in the following words:

That the allotments of land made to the Quapaw Indians, in the Indian Territory, in pursuance of an act of the Quapaw national council, approved March 23, 1893, be, and the same are hereby, ratified and confirmed. And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue patents to said allottees in accordance therewith: Provided, That said allotments shall be inalienable for a period of twenty-five years from and after the date of said patents: And provided further, That the surplus lands on said reservation, if any, may be allotted from time to time by said tribe to its members under the above-entitled act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 65, after line 8, to insert:

For surveying the Indian reservations in South Dakota, $20,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, after line 10, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to negotiate with the Belknap Indians for the surrender of certain portions of their reservation, situated in the north central portion of the State of Montana, and the Blackfeet Indians for the surrender of certain portions of their reservation, situated in the northwestern part of the State of Montana, $3,500; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to appoint a commission to negotiate with the said Belknap and Blackfeet Indians for the ceding of said portions of their respective reservations, any agreement thus negotiated being subject to action by Congress.

Mr. PLATT. I ask, because I am not fully informed, whether it has been customary for the Secretary of the Interior to appoint commissions to negotiate with the Indians, or is the appointment made by the President of the United States?

Mr. COCKRELL. Sometimes the appointment is made by one and sometimes by the other. Where it is a small matter, it has generally been left with the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator thinks it is entirely proper to leave this matter with the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; this is a small matter.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 65, after line 21, to insert:

For the survey of the lands in the Indian Territory, $400,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, direct that the surveys herein authorized, or any part of them, shall be made under the supervision of the Director of the Geological Survey, by such persons as may be employed by or under him for that purpose. And such surveys shall be executed under instructions to be issued by the Secretary of the Interior, and subdivisive surveys shall be executed under the rectangular system, as now provided by law: Provided further, That when any surveys shall have been so made and plats and field notes thereof prepared, they shall be approved and certified to by the Director of the Geological Survey, and two copies thereof shall be returned, one for filing in the Indian Office and one in the General Land Office; and such surveys, field notes, and plats shall have the same legal force and effect as heretofore given to the acts of surveyors-general: Provided further, That the cost of said surveys, so to be made under the supervision of the Director of the Geological Survey, shall not exceed the rates now established by law; and that whenever such surveys are executed as herein provided by the Director of the Geological Survey, all laws inconsistent with the provisions hereof are declared to be inoperative as respects such surveys.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think there is a mistake on the part of the committee in connection with this amendment. The provision as it reads would, I think, place all the surveys of Indian reservations provided for in the bill under the Geological Survey. I think it is the intention to place only the surveys in the Indian Territory under the direction of the Geological Survey.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That certainly was the intention, and I think it is clearly shown.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think the amendment unquestionably includes all surveys provided for in the bill. I therefore move to insert, after the word "authorized," at the top of page 66, the words "in the Indian Territory."

Mr. PLATT. That will do.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not want the Geological Survey to do the work in my State because I am afraid it would never be done. I do not think that Bureau ever means to get out of business.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is no objection to that amendment to the amendment. I think the amendment as at present constructed does the same thing.

Mr. CALL. I call the attention of the Senator from South Dakota to the words in line 2 on page 65, "for survey of lands in the Indian Territory."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That limits it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. But it provides also that "the surveys herein authorized," and the bill authorizes the surveys of other Indian reservations in the United States. The paragraph just preceding authorizes the survey of an Indian reservation in South Dakota. Therefore I desire that my amendment to the amendment shall be adopted.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is no objection to that amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 2, on page 66, after the word "them," insert "in the Indian Territory."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 66, after line 21, to insert:

That jurisdiction upon the principles of law and equity be, and it is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine a suit that may be instituted therein by Yvon Pike, Lillian Pike, and the legal representatives of Luther H. Pike, children and heirs at law of Albert Pike, deceased, late a citizen of the State of Arkansas, against the Choctaw Nation of Indians for just compensation to them for and on account of services as attorney at law and otherwise rendered to and for said nation by the said Albert Pike in his lifetime, in and about the prosecution of the so-called "net proceeds" claim of said nation against the United States and in other business, and to render such judgment or decree in said suit, upon the merits thereof, as the facts will warrant, and as shall be just and equitable, with right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from said judgment or decree to either party to said suit.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, after line 12, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Joel M. Bryan, for services rendered the North Carolina Cherokees residing in the Cherokee Nation west, in accordance with the proceedings of a council of said North Carolina Cherokees held at Tahlequah, in the Indian Territory, March 12, 1892, now on file with the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, the sum of $3,000, out of any unexpended balance of the amount appropriated by the act of March 3, 1893, for the removal and subsistence of those members of the Eastern Band of Cherokees who have removed themselves, as well as those who may now or hereafter desire to remove themselves, to the Cherokee Nation in the Indian Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, after line 2, to insert:

For payment of interest on certain abstracted and nonpaying State stocks belonging to the various Indian tribes, and held in trust by the Secretary of the Interior, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, namely, from July 1, 1894, to August 15, 1894, both inclusive, $9,870.42.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, after line 10, to insert:

To provide for the expenses of the five commissioners appointed to take a census of the Old Settler Cherokees, $2,000, in addition to the sum of $5,000 appropriated for such purpose by act of Congress approved August 15, 1894, the same to be deducted from the amount awarded to said Indians by judgment of the Court of Claims, dated June 8, 1893, and reimbursed to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, after line 19, to insert:

To enable the Attorney-General to employ a special attorney for the Mission Indians of southern California, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, $2,000, of which sum $1,000 shall be available for the fiscal year 1895.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, beginning at line 1, to insert:

That the homestead settlers on the Absentee Shawnee, Pottawatomie, and Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indian lands in Oklahoma Territory be, and they are hereby, granted an extension of two years within which to make the first payment provided for in section 16 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1892, and for other purposes," and such payment may be made at any time within five years from the date of the entry of such lands. And that the like extension of two years on the first payment required to be made, when payable in installments, is hereby granted to all homestead settlers on all ceded Indian reservations in the States of South Dakota, Nebraska, Montana, and Idaho: Provided, That in any case where the United States has not paid the Indians for such ceded lands the consent of the Indians interested shall first be obtained, in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In line 16, after the words "States of," I move to insert "North Dakota."

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be stated from the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee on page 69, line 16, after the words "States of," by inserting "North Dakota."

Mr. PLATT. Has North Dakota suffered the same as other States named from drought?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT. Then I have no objection to the amendment to the committee's amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move to strike out all the committee's amendment after the word "Idaho," in line 17, on page 69, down to and including the word "direct," in line 20.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee in line 17, on page 69, after the word "Idaho," by striking out the following:

Provided, That in any case where the United States has not paid the Indians for such ceded lands the consent of the Indians interested shall first be obtained, in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the amendment to strike out those words will not be agreed to. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs says this provision is absolutely necessary; that in cases where Indian lands have been sold to homestead settlers and they have been given time in which to make payment, and then have had an extension of time, the consent of the Indians shall be obtained. If the amendment should be adopted a very serious question would arise of violating a special and specific contract we made with the Indians. I do not think the change proposed ought to be made. Wherever the Government has assumed payment, or anything of that kind, I think it ought to be done, but where there is a specific contract it ought not to be insisted upon.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, of course where the Government has not paid for the Indian lands the preceding provisions would be entirely worthless as to settlers occupying the lands. In the State of South Dakota, in the great Sioux Reservation, there are large numbers of people who have taken lands and are trying to make homes; but unfortunately that country has been exceedingly dry and the people have been able to produce no crops whatever. This simply gives them another opportunity to try to make homes upon those prairies, and to try to build up that country.

If this provision is insisted upon, if we wait to get the consent of 25,000 Sioux Indians in South Dakota, the year will pass, the settlers will leave that country, and the Indians will receive nothing. It is not only in the interest of the Indians but absolutely in the interest of the settlers that this proviso should be stricken out. We have a treaty with the Sioux, and I think the Indian Rights Association insist that we can do almost nothing unless we get the consent of three-fourths of the male Indians over eighteen years of age, and I suppose they will insist upon that stipulation in connection with this matter, and therefore the extension of time will be absolutely worthless to those people. If it is a mere matter of interest, the Government can afford to pay the interest for those people, if it is necessary, in order to carry out the agreement with the Indians, and not drive those people from their homes by insisting that they shall make this payment within the year. Give them a chance to make another crop; give them a chance, if they want to stay in that country, to do so. That will enable the remainder of the lands to be sold, and it will be far better than to insist upon the proviso, which makes the extension absolutely worthless.

Mr. COCKRELL. The proviso is:

That in any case where the United States has not paid the Indians for such ceded lands the consent of the Indians interested shall first be obtained, in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct.

That does not mean each individual member of the tribe, and the Secretary of the Interior will be able to obtain the consent of the Indians in a month.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will say that there are six tribes interested in this land. The whole Sioux Nation are on six reservations, probably a hundred miles apart, and the amount of interest will not equal the cost of making the agreement. There are only a few hundred settlers in that country, and if they leave it, there will be less in the future and there are millions of acres of land there yet belonging to the Indians.

Mr. PLATT. It seems to me there is considerable force in what the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] says about this provision. To put this provision in the bill is practically to say that where the land has not been paid for, the provisions of law shall not apply, for I do not see how the homestead settler who wishes to have an extension of his time, because of the drought and his inability to pay for his land, can negotiate with and obtain the consent of the tribe of Indians who would receive the benefit of the payment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to ask the Senator from Connecticut why the United States has not paid the Indians for all these ceded lands?

Mr. PLATT. We have taken some lands from the Indians upon an agreement to pay them as fast as the money comes into the Treasury from the sales of their lands to actual settlers, and it is those classes to which the provision refers.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is there any doubt but that the Indians will get their pay whether the extension is given to homestead settlers or not?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the proviso go out of the amendment.

Mr. PLATT. Replying to the Senator from New Hampshire, if he desires a reply now, although the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has consented to the proviso going out of the bill, if the settler can not get the extension, the probability is he will abandon his settlement, and then the Indian will not get his pay until the Government can sell the land over again. If the settler gets an extension, it is probable he will be able to struggle along and pay for his land; and then the Indian will get the money for it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Do I understand that the United States pays each individual Indian for the proceeds of his own land? Does not the United States pay from the gross accumulation of the sales to the tribe?

Mr. PLATT. That is it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then if the gross sales are sufficient of all the lands, the Indians are sure to get their money, and then there will be no reason for this provision.

Mr. PLATT. The Indians get all the money that is paid into the Treasury, but if the homestead settler can not keep on and pay up the Indians do not get pay for that land. Wherever the settler abandons his land it is so much lost to the Indian unless the Government can sell the land over again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 69, after line 20, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to negotiate with the Otoe and Missouri tribes of Indians, located in the Territory of Oklahoma, and, if practicable, to purchase from the said tribe a sufficient quantity of their surplus lands to allot to members of the Iowa tribe of Indians, in Kansas and Nebraska, as hereinafter set forth: Provided, That in case the Secretary of the Interior deems best for the interests of the said Iowa tribe he is hereby authorized to allot to the said Iowa Indians lands that have been, or may hereafter be, ceded to the United States by the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache, or the Wichita tribes of Indians, located in the Territory of Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, after line 7, to insert:

The lands so secured to be allotted in tracts of 80 acres of farming land to each person who has not already received an allotment of land who was recognized as a member on May 1, 1894, of the Iowa tribe of Indians, in Kansas and Nebraska, and to children born to members of the tribe since the former allotment, and to such other persons of Iowa blood who may be admitted to membership by authority of the said Iowa tribe, with the approval of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, previous to the completion of the allotments hereinbefore provided for; said allotments to be made under the provisions of the act of Congress providing for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, approved February 8, 1887.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, after line 21, to insert:

The cost of the lands hereby authorized to be purchased from the Otoe and Missouri tribe of Indians, or the lands owned by the United States that are allotted as aforesaid, shall be paid to the said Otoe and Missouri tribe or reimbursed to the United States from funds due the said Iowa tribe of Indians now held in trust by the United States, payment of said sum to be under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That a majority of the male adult members of the said Iowa tribe of Indians shall first agree to the provisions hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, after line 6, to insert:

That with the consent of the Otoe and Missouri tribes of Indians, to be obtained in such a manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, said Secretary is authorized to expend any of the principal sum derived from the sale of their lands in Kansas and Nebraska, not to exceed $30,000, the same to be expended per capita, in his discretion, in the erection of houses and other necessary farm buildings on their individual allotments, in the purchase of seed, farm implements, and domestic animals, and in settling them upon their lands, and in preparing them to begin agricultural life.

Mr. MANDERSON. I desire to offer an amendment to that clause, which was an amendment to the bill intended to be proposed by me, but I am glad to see it has been adopted by the Committee on Appropriations. I ask that the amendment may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the committee amendment, on line 16, page 71, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, pay to any of said Indians whom he may consider capable of judiciously expending their money their per capita share of such sum in cash.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have been called upon by representatives of this tribe, and it is a tribe of Indians which is well advanced toward civilization, who informed me that there is coming to them the sum of $80,000, and their desire was that this amount might be distributed among them per capita, to be expended for their welfare and comfort and advancement. I hold in my hand a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, in which he suggests this amendment.

Their desires were met in part by the Interior Department in that they should receive one-half of this amount for the purpose named, and that where any of them were so far advanced as to permit it, and had buildings, in his discretion the Secretary of the Interior might give them their share in money rather than expend it for farm buildings and the purchase of seed, farm implements, and domestic animals.

I send to the desk the letter of the Acting Secretary of the Interior, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.
The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, February 4, 1895.

SIR: Referring to letter of the Department of January 23, 1895, reporting upon an amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. MANDERSON to the bill (H. R. 8479) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes, I desire to say that upon further consideration and at the earnest solicitation of representatives of the Otoe and Missouri tribe of Indians, whom said amendment affects, I have concluded to suggest that a proviso be added to the amendment suggested by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and approved by said Departmental letter, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay in cash the shares of those Indians who may be found capable of judiciously expending the money.

I inclose a draft of said proviso, and respectfully recommend that it be added to the draft of amendment heretofore forwarded.

Very respectfully,

WM. H. SIMS, Acting Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. We have passed an amendment made by the committee, on page 69, as to the Otoe and Missouri tribe of Indians. I should like to know what purpose is to be accomplished by that amendment? I do not know of that subject having been before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I should like to know something about it.

Mr. PLATT. I suggest to the Senator to let that stand until the Senator from Nebraska returns.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no motion pending. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] offered an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That has been adopted.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I desire to open that question again. I wish to understand the provision. I do not remember of there being any statement before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I do not understand the amendment or what is to be accomplished by it. I should like to have the Senator in charge of the bill inform us.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Does the Senator refer to the proposed purchase of land in the Indian Territory from the Otoe Indians?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not remember that that subject has been before the Committee on Indian Affairs, but I think I recall indistinctly that some communication has been made from the Indian Office of an arrangement being made with certain Indians in Kansas about to remove to the Indian Territory, and that there is an amicable agreement for them to purchase lands in the Otoe Reservation.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator will recall that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MARTIN] appeared before the committee and urged the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I believe that is the fact.

Mr. PLATT. And the Senator from Nebraska who has just spoken on the subject [Mr. MANDERSON], who has been called out for a moment, was also interested in it, and either of those Senators, I think, can explain the situation.

Mr. MARTIN. I will state that these amendments were submitted to the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and have their cordial approval in writing. They were before the Committee on Indian Affairs and also before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I now recall that there was a report from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to know if these Indians now own lands in Kansas?

Mr. MARTIN. No. This bill provides for the purchase of Indian lands for certain Indians in Oklahoma and in the Indian Territory.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Have they any lands in the State of Kansas which belong to them?

Mr. MARTIN. All the lands, as I understand, owned by these Indians have already been allotted among the Indians there.

Mr. MANDERSON. There are no tribal lands. They have been allotted in severalty.

Mr. PETTIGREW. How many Indians are there?

Mr. MARTIN. I am not prepared to say about that. I do not know.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am very sorry to see the Senator from Kansas so anxious to get rid of the best population in his State. [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTIN. We do not propose to supply the deficiency by importations from South Dakota. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER. Is there any exigency in this legislation which requires it to go on an appropriation bill, when there is no appropriation made whatever in connection with the provision?

Mr. MARTIN. I do not know that there is any special reason why this should be so. I can only say it is proper legislation, that it has been properly submitted to the Department of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and that it has been cordially approved by them. It has been reported here favorably by a committee. It seems to me that all the rules of the Senate have been complied with in that respect, and that it is not subject to any objection whatever.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Otoe and Missouria Indians who are concerned in this particular amendment do not live in the State of Kansas or in the State of Nebraska. They are members of those tribes who, many years ago, were taken to the Indian Territory, where they now reside. A few of them who preferred to remain at their old home were allowed to take land in severalty. This distribution of one-half of the amount which belongs to them, which is in the Treasury of the United States, is a distribution to the members of the tribe who are in the Indian Territory and who are not citizens of either Kansas or Nebraska. It is for the purpose that they may advance themselves in civilization in the Indian Territory that this money is to be paid for their benefit. It is theirs, and why should it not be paid, when, in the opinion of the Interior Department, they are so far advanced that they should receive this that is their fair due?

I am afraid my friend from South Dakota did not listen to the statement made in regard to this matter, and particularly to the letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, which was read. I have no doubt in my mind but that this is a righteous and proper provision.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Will the Indians in Nebraska receive any of this money?

Mr. MANDERSON. This is a part of the money they received for the sale of the lands that were not taken by a portion of the tribe in Nebraska and Kansas.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am glad to see the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] giving some attention to this provision, because I know he always brings intelligence and good sense to every subject which he discusses. I should like to call his attention to the fact that here are two pages, beginning on line 21, page 69, and going to line 16 on page 71, where there is no appropriation whatever. It is not in order on an appropriation bill and could be ruled out if a point of order were made. Certainly there ought to be a succinct and brief statement made of what the object is when Senators are called upon to vote for amendments of this kind which contain no appropriation whatever.

Does the Senator know sufficient facts about the provisions here to be able to say that they not only are wise and judicious legislation, but that they are of sufficient importance to be put upon an appropriation bill when no appropriation is made? We get no information from the other side of the Chamber about these clauses; they have made no explanation of these pages of this appropriation bill which are devoted to new legislation, and I should be very glad if the Senator from Nebraska, who has discovered the word "Nebraska" four or five times in these provisions, and has therefore made a short speech on them, will tell us whether he can vouch for the sense and soundness of these provisions, and also whether they are so important that they can not possibly wait until a better and more intelligent Congress shall assemble in Washington. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] never allows himself to burst with ignorance. He always seeks light, and always seeks it from the place where he can obtain it best. [Laughter.] I feel very much complimented, and I think I fully deserve the encomiums he has passed on my good judgment and excellent sense. [Laughter.] Having placed me so high in opinion by that expression, I am sure he will believe me when I say that I think these provisions to which he has referred are so beneficent, so excellent, that they should be upon this bill, even in violation of the rules of the Senate, for which, as I have heretofore said, I have so little regard that I think a majority should never hesitate to overrule them when good can result thereby.

I can assure the Senator that the fact that the word "Nebraska" is frequently in these amendments gives them additional merit, and I have no question but that he will believe me when I make that statement, if I can have his attention.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I heard nearly all the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] was engaged in pouring additional information into my ears. The Senator has satisfied me about this provision, and I make no further objection to it. I only regret that we can not get from the other side of the Chamber, from Senators who are conducting this bill, an equally lucid statement as to all the various provisions which they have added to the bill.

Mr. CALL. If there be no objection, I wish to have inserted the following proviso, after line 16, on page 71:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the five Indian delegates of the said tribe now in Washington $150 each out of their appropriation, to cover their board and traveling expenses in coming to and returning from Washington.

This has been presented to me by the head of the tribe, with authority from his tribe to come here for the purpose of representing them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to hear the amendment. I do not think anyone on this side of the Chamber heard what the Senator from Florida said, and I should like to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment already agreed to it is proposed to insert, after line 16, on page 71, the following:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay the five Indian delegates of said tribe now in Washington $150 each out of their appropriation, to cover their board and traveling expenses in coming to and returning from Washington.

Mr. CALL. If the Senator from New Hampshire desires to know, I will state—

Mr. CHANDLER. I have not the least objection to the amendment if the delegates will only go. [Laughter.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 71, after the amendment just agreed to, to insert:

That that part of the act of Congress approved February 28, 1891, amending an act providing for the allotment of land in severalty to Indians on various reservations, etc., approved February 8, 1887, which reads as follows, to wit: "And provided further, That no allotment of land shall be made or annuities of money paid to any of the Sac and Fox of the Missouri Indians who were not enrolled as members of said tribe on January 1, 1890; but this shall not be held to impair or otherwise affect the rights or equities of any person whose claim to membership in said tribe is now pending and being investigated," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, after line 4, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to suspend action under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1893 (27 Stats., 641), ratifying the agreement with the Cherokee Nation of December 19, 1891, as to the actual removal from the Cherokee country of persons designated by the authorities as intruders, until the appraisal of the value of the improvements of such persons shall have been completed and submitted to Congress by the Secretary of the Interior, and until the further action of Congress.

Mr. BUTLER. I beg to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to a protest which I hold in my hand from certain Cherokee delegates which bears directly upon the proposed amendment of the committee. The protest is not long, and I will ask that it be read from the desk.

The Secretary read as follows:

NATIONAL HOTEL, Washington, D. C., February 8, 1895.

To the Senate of the United States:

We, the undersigned delegates and representatives of the Cherokee Nation of Indians, beg leave to call your attention to the amendment on page 72 to H. R. 8478, making appropriation for the Indian service, etc., which directs the Secretary of the Interior to suspend action under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1893, 27 Statutes, page 641, which relates to the removal of intruders from our Territory.

We must say that we were very much surprised to see the amendment referred to. We have had no notice whatever of such intended amendment, and had no knowledge whatever in regard to it until we read it in the reported bill.

When the Cherokee people agreed to sell to the United States that vast territory of country containing over 6,000,000 acres of land known as the Cherokee Outlet, it was specially and specifically agreed that all intruders were to be removed from our Territory by the United States, as agreed in former treaties. This part of the agreement of the sale was a material part of the consideration, and one of the strong inducements that impelled the Cherokee Nation to sell and part with this vast and valuable domain.

When Congress ratified this agreement, which was approved on March 3, 1893, as above referred to, Congress modified the agreement in this regard by requiring the Cherokee Nation to pay the intruders the value of their improvements as a condition for their removal. Notwithstanding our people thought this a hard requirement, after these intruders had occupied and used our lands for many years free of rent, yet in order to comply with the wishes of the United States, in regular council accepted and ratified the amendment.

Since then a commission was duly appointed by the United States to make appraisement of the improvements of the intruders, which appraisements have been completed, and the Cherokee Nation has set apart and held in readiness $250,000 to make full payment to all persons whose improvements have been appraised. We have fully complied with our part of the agreement, and insist that the United States carry out in good faith its part of the agreement, and that the Senate strike out the amendment referred to. Any failure to execute this important agreement will greatly discourage our people and cause them to doubt the good faith of the United States in any proposition hereafter made.

Respectfully,

C. J. HARRIS, Principal Chief,
WALTER A. DUNCAN,
J. P. THOMPSON,
S. W. GRAY,
ROACH YOUNG,
Cherokee Delegates.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Arkansas has an amendment to the amendment of the committee, which I have not examined very carefully; but it seems to me it will obviate somewhat the complaint which is very justly submitted by the delegates from the Cherokee country.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Arkansas whether the amendment he proposes makes an appropriation?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It does not.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suppose the Senator from New Hampshire will allow me to offer the amendment before he submits the point of order.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will allow the Senator from Arkansas to do anything he likes.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 14, page 73, I move to strike out all of the committee amendment after the word "completed," and insert the words:

And approved by the Secretary of the Interior and submitted by him to Congress; and the removal of such intruders shall not be made earlier than January 1, 1896: Provided, That whenever any intruder shall have been paid or tendered the appraised value of his improvements, if he does not immediately surrender possession of the same to the authorities of the Cherokee Nation, he shall pay rent therefor at the rate usual in the country.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Arkansas had a suggestion about giving the nation a lien on the crops.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think it is proper that a lien should be reserved to the nation for the rent, and I am willing to have the amendment modified in that respect.

Mr. CHANDLER. The amendment has not been read from the desk, and I do not understand it. I understand the original proposition, the committee amendment, and as I understand it, it is a direct violation of a solemn agreement made with the Cherokee Nation, as stated by them. Now, here is the provision in the act of March 3, 1893, which shows that there has already been a postponement of the agreement, but it distinctly provides that upon the demand of the principal chief, or otherwise, the intruders shall be put out. They shall be paid for their improvements upon the land, the sum to be expended not to exceed $250,000, which the Cherokees have provided. The appraisements have gone forward, and the chiefs of the tribe ask to have the intruders go.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from New Hampshire will allow me, I will suggest in support of what he has just stated that I am informed that the board of appraisers have finished the field work, and will in a few days be able to make their report to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now, here comes another provision which suspends all action, not until the reports of the appraisals are made and the intruders paid, but until the further action of Congress.

Mr. BUTLER. That is to be stricken out.

Mr. CHANDLER. So that the appraisals may be made—

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That clause is to be stricken out.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am speaking of this proposition as it came from the committee and as it lies before me on the desk.

Mr. BUTLER. The words the Senator refers to are proposed to be stricken out by the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am commenting upon the feast to which we were first invited, and not that which we are asked to participate in now by the Senator from Arkansas. Here is a provision, as reported by the committee, that after the appraisals are made, after the intruders are paid for the improvements which they made upon the land, when they had no business there, it shall be necessary for the Cherokees to come and get another act of Congress to get them out, because here is the clause in line 15—

And until the further action of Congress.

I submit that unless that clause is to go out, and the provisions that are to go into the appropriation bill shall effectually provide for carrying out the agreement with those Indians, then the whole paragraph ought to go out, and the contract ought to be complied with just as the Indians now here, speaking through their memorial and through the Senator from South Carolina, ask that it shall be complied with.

Mr. BUTLER. I think the objectionable features of the amendment are, in a large measure, corrected by the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is it satisfactory to the memorialists whose memorial the Senator from South Carolina has presented?

Mr. BUTLER. I am not prepared to answer that question. But the provision to which the Senator refers and takes exception I think ought to be stricken out. It is to be stricken out, I understand, by the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas. Whether the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas will be acceptable to the delegates I am not able to say.

Mr. CHANDLER. If it is agreeable to the Senator from Arkansas to have his amendment read from the Clerk's desk, then I will decide whether to make the point of order on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the word "completed," in line 14, page 73, strike out the remainder of the committee amendment, as follows:

And submitted to Congress by the Secretary of the Interior, and until the further action of Congress.

And insert:

And approved by the Secretary of the Interior and submitted by him to Congress; and the removal of such intruders shall not be made earlier than January 1, 1896: Provided, That whenever any intruder shall have been paid or tendered the appraised value of his improvements, if he does not immediately surrender possession of the same to the authorities of the Cherokee Nation, he shall pay rent therefor at the rate usual in the country.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas rose.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I thought the Senator from New Hampshire had yielded the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will yield to the Senator from Arkansas to hear what he has to say.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I merely wish to say in explanation of what is here proposed, that as suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire, we proposed, a couple of years ago, to remove those intruders, after the value of the improvements they had made in the country had been appraised and paid for. The appraisement of those improvements is nearing completion, but it is not completed. The Senator from South Carolina says he is advised that the completion will occur within a few days. I am not so informed, though I understand it will take place not very far in the future.

In the mean time the time for planting the crops in that country has arrived. To take those people, and there are six or seven thousand of them, people who make their living by farming, by agriculture, after the time has come for them to plant their crops, away from their homes and bodily eject them by military force out of that country would be an act of brutality of which the Government of the United States can not afford to be guilty, and will not be guilty. The proposition as we have it here is that those people when their improvements have been appraised and paid for, if they do not immediately surrender possession, shall pay rent to the Cherokee Nation for the use of the land upon which they live and the improvements that they occupy, and that they shall not be removed before the 1st of January next. It simply allows those people who, will be planting their crops before the appraisement can be finished, an opportunity to harvest their crops and go in an orderly way to homes to be found somewhere else. That is all there is of it, and the dictates of the commonest humanity require that this shall be done.

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand the Senator from Arkansas to state that the effect of his amendment will be to preserve the title to these lands in the Cherokee Nation after the improvements have been paid for, or after the payment has been tendered?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is no doubt in my mind that the title to all this land is now in the nation, and has been since the patent was made to them, before either the Senator from South Carolina or I was born, and that the intruders who have gone there and have been, some of them, asserting rights as against the Cherokee Nation for title to the land will have their claim absolutely wiped out by the amendment. They will have notice served upon them that the Government of the United States recognizes the title of the land as being in the Cherokee Nation.

Mr. BUTLER. That I understood to be the effect of it, and so I asked the question.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the amendment proposed obviates all objection to this legislation, and if the Senator from South Carolina is satisfied I will not press the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER. The amendment has just been read. The Senator from Arkansas discussed it somewhat this morning. I am inclined to think it will obviate all the objections which the Senator from New Hampshire discovered in the amendment and which I myself discovered. I entirely agree with him. My opinion is that it does obviate the difficulty, and if the amendment is agreed to I can not conceive why there should be any complaint about it. The provision to which I objected and to which the Senator from New Hampshire objected is stricken out; that is, suspending all action until further legislation by Congress, so that the appraisal can be proceeded with. If the amendment is adopted I do not see how they can be injured by continuing it until the 1st of next January.

Mr. CALL. Let the amendment be reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "completed," in line 14, page 73, strike out the remainder of the amendment and insert:

And approved by the Secretary of the Interior and submitted by him to Congress; and the removal of such intruders shall not be made earlier than January 1, 1896: Provided, That whenever any intruder shall have been paid or tendered the appraised value of his improvements, if he does not immediately surrender possession of the same to the authorities of the Cherokee Nation, he shall pay rent therefor at the rate usual in the country.

diately surrender possession of the same to the authorities of the Cherokee Nation he shall pay rent therefor at the rate usual in the country.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.
The amendment as amended was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. JAMES KERR, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8499) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, in the county of Dakota, in the State of Nebraska, and in the city of Sioux City, in the county of Woodbury, in the State of Iowa.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8476) to provide for the examination and classification of mineral lands in the States of Montana and Idaho.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8234) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896; further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, upon which the committee were unable to agree; agreed to a further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. McCREARY, Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi, and Mr. HITT managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 8681) authorizing the Arkansas Northwestern Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (H. Res. 209) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver condemned cannon to Asher Gaylord Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Plymouth, Pa.; to William H. Tarbee Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of McGrawville, N. Y.; to the Eckley B. Coxe Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Freeland, Pa., and to the R. Carpenter Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Chelsea, Mich.; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 273) extending from March 1, 1895, to the 15th day of April, 1895, the time for making returns of income for the year 1894, and for other purposes.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8479) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 72, line 18, after the word "lease," to insert "repair;" in line 20, after the word "draftsman," to strike out "at $1,200 per annum;" in line 22, after the word "million," to strike out "one hundred and sixty-four thousand three hundred and fifty," and insert "two hundred and fifty-three thousand four hundred and forty," and in line 24, after the word "dollars," to insert "of which amount the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, use $5,000 for the education of Indians in Alaska;" so as to make the clause read:

SUPPORT OF SCHOOLS.

For support of Indian day and industrial schools, and for other educational purposes, including the purchase, lease, repair, and construction of school buildings, not hereinafter provided for, including pay of draftsman to be employed in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $1,253,440, of which amount the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, use $5,000 for the education of Indians in Alaska.

Mr. PLATT. It is proposed here to raise the appropriation from $1,164,350 to $1,253,440, which is an increase of about $90,000. Will the Senator in charge of the bill state how that increase is made up or what it represents? Perhaps it is well to understand it at this point.

Mr. CALL. In reply to the question of the Senator from Connecticut, I will state that the increase over the House provision is made by adding the additional number of Indian children to the different Government schools, making as many as they can accommodate and take care of. It is found that under the provision of the bill abolishing all denominational schools and establishing the policy of the Government school for the education of the Indian children it is possible to add largely to the different Government schools on the reservations and elsewhere. Consequently the effort has been made, with the approval of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to extend the accommodations and the capacity of the different Government schools for teaching the Indian children.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think the Senator has fully answered my question. This increase is $89,000, is it not?

Mr. CALL. The Senator refers to the difference between $1,164,350 and $1,253,440?

Mr. PLATT. Yes; it is $89,000, I believe. Now, I wish to know how that is made up. I understand that a portion of it is made up by an addition to compensate for the striking out of the Hampton school, Virginia, and the Lincoln Institution at Philadelphia. Is that true?

Mr. CALL. I so understand. The Senator will find all the details of the bill as we proceed. He will find where the difference in the appropriation is made up.

Mr. PLATT. The reason why I call attention to this item at the present time is because further on in the bill the special appropriation for the Hampton school, Virginia, $20,040, and for the Lincoln Institution at Philadelphia, $33,400, is proposed to be stricken out by the committee, and I suppose this addition has been made at this point because those items are stricken out in another place. In other words, this involves the question whether those items are to be stricken out and the money placed in the hands of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to do as he pleases with it.

Mr. CALL. The committee adopted the policy recommended by the Secretary of the Interior of abolishing all denominational schools. There may have been some mistake as to what were denominational schools, but upon the best information the committee could get they struck from the bill all denominational schools and added to the Government schools to the extent of their capacity. In doing that the Hampton school and the Lincoln school were classed as denominational.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg to say in reply to what has fallen from the Senator from Florida that the Indian school at Hampton is in no sense a denominational school, and how such an idea arose I can not understand.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Virginia permit me?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator in charge of the bill be willing to pass over this item for the increase of the money which is to be put in the hands of the Commissioner until we come to the two items providing for the Hampton school and the Lincoln school?

Mr. CALL. If the Senator desires it, I am willing that that course shall be pursued.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to make an explanation in regard to this appropriation. It may save the time of the Senate. At the last session of Congress we appropriated $1,040,000 for this purpose. In the House of Representatives, in this bill that amount was increased by $124,350, and that was the amount appropriated in the last Indian appropriation act for the support of schools said to be under the control of the Catholic Church. All the schools under the control of the Catholic Church were stricken out of this bill, but the amount that was appropriated for them last year was put into the aggregate amount allowed for Indian schools.

We found in the bill two schools. I do not call them denominational schools, but they are Protestant schools in contradistinction from Catholic schools. One is at Philadelphia and the other at Hampton. We struck them out. The amount appropriated for them is $53,440. We put that amount in, increasing the appropriation made by the House, adding an additional sum to it, in order that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior may have ample funds to purchase all the school buildings of any denomination, Protestant or Catholic, upon the reservations and establish there Government schools. We have taken out of the bill everything that is Catholic and everything that is Protestant. We have separated eternally and forever, so far as we can, church and state, and Protestants have no right to complain, nor have Catholics.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. President—

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator from Virginia permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. HUNTON. I beg pardon; I have been interrupted three or four times and I beg leave to finish the few remarks I wish to submit on this subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia will proceed.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. President, I am not at all satisfied with the explanation given either by the Senator from Florida in charge of the bill or the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. The Senator from Florida says that the two denominational schools, one at Philadelphia and the other at Hampton, have been excluded from appropriations. In regard to the school at Hampton, I take pleasure in saying that it is in no sense of the word a denominational school. I have before me a letter from the superintendent of that school, Mr. Frissell, in which he says that all denominations are represented in the school. The letter is as follows:

HAMPTON NORMAL AND AGRICULTURAL INSTITUTE,
Hampton, Va., February 9, 1895.

MY DEAR SIR: I send you by this mail some statements in regard to the work of the Hampton school, in response to your suggestion.

This institute, as you well know, is undenominational in character, being controlled by a board of trustees representing six different religious denominations, no one of which has a majority. Our present chaplain is a Congregationalist; his assistant, an Episcopalian, and his predecessor was a Presbyterian. The Baptist students are met regularly by a Baptist clergyman who administers communion to them. Catholic as well as Protestant students come to us, and we receive support from friends of all sects.

To those acquainted with these facts the claim which I understand has caused the withdrawal of this school from the appropriation bill when before the subcommittee of the Senate seems manifestly unjust. The Government usually allows $187 apiece for 120 Indians, and considering what this school has done through General Armstrong for the industrial education of the Indian in the West, it seems as if this support was deserved.

I send by this mail a number of documents which give an account of what Hampton students have accomplished in the West, and some testimonies as to the results of Hampton's work there. The part which General Armstrong and the Hampton school have had in the starting of industrial training among the Indians seems to us to entitle it to the continued help from the Government and to a place in the appropriation bill.

Thanking you for your kind interest, I remain, very truly, yours,
H. B. FRISSELL.

HON. EPPA HUNTON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

That disposes of the statement made by the Senator from Florida in charge of the bill. I say to the Senate that in no sense of the word could the school at Hampton be considered denominational, because, as the superintendent states in the letter before me, all denominations are represented on the board of trustees and in the professors who are conducting the school.

Mr. President, I am amazed to find that out of the number of Indian schools provided for heretofore all have been provided for in the bill under consideration except two, the one at Philadelphia and the other at Hampton, Va.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are 15 or 20 left out of the bill.

Mr. HUNTON. They were not put in in the House, then.

Mr. COCKRELL. They were not put in in the House, but they have always been in heretofore.

Mr. HUNTON. I am talking about the bill as it comes from the House. Every school provided for in the bill as it came from the House to the Senate is provided for except the Philadelphia school and the Hampton school.

Mr. COCKRELL. Every other school provided for in the bill is a Government school.

Mr. HUNTON. This is a Government school.

Mr. COCKRELL. I beg pardon; it is not a Government school.

Mr. HUNTON. It is supported by Government appropriations. In regard to the explanation made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, he tells the Senate that there is a sum in the general appropriation of one million two hundred and some odd thousand dollars, part of which may be appropriated by the Secretary of the Interior to support these schools by contract.

Mr. President, that does not meet the case at all. It provides that the Secretary of the Interior may make contracts, but only with the present contract schools, for the education of Indian pupils during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and expend not exceeding 80 per cent of the present appropriation. I can not understand for the life of me why these two schools are to be cut down 80 per cent of the appropriation which has been allowed to them for years and years, while all the other schools in the bill before us have the full quota appropriated for them.

The Secretary of the Interior has estimated, and it is sent to us in the Book of Estimates, for the support and education of 120 Indian pupils at the school at Hampton, Va., $20,040. That sum, I understand, has been appropriated year after year for a long period of time for the education of Indian students at the Indian school at Hampton, Va. Why this declaration and estimate of the Secretary of the Interior is overruled by the Committee on Appropriations I am at a loss to understand, because we do know that the school at Hampton under the recent care of General Armstrong, of the Indian Department, has educated many Indians who have gone West among the Indian tribes and have been of invaluable service in civilizing and educating the Indian tribes of the West.

Therefore, Mr. President, I protest most earnestly against the singling out of the Hampton school, in Virginia, as well as the Philadelphia school, and striking them out entirely from the list of schools for which an appropriation is annually made. The provision alluded to by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations does not meet the case, because it leaves to the Secretary of the Interior a right to expend 80 per cent, in his discretion. He may or may not expend it. If he concludes to expend it, it is only to be expended to the amount of 80 per cent.

I hope that the amendment of the Senate committee to strike out the appropriation for the support and education of 120 Indian pupils at the school at Hampton will not be agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia has completely covered the ground which I was about to occupy. I will only add one word in behalf of the Lincoln Institute, situated at Philadelphia.

The Lincoln Institute is, I believe, the oldest and, as I know, one of the best of the Indian schools. It is absolutely nondenominational. I have submitted the evidence of that fact to the Senator in charge of the bill. There is nothing in the charter of the institution and there is nothing that has ever occurred in its conduct to bring it within the meaning of what is intended by the term a "denominational school." Some of its teachers belong to one denomination and some to another. It has a number of Roman Catholic scholars who attend Roman Catholic churches. None who have reached the age of discretion are influenced in their choice of the church they attend. So there is no reason, so far as the line which the Senator from Missouri intends to draw is concerned, for dealing so harshly as the Senate committee proposes to deal with the Lincoln Institute.

The question which the Senator from Virginia mentioned is, after all, not whether the denominational schools, if these are denominational schools, shall be stricken down in these two instances, but whether they shall continue in the list of the annual recipients of the charity of the Government, as they have been for years heretofore, or shall become mendicants at the Interior Department. I do not wish to see the Lincoln Institute pass into the latter category. I preface that I have all confidence in the present Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. There is no doubt of the intention of the Committee on Appropriations, because the amount it has increased this appropriation, it will be noticed, is $253,440. The exact amount of the appropriation for the Hampton school and the Lincoln Institute at Philadelphia is $53,440. That increase has been added for the purpose of giving that amount to those two schools. The attempt of the committee is not to suppress the schools as denominational schools, but merely to hand the funds over to the Secretary of the Interior, instead of having them pass through the regular channels of the Treasury as formerly.

I have only to repeat what I said, that I have all confidence in those who will at present administer this fund that they will carry out the intention of Congress. Yet a new king may arise who knew not Joseph, and if these schools lose their present status and go off the list of the recipients of the annual appropriations of the Government they may finally disappear absolutely as objects of its charity and bounty, when they are among the very worthiest objects that can be provided for by this appropriation bill.

I sincerely trust that the Senator in charge of the bill will allow the words "fifty-three thousand four hundred and forty," in lines 23 and 24, to be stricken out, and the committee amendment, from the fourth to the tenth line, on page 77, to be voted down. The propositions ought to go together, of course. Does the Senator from Florida in charge of the bill object to that proposition?

Mr. CALL. I could not hear the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUAY. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill to strike out the word "and," in the twenty-third line, page 72, and the words "fifty-three thousand four hundred and forty," in line 24, and allow the committee amendment striking out lines 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, on page 77, to be voted down, for the reason that these schools are not denominational.

Mr. CALL. So far as I am concerned, and so far as the policy of the committee is concerned, if these be Government schools not in anywise connected with the sectarian question, Protestant or Catholic, I should have no objection to the change in the bill proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania. If they are not it would be violating the great public opinion of the Protestant and the Catholic religious bodies of this country that have united in a demand that there shall be no more denominational schools, in order to avoid religious strife. As the bill first came to the Senate it had in it a new denominational school and a provision made for it.

Mr. DANIEL. May I ask of the Senator what school that was? Where is it situated?

Mr. COCKRELL. That school got into the bill by mistake. The bill was recalled and it was stricken out.

Mr. CALL. It aroused great feeling among the religious communities throughout the country. Representations were made here from different quarters, particularly on the part of the Catholic people. The committee have sought earnestly to adopt impartially the policy which has been agreed upon of nonsectarian or Government schools without discriminating in favor of one or the other of the denominations of the country.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator from Florida inform me to what denominational school he refers?

Mr. CALL. I do not remember the name, but it is to be found in the report.

Mr. DANIEL. It is not involved in this discussion in any way, and it is not in this bill.

Mr. CALL. Oh, no. I am speaking of what I should be willing to do. I would agree to the amendment of the Senator, provided it can be shown that it is not in any sense of the word a Protestant, a Catholic, or a denominational school; and I am saying that there is a great public sentiment throughout the country, Protestant sentiment and the sentiment of all other denominations—

Mr. HUNTON. Will the Senator from Florida allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. HUNTON. I want to ask upon what information the Senator bases the statement that the Indian school at Hampton is a denominational school?

Mr. CALL. I have never made such a statement as the Senator from Virginia attributes to me.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg pardon. I thought the Senator had.

Mr. CALL. I said the information before the committee was that the instructors and professors and some of the persons conducting religious services at that school were Protestants. Whether that is true or not I do not know. I have not stated that either the Hampton school or the Lincoln school was a Protestant school.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. Is the Senator opposed to an appropriation to schools because the teachers happen to be religious persons?

Mr. CALL. By no means, but I am in favor of obeying the will of the religious people of this country, that there shall be no sectarian schools supported by the Government. That is what I am in favor of, and that is what we are seeking to do. If the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Pennsylvania can establish the fact that these are not denominational and Protestant schools and are not open to the objection and the censure of this great body of public sentiment on that subject I shall have no objection to an appropriation being made for them.

Mr. HUNTON. Allow me to say to the Senator that I hope he heard me read the letter from a gentleman whose character can not be assailed for truth and veracity, in which he stated that the Hampton school is in no sense a denominational school, and in which he gives the religious convictions of the teachers and trustees. It is, therefore, in no sense a denominational school, and I call upon the Senator from Florida in charge of the bill to redeem his pledge and let the amendment of the committee go out of the bill.

Mr. CALL. The Senator must first make out his case.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida a question.

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is the Senator from Florida, or some member of the Committee on Appropriations, prepared to tell us what kind of schools these are? Will the Senator from Florida tell us, does he rely upon his own information or upon statements made by Senators during the debate, and did the committee have in its possession some sort of evidence which would show what kind of schools these are? Are they Government schools? Is religion taught in the schools? Are they conducted under some religious organization, or are they exclusively Government schools? Have they received pay outside of the pay they receive from the Government? Is there not some Senator upon the Appropriations Committee with intelligence enough and information enough to tell us something about these schools, so that we may be informed regarding them?

Mr. CALL. If we had the Senator from Colorado, with his omniscience, upon that committee—

Mr. WOLCOTT. No, Mr. President; you would not have my omniscience, but you would not have me standing on my feet in the last days of the session saying I would accept the statement of a couple of Senators as to whether a school was denominational or not, and you would find me, I trust, prepared to state for the information of the Senate what kind of schools these are.

I am not finding fault; I am seriously and anxiously seeking for information in order to vote intelligently upon this question, which is a burning question everywhere, and there are many Senators here who want to vote with care and with the exercise of intelligence upon this question, and we are entitled to information from somebody as to what sort of schools these are.

Mr. CALL. Nor will the Senator from Colorado find any member of the Committee on Appropriations who, like him, has failed to inform himself by the public records of this country of the facts which are in them in regard to these various schools.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then I will ask the Senator to tell us what they are, if he knows. Are these schools religious schools or are they not?

Mr. CALL. It is not the business of the Senator from Florida to educate the Senator from Colorado [laughter], but, ex gratia, I will tell the Senator from Colorado that which he ought to have known from his own study and research, that these schools have been classed as a kind of half-and-half schools—

Mr. WOLCOTT. Oh!

Mr. CALL. Sustained by Government aid and understood to be under Protestant influences. That is the record.

What constitutes a denominational school, or what not, may be a nice question. I am not prepared, being a Protestant, to sit in judgment as to these institutions. If they do not teach sectarian doctrines—and of that there is no record except the information that we had that the religious teachers in these institutions were Protestants, and that the services conducted were Protestant services, and not Catholic services—

Mr. WOLCOTT. We do not ask the Senator from Florida to be a judge; we ask him to be a witness, and to tell us something. He now tells us that these schools are a "kind of half-and-half schools," that they are half Protestant and half Government, as I understand him. [Laughter.] Am I rightly informed?

Mr. CALL. Oh, no; the Senator is not right in that.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then I should like to have the Senator state what he does say they are.

Mr. CALL. I said they were of doubtful denominational character. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. In other words, Mr. President, does the Senator mean that they are not above suspicion? [Laughter.]

Mr. CALL. Not above suspicion; suspicion in this: If the Senator, who is a very bright man, will study a little while, he will see that if a school, if it be a Government school, in the sense of receiving aid from the Government, has services conducted in it by Catholics it would be termed a denominational school though not under the organization of the Catholic Church, and it might properly be said to be of a doubtful denominational character. If it were a school receiving Government aid, and its teachers and instructors were Protestants and its religious exercises were Protestant, what would the Senator from Colorado call it?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will say to the Senator from Florida that I am sincerely anxious to get light upon this question, and if the Senator from Florida is classing schools as Protestant or Catholic because of the character of the religious services held in them on the Sabbath, that is one question. If it be a question as to whether or not they receive sectarian help or whether they are conducted under sectarian auspices, that is another question. I think we are entitled, without flippancy, to some sort of explanation from the Senator. If he is not prepared to state his own views, perhaps some member of the Committee on Appropriations can state what their investigations disclose as to the character of these schools.

A school should not be classed as a denominational school because upon the Sabbath there are some sort of religious services held in it. That does not make a denominational school. I apprehend that what enters into the characteristics which make a denominational school is the character of the teaching that is carried on there.

I do not know as to these particular schools, whether or not there is any religious teaching carried on in them. I should like to know. The Committee on Appropriations should have known before they dealt with this question and struck out this amendment, and I ask the Senator in good faith again, if he can tell us, or if some member of the Committee on Appropriations can tell us, the character of these schools and to what extent they are denominational?

Mr. CALL. The Senator wants to know how many Protestant prayers and Protestant sermons are delivered there.

Mr. WOLCOTT. No, Mr. President, my question is far more serious than that. My question asks for a much more intelligent view than the Senator from Florida seems to be possessed of. [Laughter.] I am asking in the utmost good faith, and I have asked again and again, and I am not to be put aside by these kinds of suggestions that I do not know what I ought to know. I am entitled to this information from the Senator, and the Senate is entitled to it, and no committee should assume to strike out or to put in a bill appropriations of thousands of dollars of the people's money in behalf of an institution, and not be ready to tell us why existing appropriations for years have been stricken out or why appropriations have been put in which were not in the bill before.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, although not a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I will say that it seems to me this is really a perfectly simple question, notwithstanding it has been somewhat obscured by the explanations which have come from that committee. [Laughter.]

The sectarian or denominational schools, as I think is generally understood, are schools which are established by any religious organization and sustained by different sects and churches throughout this country.

The Secretary of the Interior recommended that those schools established and sustained by the different church organizations in this country should be gradually abolished. I think it was an eminently wise suggestion. The House of Representatives embodied that policy in this bill, as will be seen on page 73. That House also made the usual appropriations for schools at Hampton, Va., and for the Lincoln school at Philadelphia, holding that those were not denominational schools under the accepted definition. The Senate Committee on Appropriations has stricken out the declaration of policy as to sectarian schools, and has also stricken out the several appropriations made for those two schools.

Those two schools are not sectarian or denominational within the accepted definition of the word. They were not established by churches; they are simply charitable schools. Persons of all sects have contributed to them; persons of all forms of religious belief are educated at them; teachers and trustees of all forms of faith take part in their government. They are charitable schools, purely philanthropic enterprises, with no connection with church organizations or religious denominations. It is utterly unfair to put Hampton and Lincoln Institute in the same class of schools as those provided against on page 73.

They have never been known as sectarian or denominational schools. They do not belong in that class because they were not established, and they have not been supported or sustained by any religious or church organization; and the striking out of the provision of this clause for those two schools simply confuses the issue.

The main question here is as to the House policy and the policy of the Secretary of the Interior which provides for the abolition gradually of all sectarian schools, that is, all schools established and sustained by the churches not merely for the purpose of giving a secular education, but giving also a religious education, and these two schools which have been under discussion so far have nothing to do with it. They are merely philanthropic and charitable enterprises, and ought not to have been stricken out.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I coincide with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] so heartily, that he has nearly anticipated all I desired to say.

This question is a very delicate one; that everybody acknowledges. These religious denominations became jealous of each other, and the only way apparently to settle the matter was to resort to the action of Congress. The two Houses are aiming to take away direct support from the schools that were in the absolute control of the governing powers of ecclesiastical organizations, and which, therefore, might be called sectarian or ecclesiastical schools.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am anxious to hear what the Senator is saying, but I can not hear him.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I place myself upon my rights, and stop until there is order in the Senate Chamber.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair requests Senators to abstain from conversation. [A pause.] The Senator from Connecticut will proceed.

Mr. HAWLEY. I take it that the attempt to avoid this alleged evil and serious embarrassment is not to be carried out so far as to exclude anything like religious teaching from any school. When the Government withdraws the pupils from those admirable Catholic schools and admirable Baptist and Methodist and other schools and then puts the children into other schools which it gets up, with fine buildings, and with a corps of teachers, and compels the Indian children to go there, what is to be done then? Are you going to hunt for an Ingersoll to conduct them? You would have to forbid even him from saying anything. Is it to be out of order to utter the Lord's Prayer when school opens? Are we to conduct schools and great institutions of education where it will be against order to acknowledge the Almighty God and Father, and that, too, in a country which is founded upon religious considerations and whose foundations are religious? I take it, it is not intended to make such schools; and I take it, when you have reorganized them in that way, you will employ people of good moral character and intelligence, and I think you will discover to your surprise that there are a good many men and a good many women who will not teach for you unless they can utter a prayer or teach the children the general fundamental principles of all religions—things which are held in common. I should rather have a Catholic school governed by Jesuits than to have a school with no God in it.

If there be a school in the United States—I speak from personal knowledge and acquaintance with the sainted Armstrong and with Frissell and others who conduct that great school at Hampton—if there be a school that can be said at the same time sincerely and properly to be not ecclesiastical or sectarian it is that school visited by Congregationalists at one time and Episcopalians at another, and Catholic priests come, as they used to come to our regiments in the war, to supply the religious wants of the pupils. I have great admiration for it.

There are few men who live in the country like Armstrong, who combine in such marvelous degree a high enthusiasm for education and for great moral teaching, and at the same time, to use a common expression, level-headed common sense and business capacity throughout it all. Therefore I feel badly when I see the blue pencil drawn against Hampton. I do not think it comes within the spirit of this new change at all.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I think I can answer the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] in regard to the sectarian character of the school at Hampton at any rate. Mr. Frissell, the principal of that school, was at Yale with me. He is a most splendid Christian gentleman, and his statements I think can be taken with absolute safety. He writes to me, and I take this opportunity to read his letter.

Mr. COCKRELL. He is the principal of the school now, and was the former regular chaplain at the same school.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will read a letter from him as to the sectarian character of the school.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; I know all about that.

Mr. DUBOIS. I repeat to the Senator from Missouri that I have known Mr. Frissell for twenty-five years. There is not a more honorable Christian gentleman in the world than he.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no doubt about that.

Mr. DUBOIS. What Mr. Frissell says can be taken with perfect safety as being true. He writes to me as follows:

I understand that the subcommittee of the Senate has withdrawn the Hampton school from the Indian appropriation bill passed by the House on the belief that it is a sectarian school. To those acquainted with this work the claim seems most unjust, as prominence has always been given to the nonsectarian character of the school. Our chaplain is a Congregationalist and his assistant an Episcopalian. His predecessor was a Presbyterian. The Baptist students are met regularly by a Baptist clergyman for the administration of communion. The school itself is governed by a board of trustees representing six different denominations, no one of which is in the majority. We receive Catholic students here and help from Catholic friends.

To my mind, at any rate, that establishes the nonsectarian character of that school. I have been there also, and have always understood that it was not a sectarian school. If this appropriation is to be withdrawn from Hampton on the ground that it is a sectarian school, I think it would be unjust. I think the provision ought not to be stricken out unless it be for some other reason. I shall not support the committee amendment.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, it would be impossible to conceive of any educational institution which was more nonsectarian than Hampton school. It is a normal institute and an industrial school. It was founded just after the war by General Armstrong, who was born in the Hawaiian Islands, being the son of a missionary, who came to this country and participated in the late war as an officer of the Federal Army, and after the war became very much interested in the education of the freedmen. The general assembly of Virginia, having great confidence in him and in this school which he there established, appropriated a large portion of land scrip which was donated by the Federal Government to that State to this school for the education of the freedmen.

General Armstrong was so distinguished as an educator and had to so large an extent the confidence of all classes of people that, in connection with this normal institute and industrial school for the education of the freedmen, it became a contract school for the education of the Indians. His work in their education was as distinguished for its efficiency as his work in the education of the freedmen.

As we understand the statement of the Committee on Appropriations made to us to-day, they were instigated in the movement to eliminate some schools and appropriations from this bill by the policy recommended by the Secretary of the Interior of eliminating sectarian schools from governmental appropriations. That policy is, in my judgment, a wholesome one and a just one, and one in accordance with the spirit of our Constitution, our institutions, and the public sentiment of the great body of our people; but they overshot the mark when they selected Hampton Institute and the Lincoln school of Philadelphia as fit schools to be eliminated from this bill.

I had before me, and was about to read when the Senator who has just taken his seat read, the letter from the superintendent, who was formerly the chaplain of that institution, and who states that six different denominations are represented upon the board of trustees, and that no one is in the majority.

Mr. CALL. Are they not all Protestants?

Mr. DANIEL. They happen to be all Protestants, and that might be said of many a corps of professors in this country and of many bodies of men. The Protestant religion is generally the religion of the American people, and I do not think that any portion of our people are to be disfranchised and distinguished by being denied the religious emoluments and favors of Government by the chance fact that a certain body of them happen to be Protestants.

The school was not established under denominational influence; it is not maintained under denominational influence; and the mere happening of the fact that portions of the board of trustees, or all of them, may belong to any church, Catholic or Protestant, is not a sufficient matter to be made the subject of invidious remark.

Certainly, Mr. President, it was not in the interest of economy that the Appropriations Committee selected Hampton Institute and Lincoln school as objects to be slighted, for it will be seen on page 73 of the bill that the net increase of appropriation between the two items, one of which they have enlarged and the other diminished, is $36,000.

Mr. President, I prefer the bill as it came from the House. It is more economical; it is more in accordance with the established policy of our Government; and it is evident, if, indeed, it is not confessed, that the theory upon which it is proposed to deny these schools this benefit, is a theory contradicted by the facts in the case.

ANNIE M. GREENE.

Mr. PALMER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 905) granting a pension to Annie M. Greene, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out the word "twelve" and insert the word "ten;" and the House agree to the same.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8479) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I want the Senate to distinctly understand exactly the position, particularly of the subcommittee which acted upon this bill, and then they can do just as they please with the matter.

I am a Protestant of Protestants, but I shall not ask for Protestant institutions what I deny to Catholic institutions. When we say that church and state shall be separated, we mean it. This bill came to us with some Catholic institutions which were named in former laws stricken out. They have been for years and years named specifically in every appropriation bill, and money has been appropriated for their support. That commenced under President Grant's Administration, when the different religious denominations were invited to build their schools, take charge of certain Indian reservations, and name the Indian agents, and they were appointed upon the direct recommendation of the church authorities. Those schools have been maintained until the present time. They were named in the last annual appropriation bill. The House struck them all out. We presumed it was because they were Catholic schools.

They retained in the bill two schools which are Protestant schools as fully and completely as any Protestant school can exist. We did not believe it was fair or just or right from the Protestant standpoint to leave out all the Catholic institutions and to retain over the protest of the Catholic Church and its authorities affected by this those Protestant schools.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President—

Mr. COCKRELL. Wait a moment until I can make my explanation.

Mr. QUAY. Where is the evidence that either of these schools is a Protestant school?

Mr. COCKRELL. There is abundant evidence. They do not deny it. No man can deny it.

Mr. HOAR. What does the Senator from Missouri mean by "Protestant?"

Mr. COCKRELL. They are under the charge of Protestants exclusively.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. I am going to make my explanation. I know about these schools as well as any other Senator. It was said as to the Lincoln school that when a Catholic child receiving instruction there at the expense of the Government wanted to attend a Catholic church one of the teachers replied that the Episcopal religion was good enough for that Indian pupil. I know that those schools receive Catholics. Certainly they do. The Catholic University, here in Washington, will receive Protestants. All the great schools receive Protestants, Catholics, Mohammedans, Hindoos, or any other class of people. Yet they are denominational, and they are Catholic or they are Protestant. I know the gentleman in charge at Hampton. He is an able Presbyterian minister, a man of high character and standing. Yet he is a Protestant, and his corps of teachers are Protestants, and the controllers of the school are Protestants. As a matter of course there are some Catholics there. So it is at Lincoln.

Now, we meant to do exact justice. We did not want, in view of the excitement in the country over the support given by the Government to Catholic or Protestant institutions, to subject ourselves to criticism. We wanted to make a clean sweep and divorce the Government forever from Catholicism or Protestantism so far as that was concerned and make the schools Government schools just like the other schools are to-day. In those Government schools will be Catholics and Protestants, but it will not be a distinct recognition of either Catholicism or Protestantism.

Mr. HAWLEY. Nor is the Hampton school a recognition of either.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a recognition, direct and unequivocal, and it is so considered by everybody except those connected with the school and the friends of it, and it has good friends. I have been a friend of it, but I can not stand by it now when it is making itself obnoxious to the charge of trying to drive out every Catholic school from Government support and yet retain Government support for Protestant schools.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Missouri is very unjust. Hampton is doing nothing here as a school. I speak because I have known it for many years. I speak for the side of justice and fair play. We know what a Catholic school or an Episcopal school is. It is governed by ecclesiastical authorities, the pupils are taught by Catholic or Episcopal teachers, and the doctrines of the church are inculcated as a part of the regular course of education. That is all good; I find no fault with it, but that is distinctly an ecclesiastical and church school. But a school like Hampton teaches no doctrine, no distinctive creed; it teaches the belief of no particular church.

Mr. COCKRELL. We understand that. There is no misunderstanding about it. I wish to get through with my explanation.

We struck out these two schools. What did we do? There seems to be a general misunderstanding as to the effect of the 20 per cent reduction. We added to the amount provided here an amount equal to the sum paid to Lincoln and to Hampton, just as the other House of last year added to the appropriation allowed in 1895 to the Catholic schools, which have been stricken out.

Now, I wish to say a few words on the subject of the operation of the 20 per cent reduction, and I beg Senators to pay some attention to this matter, because it is not wholly understood. What is to be the operation of the 20 per cent reduction? Is the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to reduce the number of students at Hampton 20 per cent or at the Lincoln school 20 per cent?

Will he reduce the amount he will pay 20 per cent at any of those schools? Not at all. Under this very law and under this very appropriation the Commissioner of Indian Affairs told us expressly that he should continue the same number of students for the coming fiscal year at Hampton and at the Lincoln Institute that he had already at those schools.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me get through with my explanation. Then I will answer any question the Senator from Massachusetts may ask.

What will the Commissioner of Indian Affairs do with this 20 per cent reduction? As I said, he will not reduce the price paid to any school; he will not reduce the number of students furnished to any school, but he will wherever the students of a school can be taken from that school and put into a Government school; he will abolish the school entirely and thereby make a 20 per cent reduction of the amount appropriated.

He will continue that system until he has made all the schools Government schools. There are plenty of schools upon the reservations, and we have put in the bill the word "purchase," which is a distinct declaration that he shall purchase the schools on the reservations and turn the pupils into a building purchased and paid for by the Government—Government property—and make it a Government school. As long as appropriations are made for contract schools his object will be to maintain at the contract school, whose students can not be conveniently turned over to the Government schools, the same number of pupils and give the schools the same pay. Now I will answer the question of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to ask the Senator from Missouri, as a part of his explanation, what there is that makes Hampton a Protestant school that does not make West Point or Annapolis a Protestant school?

Mr. COCKRELL. Because it is not under Government control, directly or indirectly. It is under the control of individual members of Protestant churches, and just as much so as other schools are under Catholic control.

Mr. HOAR. How does the fact that it is under private and not public control make it any more a Protestant school than Annapolis or West Point?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is either under the control of Protestants or Catholics; and being under the control of Protestants, it has made itself obnoxious to the charge that it is the support of a Protestant school by Government aid. We desire to divorce the Government wholly and absolutely from any school and make all of our schools Government schools just as soon as we can, and have no contract schools.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator still does not get my point. I understand this school is under the control of Protestants; I suppose it is, from what the Senator has said. The Senate is under the control of Protestants; the House of Representatives and the Cabinet are under the control of Protestants. There are 100 private schools in my State that are under the control of Protestants. But what is there in it that makes it a Protestant school if the Protestant who controls it does not wield the school in the interest of his Protestantism and does not teach Protestantism?

Mr. COCKRELL. We can not go into an investigation of how far they undertake to exercise specifically denominational control. It is sufficient to know that it is not a Government school, that it is a Protestant school, and that the Catholics have made their fight against it just as the Protestants have made their fight against other schools. So far as we are concerned we take it out of the controversy and place the Government where it can not be accused of favoritism to either one side or the other.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator from Missouri now allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. DANIEL. The University of Virginia—

Mr. COCKRELL. I am not going to answer abstract questions of that kind. I am not discussing that question, and I do not intend to discuss it.

Mr. DANIEL. The Senator from Missouri yielded to me to ask a question.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly; ask it.

Mr. DANIEL. The Senator can answer it or not as he pleases.

Mr. COCKRELL. Go on and ask it.

Mr. DANIEL. I was about to ask the Senator a respectful question, and he seems to be in such a fidget over this matter that he can not listen to it after he has yielded.

The University of Virginia, as I was about to say, was founded by Thomas Jefferson as a nondenominational university. It chances that all of its professors are Protestants, just as it chances that those at Hampton are Protestants. I wish to know if he would call the University of Virginia a denominational school, and, if not, what is the distinction between the two?

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that the Senator's question?

Mr. DANIEL. It is.

Mr. COCKRELL. That has nothing to do with this discussion, and I do not propose to discuss it.

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me?

Mr. COCKRELL. Now wait a moment. I am not going to be led off into a discussion of anything that is not pertinent.

It does not make one particle of difference to me how this question is determined. I have given my views. We took all the pains we possibly could to avoid a controversy between Christian denominations, and to bring about peace and harmony instead of contention and criticism. I for one feel that I would not have done my duty as a Protestant if I had not recommended that these two schools be stricken out and that the Government should treat all alike. We have made provision, as I said, so that all the schools, Catholic and Protestant, will be maintained until an arrangement is made for Government schools. The pupils will then be turned over to the Government schools and educated.

They will be turned over just as rapidly as the Government can buy school buildings already erected, wherever they may be convenient and accessible, or can erect other buildings to which the students in the contract schools can be transferred. I hope to see the time come when there shall be no Indian contract schools, and when all the schools will be under the control of the Government, just as we intend.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator from Missouri permit me to ask him a question? I feel greatly obliged to him for the fearless manner in which he has met the question here to-day. I understood him to say, toward the close of his remarks, that under the present system of appropriation there will still be probably the same number of scholars educated at Hampton and Lincoln as in other years.

Mr. COCKRELL. Until the system is changed.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Until the whole system of appropriations for this purpose is changed the schools will be the recipient of as much patronage from the Government at the same price as they would receive under a specific appropriation. Is that true of all schools, Protestant and Catholic?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is true, as I understand. The system will be just as it was last year. Last year they aimed to make a 20 per cent reduction. Instead, as many supposed, of taking 20 per cent off the amount paid that school or this school or reducing the number of students by 20 per cent, they simply abolished three different schools, two Protestant and one Catholic, or two Catholic and one Protestant. That took away 20 per cent of the appropriation. They were schools where the pupils could be turned immediately into Government schools.

The Commissioner was very explicit on that question. He seems to have had his mind fully made up and his whole plan arranged, which is that if this proposition passes he will pick out this school and that school, where he can either purchase a building already erected, or can erect a building that will accommodate all the pupils who are in certain Catholic or Protestant schools, and turn them over to the Government school and stop that one school until he has reduced the amount appropriated 20 per cent. So it will take four years probably, before any effect is had on certain schools, particularly training schools and schools of that kind.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator will please explain to me, if he will, why the committee has stricken out the amendment which provides that at the end of five years the contract schools shall cease.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was not done by the subcommittee. It is not a part and parcel of the plan recommended by the subcommittee.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Was the Senator from Missouri one of the subcommittee?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], and myself were the subcommittee. So far as I am concerned, I hope that provision will not be agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if there is a provision in the bill for purchasing the buildings, and the school furniture therein, which have heretofore been used for contract schools?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, sir. We have increased the amount not only over and above what is sufficient to keep the same number of students at the same price at Hampton and Lincoln, but we have gone beyond that and beyond the amount the Commissioner of Indian Affairs said he wanted. He said the amount he already had was sufficient, but our subcommittee, after full consideration of it and in order that there might be no direct or indirect charge against anybody of favoring Protestantism or Catholicism or of taking Indian pupils out of Indian schools and denying them the privilege of Government schools, put in an increased amount, so that the Commissioner has ample authority to furnish school buildings, either by purchasing those existing or by erecting new ones.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if it is the policy of the committee to purchase the denominational school buildings and their furniture, where the owners are willing to sell?

Mr. COCKRELL. We are certainly in favor of that, and I understand there is no question that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is in favor of it. Where a building is already erected and is used for school purposes, and is suitable for such use, he will purchase it every time. Quite a number of buildings, he told us, were offered the Department, one, I believe, in a very suitable place. The owners offered it to the Government if the Government would simply pay for the furniture that is in it. They offered the building gratis. The Commissioner said he would have no trouble, even without the increased amount we propose to give him, in obtaining by purchase or by erection buildings sufficient to accommodate a sufficient number of students to make the reduction of 20 per cent.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is entirely within the discretion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as to whether he will purchase the contract school buildings or not.

Mr. COCKRELL. Entirely so.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish at this time to offer an amendment to the bill on this subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the word "Alaska," in line 2, page 73, down to and including the word "cease," in line 11, and insert:

Provided, That $515,000 of said sum of $1,253,440 shall be expended in support of schools with which contracts have heretofore been made: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, expend 20 per cent of said sum of $515,000 in the purchase of the property of such contract schools as may be offered for sale.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I think when the Senate understands the purpose of the House provision there will not be very much trouble about this question.

To go back and commence with the history of the contract system, very briefly stated, it is that it grew up in the early days in an attempt to educate Indians, commencing about twenty years ago. Just before that General Grant parceled out all the Indian agents to the various churches of the country, and he allowed them to select the agents, or to recommend them to him at least. For instance, the Protestant Episcopal Church had so many agents, the Methodist so many, the Baptist so many, the Catholic so many. Practically they took charge of the education and the morals of the Indians on the reservations. It was found that practically it did not work well. Nobody who could be reached was found responsible for the appointment of those agents. A great many broken-down ministers or ministers who had failed to be acceptable to their congregations were sent out as agents. When I went into the Interior Department in 1889 I found that there was great complaint of a lack of intelligence and aggressive force on the part of the agents of the Department. With a good deal of difficulty and with a good deal of controversy with the church people I abandoned that system. There has been a decided improvement ever since, so far as the agents are concerned.

I found also the contract system, by which the Government would contract with a church school to furnish so many students, and generally at a less price than the Government could afford to educate the pupils in their own schools. For myself, I did not believe that was good policy. I attempted to break it up from the very beginning. I came to the proper committees of Congress and urged that the Department should be furnished with sufficient money to put the children who were then in contract schools into Government schools. But it was found that by doing so we should be compelled to increase the appropriations, and in the interest, as it was supposed, of economy it was denied. So the system, which was small in the beginning, gradually extended year after year.

After awhile those who were particularly interested in a school like Hampton or Lincoln university, at Philadelphia, or the Holy Family, in Montana, or some other school, would come to Congress for fear they would not get so much out of the Interior Department as they might get here through an appropriation specifically for a particular school. That system was maintained until there was a large number of schools, Baptist schools, Methodist schools, Presbyterian schools, Quaker schools, and Catholic schools, and I think one or two Moravian schools. The Catholics complained that they were not having their share of the patronage of the Government in this direction. They had been active in maintaining schools at the different agencies for the religious education of the Indian children even before the Government of the United States began to take any active steps toward the education of the Indian. Gradually, I think, the Catholics succeeded in getting more than their share in proportion to their number as a denomination, and a good deal of complaint was made all over the country about it.

We might just as well talk plainly about the matter. An organization has grown up in this country which insists that there shall be a disavowance of state and church, and, Mr. President, in that I heartily concur, although I do not mean to say that I concur in all of the ideas of the association. But I am one of those who believe that church and state can not well be mixed in this country or any other. I believe that if the Government of the United States owes an obligation to the Indians to educate them it is able to educate them without any charity on the part of church people or anybody else. I think the church people are entitled to immense credit for what they have done. They have stimulated and hastened action on the part of the Government beyond all question; and their effort in that behalf is not to be spoken of lightly. But about three or four years ago there arose among the Protestant churches which held those contracts a disinclination to continue. I think the feeling grew out of the fact that it looked to them as though the practice were going to grow into a great big system, and that there would be more great sectarian connection between the Government and its agency in the schools than there ought to be. So they began gradually to withdraw.

Amongst the first, I think, was the great Methodist Church, which had maintained quite a number of schools. It withdrew. The action of the general conference was very decided that there should be no further contracts entered into on their part. So they closed their schools in some instances, turning their buildings over to the Government, and in many instances turning over their teachers to the Government. Then the Quakers withdrew and the Baptists withdrew, and I think practically all of what might be called the ultradenominational schools were abandoned except those maintained by the Catholics. In the mean time the Catholics increased their schools as the others went out. Nobody ought to blame the Catholics for desiring to do that. It added to their expense; they were making no profit out of it; but it was in accordance with the Catholic policy to get at and reach the children of all denominations if they can, I think, and to give them instruction not only in the ordinary branches but religious instruction as well.

So, as I was saying, this sentiment has grown up very strongly in the country, and there has been a very decided demand that the Government shall disavow its connection with these sectarian schools. That has been urged unreasonably in some sections, I think. When I went home to the State of Colorado last July I was met by at least three committees who insisted that we should close all the denominational schools at once. To that I replied that I had always been in favor of closing the denominational schools, and was prepared to advocate it as fast as the Government could make arrangements to take the children into its own schools, but that I should never vote to turn the Indian children out of a denominational school until the Government had opened an opportunity for them to go into another school; that I would rather the children should attend a Catholic school than no school at all; that any denominational school in my judgment was better than none.

When the pending bill came from the other House we found that every Catholic school was stricken out, and there had been, I think, seven or eight or more of them, and some of them had three or four hundred scholars. There had been no complaint of their management; I do not know that anybody had been complaining anywhere that the schools had not been properly conducted, but they were all stricken out. It was in response to the sentiment that the Government should sever its connection with sectarian education. We found in the bill two schools, one of them pronouncedly a Protestant denominational school, the Lincoln university, as to the methods of which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] has spoken more particularly than I care to do, a very excellent school, principally, I think, for girls. I think I may say they got their first students while I was Secretary of the Interior. I do not know that there has ever been any complaint made against that school except the one where it is alleged they did not allow Catholic children to attend a Catholic church. I spoke to some friends of the school, and they denied that; they said it was not true.

Mr. QUAY. I assert absolutely that it is not true. They permit Catholic children to go to a Catholic church.

Mr. TELLER. That is what I was about to say.

Mr. QUAY. The children attend services outside the institution. Those too small to judge for themselves are, I believe, taken generally to the church of the denomination to which the superintendent happens to belong. Those who have arrived at the age of discretion go where they please. Sometimes there is a superintendent who is of one denomination and sometimes there is a superintendent who is of another denomination. They have some teachers of one denomination and some of another. There is nothing in the charter or by-laws of the organization to prevent teacher, superintendent, or regent from being Catholic, or really, I suppose, from being a man without any faith in the Christian religion. If there is an institution that is not Protestant, that is not Catholic, that is not sectarian in the country perforce of its organization it is Lincoln Institute, although it so happens just now that it is under Protestant control.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Pennsylvania ought to know about it better than I, but I have had some acquaintance with it, and I think I shall not misstate when I say it was under the control and management of the Protestant Episcopal Church when I knew more about it than I know now. I am very certain it was.

I was about to say when the Senator interrupted me that this charge was made against them and denied by them. We found that neither of these two schools, the Lincoln Institute and the school at Hampton, was a Government school. That is certain. They were the only schools in the bill that were not Government schools. They are Protestant schools at least. The committee thought if the policy indicated by the House bill is to be passed, that is, that the Government itself is to take charge of Indian education as soon as possible, at the end of five years at most, we ought simply to put these two Protestant schools exactly where we put the Catholic schools in Montana and other sections of the country, for which we had refused to appropriate. This is all we did.

Mr. President, it does not follow that these schools are to be closed. We were concerned about what would become of the Indian children. We had as much interest in them as anybody. I will say that I think I have myself had as much interest in their education as anybody here, and I think in a weak way I have contributed all my powers would allow in the direction of securing for them an education. We have now about 30,000 Indian children in either Government schools or contract schools. I should like to put them all in Government schools, but I knew we could not do it this year. The Department notified us it would take $1,250,000 in addition to the appropriation estimated for if they were put in Government schools.

Mr. HOAR. How much is to be given for that purpose by the bill?

Mr. TELLER. I can not tell the Senator without going over it.

We have in a lump sum $1,257,000, and then there are a large number of appropriations besides. I can not aggregate them. It has to be a large sum. But if we appropriated the $1,250,000 the schoolhouses could not be provided for them. We had to let the contract system, if it is objectionable, continue. All we could do was to approve of the suggestion of the House to reduce it 20 per cent each year for five years until it should be closed out. That is, I have no doubt, in accordance with what is the sentiment of the American people on this subject. The American people feel that they do not want Indian children educated by any denomination or that the Government shall have any connection with denominational schools.

We sent for the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to learn what we should do in this matter—what would be the result of dropping out these schools by the House; what would be the result if we dropped out the other two, and did not appropriate for them. He said, as stated by the Senator from Missouri, that so far as that was concerned, he should not attempt to reduce the number of students in Hampton 20 per cent and in Lincoln Institute 20 per cent if we left the appropriation in, or if we did not, because that would not be an efficient method of conducting the schools; that he would leave in those schools the same number of children; but wherever he could find a school that could be surrendered and at the same time the Government could afford school opportunities for the children, he would take that school from the hands of the denomination which might have it in hand and make a Government school of it.

Now, there will be nearly as many, there will be 80 per cent as many Indian children in contract schools as there was last year. Eighty per cent they are required to have. The Commissioner will be required to reduce the number 20 per cent, and he gave us to understand that he would not attempt to reduce any more than that number. All the difference there will be is that in the former case we appropriated by name for a school. This year the contract will be made by the Commissioner. The Commissioner can make a contract for the same number of students at Hampton provided for by the House in the bill if he sees fit.

Mr. HOAR. What kind of religious education will the Indian children get in the Government schools?

Mr. TELLER. I was coming to that in a moment, because my friend who sits on my right got enthusiastic and eloquent on the necessity of having some religious education for the Indian children. I will venture to say that there is not a Government school in the United States which does not have not sectarian but religious teaching of some kind. Goto Carlisle with its 750 students. There is not any denominational school anywhere in the United States where there is a better air of Christianity and morality than there is in that Government school.

Nowhere do the children get better instruction as to their duty to themselves and to their country and to their God than at Carlisle, and it is a Government school. There has been no proposition or suggestion, as the Senator from Connecticut would seem to want the public to understand, that we are wiping God and morality out of the schools. There is nothing that warrants him in making a statement like that. They will have religious and moral instruction. They will not be in the line of any denomination; they will not probably have the tenets that the Calvinist taught them, but they will know the great fundamental truths of Christianity and morality, and that is all they need to know. In my judgment, the world would be a good deal better if there was less denominationalism and more broad Christianity taught even in our churches.

I do not know whether we shall in five years put all these children in Government schools or not. I hope we may. I hope the time will not come when any Secretary of the Interior or Commissioner of Indian Affairs will ever feel at liberty to discontinue the moral instruction that has been going on in all the Indian schools from the time they were organized up to the present time.

All there is in this matter is a determination on the part of the House, to which the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate agreed, to which the committee agreed, and to which I trust the Senate will agree, that we shall get rid of any cause of complaint and will not have it said that the Catholics have four or five hundred thousand dollars of this public fund when some other denomination has only $25,000 or $50,000. We will say to the world that we are going to educate these children ourselves, educate them as a great Christian nation will educate its children, whether it be in the common schools or in the colleges. I do not suppose anybody would say that Yale and Harvard are denominational schools, but I think every man would be surprised if he was told the time would ever come when Christianity would not be taught in those great American colleges, not sectarianism, but the true Christianity.

Mr. President, I am myself in favor of the Government discharging its obligation and not turning it over to anybody else.

As fast as we can do it we will put these children in Government schools. What I think is the perfectly fair and honest thing, and incumbent on us to do, is when people have gone out in the West and built Indian schoolhouses, and they now find they do not need them because of their idea that they ought not to be longer connected with the Government, like the Baptists, and the Quakers, and the Methodists, and, ultimately, the Catholics, and when they shall say "We have a schoolhouse that we built here because we thought you would furnish us children and we should maintain a school, it is useless to us," that we shall buy it. Then the Commissioner may buy those buildings and take them off their hands and turn them into Government schools.

This is all I care to say on the subject.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I was not in favor of excluding either the Hampton or the Lincoln school from the full benefit of the former appropriation. I thought it was the wiser policy to have appropriated the full amount of money which would be needed to maintain all of these schools in their utmost capacity, but with directions to the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to purchase, wherever practicable, the school buildings of the different denominations, or the schools under sectarian influence, and turn them into Government schools, leaving to the Interior Department and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs the responsibility of applying this money according to the command of Congress. The committee, however, thought that the end would be better attained by the provision which they have inserted in the bill, which, as the chairman has explained, would under the assurances of the Interior Department maintain these schools to their utmost capacity. Under the appropriation some schools will be discontinued and the money which would be applied to them will be applied to those of greater capacity, and which are nearer to the Indians.

Mr. President, that was the policy which I thought it was wise to adopt. I am a Protestant; but I have no objection to sectarian ideas being taught by sectarian institutions. But I am opposed to the State giving its aid in any shape or in any form to the maintenance of these sectarian schools. I think that wherever Government aid is given sectarian ideas should be prohibited from being taught. I do not agree with the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts. A sectarian school is not a school that is organized by a sect, that is under the domination of a sect, but a school where sectarian doctrines are taught. That is the vital and the essential point. By whatever means such an institution is maintained, if the Government aids in it the Government is aiding in disseminating the sectarian doctrines taught by that institution.

Ever since I have been in the Senate, and at the last session particularly the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and myself united in a protest upon the Indian appropriation bill then pending, against the continuance of the system of Government aid in any shape or in any form to any institution where sectarianism was taught. That is the vital principle and the essential distinction.

Now, Mr. President, I am the organ here of the Committee on Appropriations, not representing my own ideas but theirs, for I was in favor of continuing upon the facts as then stated the appropriation to these two schools and inserting in the bill a provision that no sectarianism should be taught there, whatever might be the faith of the professors and the teachers at those institutions, and that the Government would see that its money was not expended in the aid of the dissemination of the doctrines of any sect. That was my idea, and that is my idea now. So far as I am concerned, under the assurances that have been given of the non-sectarian character of these two institutions, I am content that that which would have been attained equally well under the bill may be attained by accepting the proposition of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUAY. Then I understand that the committee agrees to reinstate the House provision and reduce the gross appropriation to $53,440.

Mr. CALL. I suggest that we give to these two institutions precisely the status they had before. Under the assurance of Senators here that they are not sectarian institutions, and that the organization shall not be given aid in the dissemination of sectarian doctrines, I am content to accept such an amendment, so far as I am concerned, if the committee will so agree.

Mr. QUAY. Then that is agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of patience and interest to the long debate which has taken place on this most important subject. I think I would not have uttered a word in the debate (and I shall endeavor to be brief, as it is) had not the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], in charge of the bill, alluded to the fact that he and I had cooperated in the past in securing the result that we hope will be attained when this bill becomes a law.

When the bill making appropriations for current and contin-gent expenses of the Indian Department was under consideration last year I submitted an amendment in these words:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to inquire into and investigate the propriety of discontinuing contract schools, and whether, in his judgment, the same can be done without detriment to the education of the Indian children; and that he submit to Congress at the next session the result of such investigation, including an estimate of the additional cost, if any, of substituting Government schools for contract schools, together with such recommendations as he may deem proper.

In response to that amendment to the law the Secretary of the Interior in his report submitted to Congress at the present session has this to say:

Contract schools.—The contract schools are now the subject of general discussion. I agree fully with those who oppose the use of public money for the support of sectarian schools. But this question should be considered practically. The schools have grown up. Money has been invested in their construction at a time when they were recognized as wise instrumentalities for the accomplishment of good. I do not think it proper to allow the intense feeling of opposition to sectarian education, which is showing itself all over the land, to induce the Department to disregard existing conditions. We need the schools now or else we need a large appropriation to build schools to take their place.

It would scarcely be just to abolish them entirely—to abandon instantly a policy so long recognized. My own suggestion is that they should be decreased at the rate of not less than 20 per cent a year. Thus, in a few years more, they would cease to exist, and during this time the Bureau would gradually be prepared to do without them, while they might gather strength to continue without Government aid. This is the policy which is now controlling the Department, and unless it is changed by legislation it will be continued. The decrease in the appropriation for the present fiscal year is 20 per cent.

The Secretary of the Interior has responded to the action of Congress in adopting the amendment I submitted to the last act appropriating money for the support of Indian schools, and I am very glad to note that the Committees on Appropriations of both Houses of Congress seem disposed to meet this question fairly, and as I think in a spirit of true Americanism.

This is not a new question. The very question that we are considering to-day was fought over in Holland by the Anabaptists three hundred and fifty years ago. Brave little Holland not only fought for her liberties as a nation, but she fought for personal, for political, and for religious freedom. The doctrines that were advocated in Holland almost four centuries ago were the doctrines that were implanted in this country when those people came here and founded New Netherlands on this western continent. It would be interesting, if time allowed, to go over briefly the history of the contests that were had in Holland upon this question.

It is an interesting fact that when the Constitution of the United States was made it was almost a transcript of the laws and the constitution of Holland. John Adams wrote concerning it that the originals of the two Republics are so much alike that the history of one seems but a transcript from that of the other. I have in my hand a little book written by the Rev. Dr. Griffis, entitled Brave Little Holland. I want to read a few passages from one chapter in this most interesting publication. The author says:

Originality in methods of government is hardly possible. Searching all antiquity and looking at modern examples, our fathers tried to copy with improvements the good and avoid the evil. From the Dutch system they borrowed the idea of a written constitution, a Senate or States-General, the Hague or District of Columbia, the Supreme Court (with vast improvements), the land laws, registration of deeds and mortgages, local self-government from the town and county to the Government of governments at Washington, the common-school system, freedom of religion and of the press, and many of the details of the Dutch state and national systems. The principle for which the Anabaptists contended, and for which thousands of them were put to death, separation of the church and state, was made fundamental in the American system. James Madison in 1822 wrote: "The example of Holland proved that a toleration of sects dissenting from the established sect was safe and even useful. We are teaching the world that governments do better without kings and nobles than with them. The merit will be doubled by the other lesson: that religion flourishes in greater purity without than with the aid of government."

I say, Mr. President, this is an old, old question, almost as old as civilization itself. It seems to me strange that at the very close of the nineteenth century in the Congress of the United States it should be necessary for any man to raise his voice in opposition to the doctrine that the church and the state should be united in matters of education. I do not know whether the committee have acted wisely or unwisely in some things that they seem to have done. My own impression is that they have acted unwisely; and I feel sure that the Senate will reject the proposition striking out the provision that each succeeding year the Secretary of the Interior shall proportionately reduce the amount thus used, so that at the end of five years from the date this act goes into effect all contracts for such education shall cease.

The House of Representatives responded to the suggestion on the part of the Secretary of the Interior that this reduction should be made at the rate of 20 per cent a year, but the Senate committee for some reason has stricken that from the bill. I trust that by consent on the part of the committee, or by a vote of the Senate, if the committee do not agree to consent, those amounts may be restored to the bill we are considering to-day.

I have only a word to say concerning the two schools which are the subject of controversy in the pending bill. I think that the Committee on Appropriations have gone a little further than they ought to have gone in this matter. They have removed from the list of beneficiaries of the nation certain schools that were under the control of the Roman Catholic Church, and if there are schools directly under the control of any Protestant religious denomination in this country that are receiving money from the Government for the education of Indian children I will strike hands with them in removing those schools from the list.

But when they take a school like Hampton, a school that has ingratiated itself into the hearts of the benevolent people of New England to such an extent that any action that would seem like hostility to that school would send a thrill of sorrow and of horror into every New England State; when they take a school like the school in Philadelphia, under Protestant auspices it is true, so far as the teachers themselves are concerned, but in which I take it not one single tenet of any religious denomination is taught, and remove those schools from the list because certain Roman Catholic schools have been stricken out, I say I think the committee have gone further than they ought to have gone in this matter. So far as I am concerned my course is clear.

I shall vote in favor of the bill with the exception of the provision where they have stricken from the bill the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior to get rid of the contract schools at the rate of 20 per cent each year; and I shall vote to restore to the bill that most beneficent institution at Hampton, Va., and the equally beneficent institution in the city of Philadelphia. Having done that, I think we will have done our duty for this year; and if in another year it be proven that these two schools are sectarian schools, then we can deal with them when we come to pass upon another appropriation for the education of the Indian children of the country.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator from Florida has accepted the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, restoring Hampton and Lincoln Institute, because, as I said when I was on the floor before, neither of those schools, I think, was considered by anyone to be under the head of sectarian schools until the policy was adopted by the House of Representatives abolishing sectarian schools. They were looked upon as being what they are—secular schools founded and established by charity.

But it seems to me that the policy adopted by the House and recommended by the Secretary of the Interior is an extremely wise one. Ever since I have been in Congress I have done what little I could toward the abolition of the sectarian Indian schools, which I do not think are in conformity with the principles of our Government, for I do not think there should be any appropriations of public money for sectarian purposes.

In the course of the debate to-day it has appeared, what I supposed was the case, that there is no difficulty really in the Government taking possession of these schools within a reasonable time, paying proper compensation to the owners of the schools, and putting in Government teachers and making them Government schools. The subject is one which I think should be removed as soon as possible. It seems to me that it is desirable to get rid of this question and of these sectarian schools and these appropriations as rapidly as may be. I have seen no reason presented why it should not be done in less time than five years. I am quite aware, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] stated, that it is impossible to do it at once. That would lead to confusion and great expense. But it seems to me it might be done perfectly well in three years; and I offer an amendment to that effect to the proviso on page 73, which I will move after the committee amendment and the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota have been voted on.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not understand that the Senate has accepted the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. I do not think the action of one member of the Committee on Appropriations binds the Senate, and I object to an acceptance without a vote of the Senate on that subject.

I think these two schools are just as much sectarian schools as any other schools in this country, and I believe I am somewhat familiar with the subject. They are absolutely and unqualifiedly Protestant schools.

I think the thing to do is to treat all fairly in this matter. I do not believe in sectarian schools. I do not believe the Government should appropriate money for their support, but if we are going to stop that policy let us stop it, and treat everybody alike, and treat everybody fairly. Senators stand up here and plead for the cancellation of contracts with one denomination and then plead for schools which receive aid from the Government which are pursuing a course in accordance with their religious views.

So far as I am concerned, I have no prejudice one way or the other in this matter. The Government of the United States invited these people to build these schools because the Government did not wish to advance the money at the time to erect the buildings, and those denominations have expended a million and a half of dollars. If we are going to strike off 20 per cent each year for these denominational schools, we ought at the same time to appropriate $300,000 each year to buy the schools and put them under Government supervision, and we ought to continue the reduction in every instance until, at the end of five years, we should have appropriated a million and a half of dollars, and have abandoned the present system.

I remember very well when this system was inaugurated. It was about fifteen years ago. The appropriation started with a very small sum. We were very anxious to have it done. Our Indian children were uneducated and uncared for. They were not being fitted for citizenship. A lady residing in Philadelphia, Miss Drexel, for instance, took an interest in this subject, and donated a million dollars of her great fortune to build Indian schools. Several were erected in my State, splendid school buildings, grandly equipped, and they have done a splendid work, which the Government of the United States refused to do.

Now, I say in justice and in honor, if we are determined to reduce this appropriation for contract schools 20 per cent each year, we are bound to appropriate 20 per cent of the cost of these schools to purchase the buildings and their equipments, if those who built them desire to sell. I do not see how we can pursue any other course, or have any other opinion.

Even with all the contract schools and with all the Government schools there are still over 1,800 Indian children of school age in my State who are not provided for, who are growing up in absolute ignorance and barbarism, and it seems to me it is a poor policy to commence the reduction of appropriations now, advocated by the philanthropists of the East who are so concerned about these Indians, while we make no provision for those 1,800 Indian children in my State.

I have another objection to Hampton Institute, and Lincoln Institute, and that is, that they are located thousands of miles from the homes of these Indians, and that we gather up the children and bring them to this unusual climate, so far as they are concerned, and sow in their systems the seeds of consumption, and we confer upon them civilization and habits of life which do not accord with the life from which they came and the life to which they return. If we continue these two schools and continue to take Indian children from the plains, we ought also to provide that they shall never be returned.

My heart goes out in sympathy to the Sioux Indian girl who, leaving her tepee home, the tepee of her parents upon the plains, is taken to those schools and taught the habits of civilized life, is taught the modesty of thought and action becoming another and a different civilization, and taught those things which do not accord with her training and the training of her people, and then is returned to her people and their methods of life and to their mode of living, only to be taunted for having abandoned the habits of her parents and the habits of her tribe and the customs of her ancestors, and finding life unendurable, the worst possible fate befalls her.

If we wish to educate the Indians, we should give them an education in accordance with the life which they would live, in accordance with the surroundings of their tribe and their people; and if we are going beyond that, we should never return them.

I am willing Pennsylvania and Virginia shall have the Indian children of my State and absorb them into their population, but I believe we do those children a rank injustice when we return them, after five years in these schools, to their tribes and their modes of barbarous life. There is no question but that we owe to these people a great duty; but the education they ought to receive is in their own tribe and among their own people and it should not go further than a knowledge of the rudiments of an English education, and then a knowledge of how to win a living. I believe if any other course is pursued it will be an injustice to those people, and that these two schools and the school at Carlisle do far more harm than good.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, in the message sent to the Congress by the President of the United States when this session was convened I find the following:

The intelligent Indian school management of the past year has been followed by gratifying results. Efforts have been made to advance the work in a sound and practical manner. Five institutes of Indian teachers have been held during the year, and have proved very beneficial through the views exchanged and methods discussed particularly applicable to Indian education.

Efforts are being made in the direction of a gradual reduction of the number of Indian contract schools so that in a comparatively short time they may give way altogether to Government schools, and it is hoped that the change may be so gradual as to be perfected without too great expense to the Government or undue disregard of investments made by those who have established and are maintaining such contract schools.

The policy thus announced is one which meets my cordial approval. I am convinced that the Indian schools should be under the absolute management—not the half-way management, but the absolute management—of the Government. It is not a vital question with me whether these institutions are better conducted now than they will be if the Government takes exclusive possession. There are other considerations which should be deemed paramount and determinative. It is plain that appropriations which are to be expended by this denomination or that one must be provocative of acrimonious discussion; and whatever benefits might otherwise flow from the administration of sectarians the advantage is more than met by the difficulty which arises from the factional religious agitation thereby engendered.

I agree that this source of disputation should be removed as soon as practicable, but I do not care to vote for an earlier date for the entire substitution of Government control than that which has been suggested by the Secretary of the Interior. I have no doubt he has examined the subject carefully and has made an accurate estimate of the time requisite for accomplishing the transfer. I think the suggestion of the President that we should have regard for the investments made and should not put too much and too sudden expense upon the Government is eminently wise. The Government created these schools, and the welfare of all concerned should be fairly considered in devising the ways and means for their abolition.

Mr. President, concerning the two schools in question—that at Hampton and that at Philadelphia—it is evident they are not sectarian schools in the fullest sense. They are not conducted by a particular religious denomination and are not directly connected with particular creeds. Still they are not Government schools. I take it we shall always have trouble if we permit any distinction between denominational schools and private schools. I think that it should not be important here whether an appropriation is made for a denominational school or for a private school. Government schools only should be supported. I believe that if Congress intends to take charge of the business of Indian education it should do so completely, and that no private school whatever should be a beneficiary. Any other view will lead to disagreeable controversy.

Let us enforce the proposition that the Government will attend to this subject and that private schools must depend upon private subscription. If we pursue a different course we must take testimony session after session to ascertain whether this private school or that one is or is not a denominational school. This debate has shown the difficulty of determining such an issue. We shall have people claiming and urging that a specified institution is really carried on in the interest of this religious denomination or that one, and we will have to pass judgment upon a many-sided case. But if we adopt the rule, plain in its terms, unambiguous in expression, that none but Government schools shall have public support there will be no trouble.

I recognize that the two schools named are ably conducted by gentlemen who deserve the thanks of their kind, and I would not for a moment entertain the thought of sweeping them from existence, but the assurances given upon this floor that they will be substantially maintained by the process and through the instrumentalities referred to by the Senators who have explained the intentions of the Interior Department, and that the Indians will not lose the benefits heretofore conferred, ought to satisfy us all. In five years, or in such time as may be designated, these institutions will be turned over to the Government. If those who now own or manage them, exercising their option, decline to yield possession, then surely the Government should not be called on.

The declaration of public policy, which we are seeking to make here and now, should be observed consistently and universally. Private schools, whether denominational or not, should be maintained by their promoters. Many charities and other praiseworthy objects are thus and ever will be kept alive. But the Government must administer its trusts with impartial justice.

The fair and clear course which I have outlined should be universally approved by right-thinking and patriotic people. The fact that all occasion for sectarian debate will have departed ought to commend the plan to all.

Mr. President, so strongly do I feel the necessity for such positive action at this time that I do not think it right to urge the interpolation into this bill of any private interest whatsoever; the real principle we should follow ought to be that the Government, which pays the money, should control that which it supports; that it should have no partners in the disbursement of its educational fund.

Mr. POWER. Mr. President, has the Senator in charge of the bill accepted the amendment?

Mr. CALL. I stated that I had no authority to speak for the Committee on Appropriations, but, so far as I was personally concerned, I was content that the amendment should be accepted.

Mr. POWER. I wish to offer an amendment which has been reported from the committee favorably.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WHITE. Is the amendment proposed by the committee withdrawn?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair does not so understand. The Chair will entertain the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER] after the amendments of the committee are disposed of.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 72, line 18, after the word "lease" to insert "repair," and in line 20, after the word "draftsman," to strike out "at $1,200 per annum;" so as to read:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools, and for other educational purposes, including the purchase, lease, repair, and construction of school buildings, not hereinafter provided for, including pay of draftsman to be employed in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 23, on page 72, after the words "one million," to strike out "one hundred and sixty-four thousand three hundred and fifty," and insert "two hundred and fifty-three thousand four hundred and forty;" and in line 24, after the word "dollars," to insert "of which amount the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, use $5,000 for the education of Indians in Alaska;" so as to read:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools, and for other educational purposes, including the purchase, lease, repair, and construction of school buildings, not hereinafter provided for, including pay of draftsman to be employed in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $1,253,440, of which amount the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, use $5,000 for the education of Indians in Alaska.

Mr. QUAY. At that point I understand the committee will agree to strike out the words, in the twenty-third line, "and fifty-three thousand four hundred and forty."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. TELLER. What is the amendment?

Mr. FAULKNER. What is the parliamentary condition? Is this an amendment of the committee we are to vote on, or is it an amendment to strike out from the bill as it came from the House?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the vote will first be taken upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. What is the amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 23, after the word "hundred," it is proposed to strike from the committee amendment the words "and fifty-three thousand four hundred and forty."

Mr. QUAY. I wish to modify the appropriation so as to leave it an even $1,200,000. That is, with the understanding that the proposition on the seventy-seventh page for the Lincoln Institute and Hampton Institute are to remain in the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to find out whether the amendments of the committee, on page 77, have been rejected or not. If they have been rejected, then this amendment is proper. If not, we do not want to make it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Those amendments have not yet been reached.

Mr. QUAY. The propositions were included in the suggestion I made to the Senator from Florida in charge of the bill, and which he accepted.

Mr. FAULKNER. I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that he bring the question up at once as to whether the Senate will agree to the amendment of the committee striking out the House provision. Then, if the Senate does not agree to the amendment of the committee striking out the House provision, we can go back and correct the other.

Mr. QUAY. Then I ask that the vote be taken first on the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the vote be taken on the amendments on page 77.

Mr. CALL. That is the idea.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 3, on page 77, it is proposed to strike out:

For support and education of 120 Indian pupils at the school at Hampton, Va., $20,000.

For support and education of 200 Indian pupils at Lincoln Institution, Philadelphia, at $167 per annum each, $33,400.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I should like to inquire just what the proposition is. Is it to adopt the amendment of the committee?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. COCKRELL. The question is on striking out the provisions as to the schools at Hampton and Lincoln.

Mr. QUAY. Those in favor of the institutions will vote "nay."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. HUNTON. There are some Senators who do not understand the question to be voted upon. I ask the Chair to restate it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, to strike out the clauses on page 77 of the bill, from line 4 to line 10, inclusive.

Mr. HUNTON. Then the question is upon agreeing to the committee's amendment to strike out?

Mr. FRYE and others. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURROWS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] to my colleague [Mr. SHOUP] and vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. LINDSAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN]. I do not know how he would vote on this question if present, but if he were here I should vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PETTIGREW (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. POWER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], but I understand that if that Senator were present he would vote "yea," so I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GRAY. I am paired with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], who is not present, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. BATE. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. Not knowing how that Senator would vote, if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the negative). I have voted, but I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. I will transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and let my vote stand.

Mr. VEST (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote, as I notice that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN], with whom I have a general pair, has not voted.

Mr. GORDON. I wish to announce my pair with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. BATE. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON], with whom I have announced a pair, having come into the Chamber, I will cast my vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to transfer my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—21.

Berry,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,	Vilas,
Blackburn,	Jones of Ark.	Power,	Voorhees,
Brice,	Martin,	Boach,	White.
Cockrell,	Mitchell of Wis.	Stewart,
Coke,	Morgan,	Teller,
Davis,	Palmer,	Turpie,

NAYS—32.

Bate,	Dubois,	Kyle,	Platt,
Blanchard,	Faulkner,	Lodge,	Proctor,
Burrows,	Frye,	McLaurin,	Quay,
Call,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Ransom,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Manderson,	Squire,
Clark,	Hill,	Mantle,	Walsh,
Daniel,	Hoar,	Mitchell of Oreg.	Wilson of Wash.
Dixon,	Hunton,	Peffer,	Wolcott.

NOT VOTING—35.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Irby,	Pritchard,
Allen,	George,	Jones of Nev.	Pugh,
Allison,	Gibson,	Lindsay,	Sherman,
Butler,	Gordon,	McPherson,	Shoup,
Caffery,	Gorman,	Mills,	Smith,
Camden,	Gray,	Morrill,	Vest,
Cameron,	Hale,	Murphy,	Washburn,
Carey,	Harris,	Pasco,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Higgins,	Pettigrew,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, I ask the Senate to disagree to the amendment beginning in line 22, on page 72, striking out "$1,164,050" and inserting "$1,253,440," so as to leave the amount just as it came from the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.
The SECRETARY. On page 72, line 22, after the words "one million," the Committee on Appropriations reported to strike out "one hundred and sixty-four thousand three hundred and fifty," and insert "two hundred and fifty-three thousand four hundred and forty."

Mr. COCKRELL. That is restoring the amount as the bill came from the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I do not want to have any mistake in relation to the language as it stands. The words "of which amount the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, use $5,000 for the education of Indians in Alaska," I suppose are to stand.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is a separate amendment. Let that be voted on.

Mr. TELLER. Those words are to be left in?

Mr. COCKRELL. Those words will be agreed to if there be no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 72, line 24, after the word "dollars," the Committee on Appropriations report to insert:

Of which amount the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, use $5,000 for the education of Indians in Alaska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 2, page 73, it seems to me, in view of the discussion that has been had here to-day, the word "may" should be stricken out and the word "shall" inserted. If there is a proposition to reduce the appropriation for the contract schools 20 per cent, I think the Secretary should make the contracts for 80 per cent; and it ought not to be left doubtful as to whether he will or will not. I hope that change will be made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed in line 2, page 73, to strike out "may" and insert "shall;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall make contracts for the education of Indian pupils, etc.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have an amendment on the desk which has not been disposed of that I think covers this question. I ask that it may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. When the text is perfected the Chair will recognize the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think if the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas prevails it may take the place of the one I offered. As I offered my amendment first, I should like to have it disposed of first. I should like to have the amendment I offered read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the word "Alaska," in line 2, page 73, down to and including the word "cease," in line 11 of the same page, and insert:

Provided, That $515,000 of said sum of $1,253,440 shall be expended in support of schools with which contracts have heretofore been made: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may in his discretion expend 20 per cent of said sum of $515,000 in the purchase of the property of such contract schools as may be offered for sale.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will state in this connection that the sum named is just the amount of money which was expended for contract schools last year for all denominations—$515,000. If we are going to reduce it 20 per cent, a sum equal to that ought to be expended in the purchase of schools which may be abandoned.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I agree, in view of the fact that a large number of contract schools have been built under the system which has heretofore prevailed, that if the ordinary arrangements are not allowed to go on the buildings ought to be bought by the Government, or at least those which are desirable and available should be purchased. I think the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota covers the point I have suggested, and I am willing to take a vote on that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. It strikes me that this is a very radical amendment and that we ought to take time to think it over before we vote it into the bill. If the amendment is adopted it certainly does two things: It strikes from the bill the provision that the contract schools shall be decreased at the rate of 20 per cent a year, which the Secretary of the Interior has suggested, and it likewise eliminates from it the provision that the Secretary of the Interior shall make contracts, but only with present contract schools, for the education of Indian pupils, etc., and instead it gives a lump sum for a certain other purpose.

Mr. PLATT. If the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me, I will state that the amendment would allow the Secretary of the Interior to continue all the contract schools that are now in existence unless he chooses to buy some of them out with 20 per cent of the money.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no question about that. I think the amendment is not in the line of the legislation which we are trying to accomplish by the bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me a moment?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understood the Senator from South Dakota to explain the effect of his amendment to be that he proposes to appropriate the amount of money which was appropriated last year, naming the amount, less 20 per cent. The difference between the present bill and his amendment is that the amount is specified in his amendment and is not specified in the bill. I should be glad to know if I misunderstood the Senator from South Dakota in that respect.

Mr. PETTIGREW. That is correct. If 20 per cent is stricken off I think it should be used for the purchase of buildings which may be abandoned.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from New Hampshire, as he seems to desire a little time to consider the amendment, yield to me in order that I may move a recess?

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall be pleased to do so.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock to-night.

Mr. PETTIGREW. For what purpose, I should like to know?

Mr. HARRIS. The question is not debatable, but I have no hesitation in saying that if I can get the floor—

Mr. WOLCOTT. I object to any explanation.

Mr. McLAURIN (at 5 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.). I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask the Senator from Mississippi to withdraw the motion to adjourn and yield to me—

Mr. HOAR. Regular order.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I wish to introduce a bill.

Mr. FAULKNER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the Senator from Mississippi, who has the floor, to yield to me.

Mr. HOAR. The regular order has been demanded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded, which is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN] that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. McLAURIN and Mr. BUTLER called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. I should vote "nay" if I were not paired.

Mr. DUBOIS (when Mr. SHOUP's name was called). I announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. SHOUP] with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY] and ask that my vote be recorded. I vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to inquire if the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] has voted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. DAVIS. I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. HIGGINS. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON]. I am informed he would vote "nay" if present, and I therefore vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 38; as follows:

YEAS—19.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. ALLEN. I suggest the absence of a quorum and desire the roll to be called.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the number of Senators shown on the yea-and-nay vote?

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Chair please state the number of votes recorded upon the roll call?

Mr. FAULKNER. The roll call shows the presence of a quorum, and no business has intervened since the roll call.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point made by the Senator from West Virginia is well taken.

Mr. ALLEN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nebraska that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. McLAURIN and Mr. TELLER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HILL. Is it too late to raise the point of order whether a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business has precedence of a motion to take a recess?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that he has ordered the roll call to proceed, and it can not be interfered with.

Mr. HALE. Nothing can interfere with the roll call.

Mr. HILL. A motion to take a recess has preference over a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HALE. Nothing can interrupt the roll call.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The roll call will proceed.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I will again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], and transfer it to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. I vote "nay."

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). Being paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY] and vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I again announce, and for the day, my pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD].

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I inquire if the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] has voted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. TURPIE. I withhold my vote, being paired with that Senator.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. CAFFERY] is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER].

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 44; as follows:

YEAS—13.

So the Senate refused to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to state that the Chair would have sustained the point of order raised by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] if it had been made before the first name was called upon the roll; but for the reason that the roll call had commenced the Chair could not entertain the point of order. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. KYLE. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 10 o'clock.

Mr. HARRIS. The motion I made takes precedence of any such motion.

Mr. KYLE. I think it does not.

Mr. HILL. I rise to a point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will hear the point of order raised by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. The point of order I raise is that a motion to take a recess takes precedence of a motion to adjourn to a time certain.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is correct.

Mr. MANDERSON. That is not the case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The rule will be read.

Mr. KYLE. I make the point that a motion to adjourn to a day certain takes precedence.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will have the rule read, and that will determine the question.

The Secretary read as follows:

RULE XXII.

PRECEDENCE OF MOTIONS.

When a question is pending no motion shall be received but—

To adjourn,
To adjourn to a day certain, or that when the Senate adjourn, it shall be to a day certain.

To take a recess,

To proceed to the consideration of executive business,

To lay on the table,

To postpone indefinitely.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the rule the Chair will first entertain the motion of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] that when the Senate adjourn it be until 10 o'clock to-morrow. [Putting the question.] The yeas seem to have it.

Mr. McLAURIN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The yeas have it, and the motion of the Senator from South Dakota is not agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs upon the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. HOAR. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President—

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of order that the roll call has begun.

Mr. ALLEN. I addressed the Chair before the roll call commenced.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska states that he addressed the Chair before the first name was called. The Chair will hear the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. I addressed the Chair before the question was put by the Chair for the purpose of moving to amend the motion of the Senator from Tennessee by substituting 10 o'clock for 8 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not hear the Senator from Nebraska. The roll call has commenced and it must proceed.

Mr. ALLEN. I appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. HOAR. An appeal can not be made pending a roll call.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The roll call will proceed.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY]. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—43.

So the motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

MUNICIPAL IMPROVEMENTS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the Committee on the District of Columbia, of which I chance to be chairman, with absolute unanimity some time since reported a bill, the passage of which is recommended by the unanimous report of the District Commissioners, and, I am informed, with great unanimity by the Board of Trade and the taxpayers and citizens of the District generally. The bill was reported to the Senate by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], who is chairman of the subcommittee having it in charge. It is Senate bill 2066, and I move that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The title of the bill will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2066) to provide for continuing the system of trunk sewers in the District of Columbia; to provide for sewerage disposal, to lay out highways, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. McLAURIN. I suggest the want of a quorum, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll; and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Faulkner,	McLaurin,	Quay,
Bate,	Gorman,	Martin,	Sherman,
Berry,	Harris,	Mitchell of Wis.	Wolcott.
Chandler,	Hill,	Palmer,
Cockrell,	Jones of Ark.	Pasco,
Dubois,	Kyle,	Peffer,

Mr. MARTIN. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] requested me to state to the Senate that he is feeling very unwell this evening, and asks for leave of absence.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Twenty-one Senators have answered to their names. No quorum is present.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Sergeant-at-Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

After some delay, Mr. HUNTON, Mr. ROACH, Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. PERKINS, Mr. TURPIE, Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. TELLER, Mr. WHITE, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. VEST, Mr. PLATT, Mr. ALLISON, Mr. ALDRICH, Mr. McMILLAN, Mr. SQUIRE, and Mr. BRICE entered the Chamber and responded to their names.

Mr. HARRIS (at 9 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.). Mr. President, if I can have the consent of the Senate to say a few words, I should be glad to do so in explanation of the step that I shall next take.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTIN in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and the Senator will proceed.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I asked for this night's session to consider a bill upon the passage of which largely depend the sanitary condition and the health of the people of this city and District, a bill than which no measure is more important to this locality. In view of the fact that we are the legislative department for 300,000 people who have no voice in the Government, and who rely upon the Congress of the United States and upon the Congress only for such legislation as may be necessary for their well-being the protection of their health, their lives, and their property, I regret more than I can find words to express that there is so little interest felt as that an occasion such as this should meet with the experience we are having to-night.

I feel, however, Mr. President, that I have tried to do my duty in the premises; and at this late day of the session, important as the measure that I asked the Senate to come here to consider to-night is, in view of the fact that a majority of the great appropriation bills have not yet been considered in this body, and that we have barely a week within which to consider them and such other matters as will be forced upon our consideration, as we have patiently waited here for one hour and five minutes and still we are ten short of a quorum, I shall not take the responsibility of asking those Senators who have kindly come here from a sense of duty to remain longer in the fruitless and hopeless task of getting a quorum here to perform their duties and transact the public business of the country.

I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. KYLE and Mr. PALMER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. PALMER. I ask the Senator from Tennessee to withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has recognized the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. KYLE. Before the Senator from Tennessee takes his seat and the Senate adjourns I should like to say just one word.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator will have permission to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order except by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the Senator from South Dakota proceeding?

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall not object to the statement which the Senator from South Dakota is about to make, but I shall object to debate after that unless there is a quorum of the Senate present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from South Dakota will proceed.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, I do not wish to place myself in the attitude of seeming to block the progress of the sewer-bond bill. I realize the importance of the measure fully as much as does the Senator from Tennessee. I believe we ought to have good sewers in every part of the city of Washington. I realize that there are now many diseases prevalent in various parts of the city in consequence of the fact that we do not have here a proper sewerage system. I believe also that we should extend the streets at the same time, as the expense of the work will be less if the two projects are carried on at one time than if done separately.

The only difference between those of us who so believe and the element represented by the Senator from Tennessee is with reference to paying the bills. The Senator wishes by the provisions of his bill to issue bonds. We do not wish to issue bonds. We are willing to pay for the work out of the Treasury, we are willing to issue silver certificates, we are willing to do almost anything if we can bring about an agreement, and as all measures that are put through Congress are the result of compromise in the end, I believe that the opposition should come halfway to us. We are willing to meet them halfway.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado will state his question of order.

Mr. TELLER. There is nobody here to give unanimous consent. It requires the Senate to give unanimous consent.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President—

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator from Illinois to wait a moment. I notice that the Reporter is making a report of this proceeding. He might as well make a report of a town meeting, as nothing can go into the RECORD except the mere fact that we did not have a quorum and the proceeding taken to get a quorum. I object now to any further talk. We are dropping into a method of doing business that will rise to plague us hereafter.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object—

Mr. TELLER. Nothing can be done without a quorum.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object to the Senator from Colorado proceeding any further.

Mr. PALMER. I ask the Senate to give me twenty minutes for the consideration of private pension bills.

Mr. HARRIS. There is no quorum here and nothing can be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair can not entertain the request of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the question be put on my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 9 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 23, 1895, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 21, 1895.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES, WAR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a detailed statement of the receipts and expenditures of the War Department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1894; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

JANITOR FOR CUSTOM-HOUSE, UNALASKA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of a bill, with a favorable recommendation, to reimburse the late deputy collector of customs at Unalaska, Alaska, for money expended in the employment of a janitor; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

CLATSKAINE AND LEWIS RIVERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House letters from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with letters of Chief of Engineers, reports of preliminary examinations of Clatskaine River, Oregon, and Lewis River, Washington; which were referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

BRIDGE AT SIOUX CITY, IOWA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a bill (H. R. 8499) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River in the county of Dakota, in the State of Nebraska, and in the city of Sioux City, in the county of Woodbury, in the State of Iowa, with an amendment of the Senate thereto.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 5, strike out all of section 7 and insert:
"SEC. 7. This act shall take effect in one year after its approval, and shall be null and void if the actual construction of the bridge be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date it takes effect."

The amendment was concurred in.

On motion of Mr. MEIKLEJOHN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was concurred in was laid on the table.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were severally referred as indicated below:

A bill (S. 1795) to aid in the erection of a monument to the memory of Gen. William Smallwood and the soldiers of the Maryland Line in the war of American independence—to the Committee on the Library.

A bill (S. 2388) for the relief of Fred Kormann—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

A bill (S. 2503) for the relief of James Curran—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

A bill (S. 2745) to authorize the Postmaster-General to refund to Volley P. Hart, postmaster at Sedalia, Mo., moneys sent him by the Post-Office Department for the disbursements and losses by the failure of the First National Bank of Sedalia—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2783) to postpone the enforcement of the act of August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea"—to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

MILITARY INSTRUCTION IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Mr. BRETZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8637) to amend section 1325 of the Revised Statutes so as to provide for the detail of officers of the Army and Navy to assist in military instruction in the public schools.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1325 of the Revised Statutes, concerning the detail of officers of the Army and Navy to educational institutions, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to permit the President to detail, under the provisions of that act, and in addition to the detail of the officers of the Army and Navy now authorized to be detailed under the existing provisions of said act, such officers and noncommissioned officers of the Army and Navy of the United States as in his judgment can be spared for that purpose without affecting its efficiency, to act as instructors in military drill and tactics in the public schools of the various cities in the United States where such instruction shall have been authorized by the educational authorities thereof and where the services of such instructor shall have been applied for by said authorities. As far as practicable these details shall be made by the President from the officers and noncommissioned officers of the troops which are stationed in the vicinity of the schools in which instruction is required, and the instruction shall be so arranged as to only require them to devote such time as is necessary for that purpose: Provided, That no detail of any such officer or noncommissioned officer shall be made or continued where the number of scholars of the town or city to be instructed by him shall not exceed 300. The maximum number of officers to be detailed under the provisions of this act in public schools as herein prescribed shall not exceed 50 and shall be exclusive of the details of officers of the Army and Navy authorized by the section hereby amended, and this amendment shall not affect any provisions thereof.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is authorized to issue, at his discretion, and, under proper regulations to be prescribed by him, out of ordnance and ordnance stores belonging to the Government, and which can be spared for that purpose, such number of the same as may be required for military instruction and practice by the public schools of any city which shall adopt military instruction as a part of its public-school system; and the Secretary shall require a bond in each case for double the value of the property for the care and safe-keeping thereof and for the return of the same when required.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to hear the report read.

The report (by Mr. OUTHWAITE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8273) to amend section 1325 of the Revised Statutes, so as to provide for the detail of officers of the Army and Navy to assist in military instruction in the public schools, having had the same under consideration, report a substitute therefor, with a recommendation that House bill 8273 lie on the table and that the substitute do pass.

This bill simply extends the privilege of securing military instruction from army and navy officers to the public schools, but with such limitations as not to impair the efficiency of the Army and Navy. Under existing laws, 75 officers from the Army and 25 from the Navy may be detailed to colleges having certain capacity and membership, and these limitations are such that public schools are not included.

This bill increases the number of officers that may be detailed to 150, and provides that the increase of 50 be allotted to public schools. Your committee believe that to extend the instructions to those attending public schools would secure to the youths throughout the country such knowledge of military affairs as will make them efficient as volunteers in cases of emergency, and if that can be accomplished without any inconvenience to the United States Government it may prove to be a valuable undertaking.

The officers detailed to public schools under the provisions of this bill shall not be required to remain at such schools continually, but it is specially provided "that the instruction shall be so arranged as to only require them to devote such time as is necessary for that purpose." There must be at least 300 scholars in the town or city where the officer is detailed to receive such instruction.

The Secretary of War, in his last annual report (1894), in discussing this subject, says:

"I renew the recommendation made last year, that the opportunities for military instruction of officers of the Army now open to colleges be extended to the high schools of our large cities and to normal schools."

The Major-General Commanding the Army uses the following language in reference to the same subject:

"No better employment can be given to the officers of the Regular Army in time of peace than in this wide dissemination of elementary military education."

Your committee recommend the passage of the substitute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLACK. I object.

FORFEITURE OF RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

Mr. ELLIS of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8097) which was up the other day and was objected to by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE]. The gentleman has since examined the matter and withdraws his objection. The bill was read the other day and I hope it will now be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes,' approved September 20, 1890, and the several acts amendatory thereof."

The SPEAKER. This bill was submitted and read the other day in the House, but the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE] objected to its consideration.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. I withdraw the objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection?

Mr. COOPER of Florida and Mr. JONES asked for the reading of the report.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, let the bill be again read.

The bill was again read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes,' approved September 20, 1890, and the several acts amendatory thereof," approved December 13, 1893, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That section 306 of an act entitled 'An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes,' approved September 20, 1890, and the several acts amendatory thereof, be, and the same is, amended so as to extend the time within which persons entitled to purchase lands forfeited by said act shall be permitted to purchase the same, in the quantities and upon the terms provided in said section, at any time prior to January 1, 1897: Provided, That actual residence upon the lands by persons claiming the right to purchase the same shall not be required where such lands have been fenced, cultivated, or otherwise improved by such claimants, and such persons shall be permitted to purchase two or more tracts of such lands by legal subdivisions, whether contiguous or not, but exceeding 320 acres in the aggregate: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to interfere with any adverse claim that may have attached to the lands or any part thereof."

An amendment recommended by the Committee on the Public Lands was read, as follows:

Page 2, line 25, strike out the word "exceeding," before "320 acres," and insert "not to exceed."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear the report on that bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report can be read.

The report (by Mr. ELLIS of Oregon) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands have had under consideration House bill 8007, and find under the construction placed upon section 3 of the act approved September 29, 1890, as promulgated by the Commissioner of the General Land Office in his letter of December 24, 1890, purchase was allowed to be made by parties claiming under the third section as settlers without requiring them to show actual residence, they having met all the requirements of the bill as to fencing, cultivation, etc., and also that they were allowed to purchase in an amount not exceeding the maximum allowed under said act, even though the amount so purchased was not contiguous. Under said construction by the Department they purchased their lands and acquired patents for the same.

Under a decision of the Secretary of the Interior, made November 3, 1893, it was held that actual residence must be shown, and under said ruling many entries are now held for cancellation, although the entrymen stand on precisely the same footing occupied by those who have long since received patents from the Government for their lands. This bill does not enlarge any rights, but only seeks to give those who from any cause may have been unable to complete purchase under the original act and amendments thereto the same rights and privileges that were accorded to their more fortunate brethren.

Your committee think the relief asked is meritorious and just, and therefore report the bill back with the recommendation that it do pass with the following amendment:

After the word "but," in the twenty-fifth line, strike out the word "exceeding" and insert "not to exceed."

The committee appends the letters of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior and makes them a part of this report, and recommends the passage of the bill.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 15, 1894.

SIR: I transmit herewith a report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office on House bill No. 8007, entitled "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes,' approved September 29, 1890, and the several acts amendatory thereof,'" recommending the passage of the bill.

I do not concur in this view.

The third section of the act of September 29, 1890, provides for the right of purchase of lands within the forfeited limits by two classes of persons. First, where persons being citizens of the United States, or who have declared their intention to become such, are in possession of any of the forfeited lands under deed, written contract with, or license from the State or corporation to which such grant was made, or its assignees, executed prior to January 1, 1893; and, second, where persons may have settled said lands with a bona fide intent to secure title thereto by a purchase from the State or corporation when earned by compliance with the condition of the requirements of the granting act.

As to the first class, the Department has held that mere occupancy and improvement of the land is sufficient to entitle such person to purchase, for the reason that their right depends upon a deed, written contract with, or license from the company, under which they could require the company to specifically perform their contract whenever the lands were earned.

As to the second class, the right of purchase depends solely upon the settlement made upon the land, and without any contract or license that could be enforced against the company.

To accord to persons the right to purchase by merely taking possession of and improving such lands, without requiring residence thereon, would be to grant a privilege that is not conferred upon the homesteader as to any other part of the public domain.

For this reason I do not approve the passage of the bill.

Very respectfully,

Hon. W. R. ELLIS,
House of Representatives.

HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 15, 1894.

SIR: There has been submitted to me by the Hon. W. R. ELLIS, of the House of Representatives, a copy of House bill 8007, entitled "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes,' approved September 29, 1890, and the several acts amendatory thereof,'" for an expression of my views thereon.

I have the honor to transmit the said copy herewith, which reads as follows, viz:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That 'An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes,' approved September 29, 1890, and the several acts amendatory thereof, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That section 3 of an act entitled 'An act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes,' approved September 29, 1890, and the several acts amendatory thereof, be, and the same is, amended so as to extend the time within which persons entitled to purchase lands forfeited by said act shall be permitted to purchase the same, in the quantities and upon the terms provided in said section, at any time prior to January 1, 1897: Provided, That actual residence upon the lands by persons claiming the right to purchase the same shall not be required where such lands have been fenced, cultivated, or otherwise improved by such claimants, and such persons shall be permitted to purchase two or more tracts of such lands by legal subdivisions, whether contiguous or not, but not exceeding 320 acres in the aggregate: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to interfere with any adverse claim that may have attached to the lands or any part thereof."

In connection therewith I have the honor to make the following statement, viz:

The first section of the act of September 29, 1890 (32 Stat., 496), declared a general forfeiture of granted lands opposite the unconstructed portions of land-grant railroads.

The second section provided a relief for actual settlers or occupants on such lands according to the general principles of the homestead laws, calling for a prescribed period of residence and cultivation by the claimants on the land claimed as a prerequisite to perfecting title.

The third section contains special provisions for the relief of a class of persons who had taken action with a view to acquire the title of the railroad companies to portions of the land in question, who had incurred more or less of expense in the pursuit of that object before the forfeiture was declared, and who appeared to be regarded by Congress as proper subjects for special relief. That section read as follows, viz:

"That in all cases where persons being citizens of the United States, or who have declared their intentions to become such in accordance with the naturalization laws of the United States, are in possession of any of the lands affected by any such grant and hereby resumed by and restored to the United States, under deed, written contract with, or license from, the State or corporation to which such grant was made, or its assignees, executed prior to January 1, 1893, or where persons may have settled said lands with bona fide intent to secure title thereto by purchase from the State or corporation when earned by compliance with the conditions or requirements of the granting acts of Congress, they shall be entitled to purchase the same from the United States, in quantities not exceeding 320 acres to any one such person, at the rate of $1.25 per acre, at any time within two years from the passage of this act, and on making said payment to receive patents therefor, and where any such person in actual possession of any such lands, and having improved the same prior to the 1st day of January, 1890, under deed, written contract, or license as aforesaid, or his assignor, has made partial or full payments to said railroad company prior to said date, on account of the purchase price of said lands from it, on proof of the amount of such payments he shall be entitled to have the same, to the extent and amount of $1.25 per acre, if so much has been paid, and not more, credited to him on account of and as part of the purchase price herein provided to be paid the United States for said lands, or such persons may elect to abandon their purchases and make claim on said lands under the homestead law and as provided in the preceding section of this act: Provided, That in all cases where parties, persons, or corporations, with the permission of such State or corporation, or its assignees, are in the possession of and have made improvements upon any of the lands hereby resumed and restored, and are not entitled to the same under the provisions of this act, such parties, persons, or corporations shall have six months in which to remove any growing crop, and within which time they shall also be entitled to remove all buildings and other movable improvements from said lands: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to any lands situate in the State of Iowa, on which any person in good faith has made or asserted the right to make a preemption or homestead settlement: And provided further, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed as limiting the rights granted to purchasers or settlers by 'An act to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1867, or as repealing, altering, or amending said act, nor as in any manner affecting any cause of action existing in favor of any purchaser against his grantor for breach of any covenants of title."

The duty of administering this statute first arose in this office under a former Administration. The Secretary of the Interior in his letter of December 24, 1890, to the then Commissioner of the General Land Office (11 L. D., 635), in reference to the proper instructions to be issued to the district land officers, under the third section of the said act, suggested "that the instructions should be in the words of the act itself," which it will be seen do not expressly require actual residence on the tracts claimed thereunder.

The circular of instructions was issued accordingly under date of January 3, 1891 (12 L. D., 3), and it appears that in subsequent proceedings purchase was allowed to be made by parties claiming under the third section as settlers, without requiring them to show actual residence on the tracts so claimed by them.

It appears to have been held that when persons who were citizens of the United States, or who had declared their intention to become such citizens, had settled said lands with bona fide intent to secure title thereto by purchase from the State or corporation when carried by compliance with the conditions or requirements of the granting acts of Congress, and the lands were fenced, cultivated, or otherwise improved by such claimants, in such manner and to such extent as to show good faith, that they should be permitted to purchase under the said third section, without being required to show, as a part of the proof of their settlement, that they were actual residents on the tracts claimed by them. In other words, it appears to have been held that parties might be settlers within the meaning of the statute without being actual residents on the tracts claimed. Numerous entries were allowed to be made under this view of the meaning of the statute, and many of them were patented.

In the case of James C. Daly, decided by the Secretary of the Interior, November 3, 1893 (17 L. D., 408), it was held as per syllabus that—

"The right to purchase from the Government forfeited railroad lands, accorded by section 3, act of September 29, 1890, to those 'who may have settled said land with bona fide intent to secure title thereto by purchase from the State or corporation,' can not be exercised by one who has not established his residence on such lands."

That decision, without questioning that one of the classes of persons provided for in such third section, viz, those in possession of any of the lands affected by such grant under deed, written contract with, or license from the State or corporation to which such grant was made, or its assignees, executed prior to January 1, 1893, were entitled to purchase from the Government 320 acres of the land so held in possession whether actual residents thereon or not, decided that the other class, viz, those who "may have settled" said land with bona fide intent to secure title thereto by purchase from the State or corporation when earned by compliance with the conditions or requirements of the granting acts of Congress were not entitled to make such purchase unless they were actual residents on the lands claimed.

Following the decision referred to as a precedent on the point involved, this office has refused to permit claimants of the class referred to to perfect their claims. All entries based on claims of settlement under said third section in which actual residence is not shown, which had not been patented prior to the promulgation of said decision of the Secretary of the Interior, were suspended, and are liable to cancellation, if not yet canceled.

The bill (H. R. 8007) above quoted would not operate to change existing law, except so far as to permit claimants to perfect their titles in the character of settlers under the third section of the act of September 29, 1890, without being required to show actual residence upon the tract claimed, where such lands have been fenced, cultivated, or otherwise improved by them. The passage of this bill would enable this Office to relieve from suspension the entries found to be invalid under the decision in the Daly case, above mentioned.

As one incident to the enforcement of that decision it is required that entries of this class must form a compact body, as where residence is required that condition can not be recognized as fulfilled with regard to both by residence on one of two disconnected tracts, nor can residence on one be accepted as entitling the party to make entry of the other. It follows that in cases where a party residing on one legal subdivision of land has made an entry within the maximum, but including another legal subdivision, not contiguous, the entry as regards the latter must be canceled. The passage of said bill would relieve a number of cases of this kind now suspended in view of the Daly decision.

By reason of the facts above stated I am of the opinion that this bill should become a law, and I would so recommend.

Attention is called to a clerical error in the twenty-fifth line, by which, as the fourth word, "but" is used where "not" is evidently intended.

Very respectfully,

S. W. LAMOREUX, Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. TRACEY. I would like to ask whether the Interior Department has recommended this action?

Mr. ELLIS of Oregon. The Commissioner of the General Land Office recommends it strongly as being in the interest of the Government.

Mr. TRACEY. Is there any communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office on that point?

Mr. ELLIS of Oregon. Yes; quite a lengthy one.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is that appended to the report?

Mr. ELLIS of Oregon. Yes, sir; but it is quite lengthy. It recounts all of the legislation that has been had on this subject.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let it be read.

The SPEAKER. The document is quite voluminous and would probably occupy a half hour in reading. If there be no objection, it will be read.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I object to the reading.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I demand the regular order.

Mr. TRACEY. I do not want to prevent the bill from being considered if the gentleman from Kentucky will withdraw his demand.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky demands the regular order, which is equivalent to an objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted, for this day, to Mr. DAVEY, on account of sickness.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky demands the regular order, which is the further consideration of the Senate amendment, disagreed to by the House, on the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Before proceeding with the debate I would like to make some arrangement, if possible, with gentlemen on the other side as to the time to be consumed in the discussion.

Mr. HITT. How much time does the gentleman from Kentucky suggest?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I would suggest an hour on each side.

Mr. HITT. That will be agreeable to me.

The SPEAKER. Without objection that order will be made.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky of course can give notice that he will demand the previous question at the expiration of two hours' debate.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Then I give notice that I will demand the previous question in two hours from this time, unless we can make some arrangement now.

Mr. HITT. In the mean time the two hours suggested by the gentleman will be divided equally?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. I suggest that, having heard two very able speeches on either side, a half hour on each side would be sufficient, and for that reason I have made the objection.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. In order to meet the objection of the gentleman from New York, if agreeable to the gentleman from Illinois, I will suggest that the time be limited to three-quarters of an hour on each side.

Mr. HITT. I can get along with that time and meet the demands on me.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Very well. Then I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the time be limited to an hour and a half, three-quarters of an hour on each side.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. I object to that.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Then I give notice that at the end of two hours I will move the previous question.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Say an hour and a half.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. I withdraw the objection to an hour and a half.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection?

Mr. WELLS. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman, as the Chair has suggested, can demand the previous question whenever the gentleman from Illinois and himself shall agree upon the time to be consumed in the discussion.

Mr. HITT. The gentleman from Kentucky understands that we will get through on this side in three-quarters of an hour.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I again ask unanimous consent then, Mr. Speaker, and hope the gentleman from Wisconsin will not object, to close the debate and consider the previous question ordered in one hour and a half, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from Illinois and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Under the agreement the time is limited to one hour and a half, three-quarters of an hour on each side. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER].

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with the discussion of this question, I desire to call the attention of the House to the specific terms of the amendment of the Senate which was referred to in the debate on yesterday, and I think when the House understands the full purport of this proposition there will be no hesitancy in saying that the conferees on the part of the House have acted wisely and properly in refusing concurrence in the amendment. I call your special attention to the language of the amendment itself in order that its breadth and scope may be taken in by the House. The amendment is on page 8, line 25, of the bill, and proposes to insert the following—and I will remark in passing, that if the point of order had been made in the Senate, as I think it should have been, on the proposition it would have been excluded from the bill altogether for the reason that there is nothing in the amendment which pertains to the question of appropriation for the support of the diplomatic and consular service of the United States.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. If the gentleman will permit me, does he not know that the point of order was made and overruled by the Vice-President?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I was not aware of that; but if that be the case, then, in my judgment, the Vice-President made an erroneous decision.

But this is the amendment made by the Senate:

The President is hereby authorized to contract for the entire work—

Mark the terms of the amendment—to contract for the entire work of laying a telegraphic cable between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands, and to direct the prosecution of such work whenever such a contract shall be made, and as a part—

That is, a part of the prosecution of this work, and to carry it out—and as a part of the cost of such cable the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated; said cable—

And I call the particular attention of the House to the closing lines of this amendment—said cable to be owned and operated by the United States Government.

Mr. Speaker, I venture the assertion that such a proposition has never been made before in the history of the Congress of the United States.

As has been well said, and it is conceded by gentlemen on both sides, this is but the entering wedge to appropriations in support of the building and operation of this cable, which are to amount in the end to between three and four million dollars. It is conceded by everybody that the cost can not be less than this.

Now, that is the scope of the amendment; that is the breadth of the enterprise which is to be begun upon the completion of the contract and operated by the Government of the United States. Are we prepared to enter upon this enterprise in this form? Why, sir, the honorable gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] who made the motion to concur in the Senate amendment said in the course of his speech yesterday that there had been a conference at Ottawa, Canada, at which the home Government was represented by a gentleman from across the water, and the local government of Canada was also represented. Why, sir, that conference failed entirely to accomplish anything; it declined to sanction the enterprise, and declined upon the ground that it was not to the interest of Great Britain to go into the measure at all, both the representative of the home Government and the representative of the local Canadian government concurring in that opinion.

In the course of the speech of my honorable friend from Illinois the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] has interpolated, as I find in the RECORD this morning, a report of the number of vessels which stopped at the port of Honolulu during the last year. But it will be seen, if members of the House will examine this report, that a large number of vessels, both American and foreign, entering that port were simply passing vessels, stopping in their transit to or fro at that great inlet to the Pacific Ocean and to the Oriental countries which lie beyond it. In the very table itself attention is called to this fact in notes which say:

† The greater part of this tonnage represents calling steamships of trans-Pacific lines; those of the Canadian Pacific Company, running between Vancouver and Yokohama; the Occidental and Oriental, between San Francisco and the same port, and a chartered British steamer in the Oceanic line, from San Francisco to Sydney, New South Wales.

So that a large number of the vessels stopping at the port of Honolulu, as contradistinguished from other vessels from our country, is attributable to the fact that they are passing vessels—nothing more.

My friend from Illinois said that he was in favor of this measure; and when his attention was called to the fact that in the Fifty-first Congress when the proposition was made it was voted down—

Mr. HOLMAN. And that was a Republican Congress.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. His reply was that it was done because the American people were hostile to subsidies. I am glad to know it. I am glad to find that the hostility to subsidies does not exist alone on the Democratic side of the House, but among other Representatives of the American people. Does the honorable gentleman from Illinois hope to educate the American House of Representatives up to the granting of subsidies? In his admiration of English liberality and English magnificence, which he commented on with so much favor, is he willing to forego so far the principle which lies at the foundation of our Government—that we are a Government of limited powers, and that we can only appropriate money for such measures as are in accordance with the cardinal and fundamental principles of the Constitution? Does the gentleman hope to educate the next House up to the idea of granting subsidies? He may do so; but he can not educate this House to the idea of voting subsidies for anything—much less for a Hawaiian cable—when he concedes himself, by his own remarks of yesterday, that we have now all the commerce between America and Hawaii.

The gentleman went on to show what had been accomplished in Hawaii. He commended the "republican" form of government which has been established there, and as an illustration of the wonderful growth of that "republican" Government he introduces figures to show that while the land value of the Hawaiian Islands amounts to $36,000,000, this great "Republic" composed of about 250 people had absolutely absorbed $26,000,000 worth of that land already. That is a fact, as he reiterates now by nodding assent to my statement.

Why, sir, what is the meaning of the proposition now to construct a cable from San Francisco to Honolulu at an expense to the American Government of three or four million dollars? We had a company chartered by the Government of the United States with authority to build such a cable, and that company did not carry out the enterprise because it was not profitable. But the gentleman says now that this line will be continued finally to Japan, connecting with various islands in the Pacific. And, Mr. Speaker, when we have exhausted the $500,000 for the purpose of starting this cable, is it proposed to add another and another and another subsidy until the line as mapped out by the gentleman shall be completed? Because if his argument is worth anything, and it is the interest of the United States Government to give a subsidy to construct a cable from San Francisco to Honolulu, it is far more to the interest of the Government to give an additional subsidy to complete it to Japan. It is conceded, then, that we already have all the commerce that we can get from the Hawaiian Islands; that we are in control of it; that we export almost all that they receive, and that we get almost all that they export.

Mr. COX. I should like to suggest one question to the gentleman. Under the amendment inserted by the Senate the proposition is that the United States shall own this line and operate it.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Undoubtedly.

Mr. COX. Now, suppose a conflict should arise between those islands and the United States as to how the line shall be operated, is the United States Government to assume authority to control the operation of that line, in opposition to the wishes of those islands?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Unquestionably.

Mr. COX. Then does not my friend see at once that we might be involved in a serious conflict?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Undoubtedly. We made a treaty with those people in 1875; and that portion of the message of the President of the United States which my honorable friend from Illinois adverted to yesterday was addressed to the House of Representatives in reference to that treaty, which gave such enormous advantages to the United States under the reciprocity for which it provided and under which we now absolutely control every particle of the enormous production of that country, consisting mainly of sugar, of which those fertile islands are said to produce from two to seven tons to the acre. Under the treaty those islands are allowed to send their products here free of duty; and in return we export to those islands free of duty all that they need in the way of provisions, machinery, etc.

That treaty was urged with great force by a distinguished gentleman from New York who was then a member of this House. It was advocated in most eloquent terms by my distinguished colleague [Mr. MONEY] then and now on the floor of the House.

When that treaty was about to expire, and we were likely to lose the reciprocal benefits which had been brought to this country by its passage by Hawaii and the United States, the President of the United States, in urging upon Congress the necessity of reenacting that treaty, did allude to the fact that it would be very much to the interest of the whole country to have a cable route from San Francisco to Honolulu; but he never proposed that that should be at the expense of the Government of the United States and operated by the Government of the United States. No proposition has been made in any of the great political debates, embracing the three parties of this country, so broad as this proposition to pledge the Government of the United States to construct and to operate a cable line between San Francisco and Honolulu.

No party has ever yet committed itself to the support of a proposition which looked forward to pledging the Government to the expenditure of three or four million dollars for the construction of this cable.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is the beginning of a new policy.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Yes, sir; this is the beginning of a new policy. Nearly twenty years ago an act was passed "to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Asia," but not by engaging the Government of the United States in the work of laying down a cable. That act contemplated the construction of a line of telegraphic communication by a private corporation, with certain important stipulations and reservations in favor of the United States, and was in the words following:

An act to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Asia.

Be it enacted, etc., That Celso Caesar Moreno, Alvinza Hayward, John F. Miller, Leland Stanford, Mark Hopkins, James C. Flood, William Irwin, James McM. Shafter, O. H. La Grange, Isaac Friedlander, William Alvord, Eugene L. Sullivan, John P. Jackson, Andrew J. Bryant, John B. Felton, Louis Sloss, Philip A. Roach, Nathaniel W. Spaulding, William Norris, Frank M. Pixley, and J. Craig, of the State of California; Henry Failing and Julius Friedman, of the State of Oregon; Henry O'Reilly, and William Barnett Phillips, of the State of New York; Dudley S. Gregory, of the State of New Jersey, shall have the right to construct, lay, land, and maintain a line or lines of telegraph or submarine cable or cables on the Pacific coast of the United States of America, to connect the American and Asiatic coasts by telegraph lines, wires or submarine cables: Provided, That said company shall begin to lay said cable or cables within three years from the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. That any telegraph line or cable laid by said company shall be subject to the following conditions, stipulations, and reservations, to wit: The Government of the United States shall be entitled to exercise and enjoy the same or similar privileges with regard to the control and use of such line or lines or cable or cables that may, by law, agreement, or otherwise, be exercised and enjoyed by any foreign Government whatever; secondly, citizens of the United States shall enjoy the same privileges as to the payment of rates for the transmission of messages as are enjoyed by the citizens of the most favored nations; thirdly, the transmission of dispatches shall be made in the following order: First, dispatches of state, under such regulations as may be agreed upon by the Governments interested; secondly, dispatches on telegraphic service; and, thirdly, private dispatches; fourthly, the lines of any such cables shall be kept open to the public for the daily transmission of market and commercial reports and intelligence, and all messages, dispatches, and communications shall be forwarded in the order in which they are received, except as hereinafter provided; fifthly, before extending and establishing any such line or lines or cable or cables in or over any waters, reefs, islands, shores, and lands within the jurisdiction of the United States a written acceptance of the terms and conditions imposed by this act shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State by the said company.

SEC. 3. But nothing in this act shall be construed to limit the United States in granting to other persons or companies similar privileges herein contained.

SEC. 4. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act, at any time, is hereby reserved to Congress.

Approved August 15, 1876.

Mr. Speaker, I understand that there is now a bill pending before the Congress of the United States which proposes not only to charter a company to construct a cable to Honolulu, but to extend it to the islands of the Pacific beyond, and finally to the Oriental countries, and terminate in Japan. Let private enterprise construct this if it is desired. I am not willing to see the Government of the United States start out in imitation of the Englishmen whom my friend from Illinois [Mr. HERR] so much delights to eulogize in this House. I am not willing to see the Government of the United States constructing forts upon every island in the ocean; I am not willing to see the Government of the United States building outlying fortifications around all the countries with which it has commercial relations. Let Europe shape its own policy, but let us be governed by the policy fashioned by our fathers in the pure days of the Republic, and let us look simply to our commercial welfare, as we have well done. If this cable were constructed to-morrow, whether by Government aid or by private enterprise, it would not add one iota to the commercial facilities which we have obtained by our treaty stipulations in Hawaii, nor would it do anything to develop that country or increase its commercial relations with ourselves.

I say, therefore, that this is a new departure for the American people, whether they belong to one party or to another; that this is a proposition to construct at Government expense and operate by Government money this cable, which it is conceded would not pay if it was constructed by private subscription. You may say this cable would be of value in the event of war. But here are a few islands lying in the Pacific, important to us because we have there the coaling station which we have been careful to reserve to ourselves in the harbor of Pearl River, and which we have secured exclusively for the use of the United States by the treaty of 1875 and by the renewed treaty of 1884. What more do we want?

What closer relations do we desire to maintain? Does the honorable gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] want to maintain relations with all of the barbarous tribes on the islands of the Pacific, and would he, in order to accomplish it, put the Government of the United States to the expense of constructing a cable? Why, sir, such a proposition would startle the commercial world, the idea that the Government should undertake to build up its commerce by the expenditure of four or five millions of dollars to construct a cable between the United States and the barbarous islands of the Pacific.

Mr. HOLMAN. What would we gain?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes more time.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, we should know and understand the geographical position of this country with which we are proposing to make this extraordinary connection, commercial and otherwise. From San Francisco to Honolulu the distance is 2,100 miles; to Auckland, New Zealand, from San Francisco, the distance is 3,810 miles; to Sydney, New South Wales, 4,484 miles; to Yokohama, 3,440 miles; to Hongkong, 4,893 miles, and to Tahiti, 2,300 miles.

The extension of this cable line, so that it would reach all the countries that it must eventually reach, would cost the Government of the United States many millions of dollars, if it is to be encouraged by the Government of the United States, in the shape of subsidies proportionate to that which gentlemen propose to give to the first 2,100 miles from San Francisco to Honolulu.

Now, sir, what is the condition of that country as shown to us by the census of 1878? The whole population amounted to 57,985 persons. The number of natives of pure Hawaiian blood was 44,088, and of half caste, 3,420. There were at that time Chinese numbering 5,916. Of Americans there were only 1,276; of British, 883; of Portuguese, 430; of Germans, 273; of French, 81, and of other foreigners, 666; of Hawaiians born of foreign parents, 947.

I do not think that is proposed in the interest of the Hawaiian races, but in the interest of the men who want to construct this cable under the auspices of the Government; in the interest of the men who want to conduct the commerce with those islands for their own personal emolument, and they propose that we appropriate $500,000 in aid of that purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. To begin with.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. To begin with, simply as an initiatory step, which looks to a gigantic subsidy which they subsequently desire to get along the line of the route, because they can not build it from San Francisco to the Hawaiian Islands only for the purpose of the extension of our commerce; they propose that the Government of the United States shall construct it, and then the Government of the United States, after having constructed it, must operate it; and when the Government of the United States shall have completed every mile of it, connecting by a cable under the ocean San Francisco with Honolulu, you will hear of another appeal to the American Congress, more successful, perhaps, in another Congress than it will be in this, to add another million upon top of another million, for the purpose of extending the cable line to where it will pay. That is the broad proposition.

Mr. HOLMAN. Where is it to end if once commenced?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Where is it to end if commenced? Why not apply the principle of the Populist party, to purchase all the railroads of the United States and operate all the railroads by the Government of the United States? Why not apply it to all the relations of commerce everywhere? If the Government can do it in one instance, if it can build a mile of this cable, it can under the same authority and with the same power appropriate $50,000,000 to construct it to a point where it would become valuable.

The allusion made by my colleague from Texas [Mr. COCKRELL] to the appropriation for a survey for a transcontinental railroad route was not, to my mind, analogous, because that was a contract we entered into not to appropriate a dollar, not to give one acre of land toward the construction of a railroad, because every mile of railroad in the United States which would connect with a transcontinental railroad had been built in the United States, and that was largely so in Mexico, and largely so in Central and South America; that was an appropriation simply to make a preliminary survey, and no more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TRACEY). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HITT. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. STORER. Mr. Speaker, it is only the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY], chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, who can see in this matter a party issue. I regret that he has drawn that line. I regret that he has appealed to party lines in this House on this issue, but I recognize the necessity for his doing so, because in that way alone could he hope to defeat what I believe to be, not only the wish and desire of the American people, but the wish and desire, privately speaking, of this House. This is not a party question. The vote in the Senate on this amendment showed that. Does the gentleman from Kentucky mean to impeach the Democracy of Senator BUTLER, Senator CALL, and Senator MORGAN, letting alone the votes of Senator HILL, Senator GORMAN, and Senator WHITE of California? One-quarter of the Democratic votes of the Senate polled on this issue were polled in favor of this amendment. And why? Because this was a matter which was pushed to the attention of Congress by the last Democratic Administration that we have had. It was brought to the attention of Congress twice by President Cleveland, once in 1886 and once in 1888, and it was done when there was a Democratic Secretary of State and not a Secretary of State who belongs to no party but rises either above or falls below any party, according to the judgment of him who looks at him.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. STORER. I have but ten minutes. If the gentleman will be short, I will permit him to ask me a question.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I will be very short. At the time when President Cleveland sent the message to which the gentleman refers I suppose that no Democrat or Republican would suggest—

Mr. STORER. Why, you are making a speech. I yielded to you to ask me a question.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. That he made any recommendation that the Government should own and operate a cable to the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. STORER. I object. I decline to yield further. The gentleman from Kentucky has already had time and will have time, and he can make his speech then.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I know—

Mr. STORER. In 1886—

Mr. REED. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the question of order?

Mr. REED. I would like to inquire who has the floor?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. REED. What position is the gentleman from Kentucky in? [Laughter.]

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. If the gentleman will allow me to answer, I wished only to lay before you—

Mr. STORER. I decline to allow the gentleman to take any more of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. To respond to the gentleman from Maine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio has the floor and will proceed.

Mr. STORER. When in 1886 Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Bayard sent to the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States a message saying of the Sandwich Islands:

The paramount influence we have there acquired, once relinquished could only with difficulty be regained, and a valuable ground of vantage for ourselves might be converted into a stronghold for our commercial competitors.

And followed it up by adding:

The importance of telegraphic communication between those islands and the United States should not be overlooked.

They evidently did not agree with the gentleman from Kentucky.

Again, in 1888, the President of the United States, Mr. Bayard being his Secretary of State, sent to Congress a proclamation that—

In the vast field of Oriental commerce now unfolded from our Pacific borders no feature presents stronger recommendation for Congressional action than the establishment of communication by submarine telegraph with Honolulu.

Are our interests less now than they were then? Is our Navy weaker or stronger now than it was then? Has the question of our relations to those islands been more or less of profound interest to the American people in the last two years than it was during the last Administration of President Cleveland?

Again, in 1888, the President through Mr. Bayard, or Mr. Bayard through the President, as the case may have been, announced to the Congress of the United States that—

The geographical position of the Hawaiian group in relation to our Pacific States creates a natural interdependency and mutuality of interest which our present treaties were intended to foster, and which make close communication a logical and commercial necessity.

Has the President ever withdrawn that? Never. It may be said, I know it has been privately said, that the present Administration is against this amendment. If so, the honest and decent thing for the Administration to do would be to send us a message against it after having twice sent messages urging Congressional action upon this matter. When the President of the United States calls the attention of Congress to the absolute necessity of a submarine cable to a certain place, what does that mean? Does it not mean that he desires that Congress shall take action? And yet in 1891, four years ago almost to a day, when the question was up whether this Government should subsidize or assist in laying a cable, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] opposed the proposition on the ground that a subsidy was wrong, and that if a cable was to be built at all the Government should control it.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky rose.

Mr. STORER. The gentleman will have ample opportunity to answer me in his own time. And now, Mr. Speaker, when the proposition is not for a subsidy, but that the Government itself shall build this cable, as it would build a dockyard or a dispatch boat, the gentleman still objects to it, because the Government builds it. In which way is Congressional action to be had to satisfy the gentleman from Kentucky and the President of the United States, who seems now, according to statements made privately on the other side, to have altered his opinion on this question?

Mr. Speaker, this cable to Honolulu or to the Sandwich Islands is no more a private enterprise than the building of a rapid dispatch boat for naval purposes would be. Fifteen, twenty, or perhaps thirty years ago, with the same necessity that now exists for rapid communication between our shores and the key of the Pacific Ocean for commercial reasons and for the preservation of our naval supremacy, we should have built the fastest dispatch boat then possible, and probably in such a case should have been met with objections on the constitutional ground that the Navy did not include means of sending news rapidly. But we have built such vessels repeatedly, and now, in the march of science, it is a submarine cable that is needed, and that is just as much a necessity in these days as the telephonic connection between the pilot house and the engine room of a man-of-war. The harbor of Honolulu is the sole place in this world, of commercial importance to us, that is now without a cable. It is the center of our commerce and naval power in the Pacific, and God knows it ought to be kept so. The British would make it theirs if they could. It is for you, gentlemen of the majority at this time, to say under which flag you will sail. Will you surrender our right to the interest of a subsidized British cable, or will you let us build ours, as by treaty we have a right to do?

We can not pass it without your votes. You are in the majority. If you choose to take that burden and, if I may call it so, that shame, on yourselves for the next two years, you can reject it and leave us in the minority again. But when you do it, remember what you are doing. You are not under the flag of Marcy; you are not even under the flag of Bayard; you are under the flag of the present Secretary of State; and if you want it, why stay there. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HITT. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DRAPER].

Mr. DRAPER. Mr. Speaker, a year ago, when another phase of the Hawaiian question was under consideration, I spoke at some length advocating the policy of annexing these islands, and explaining from a commercial standpoint, and the standpoint of our Pacific Coast defense, the advantages that would accrue to this country from their possession. I do not propose to repeat to-day what I then said, but I can not let this opportunity pass without a few words of a similar character.

A year ago there was considered to be some political capital in the discussion. To-day there is no reason why any man should approach this subject from any but a national standpoint, whether he is a Republican, a Democrat, or a Populist. We are all Americans, and ought to consider our foreign relations at least as Americans, regardless of partisanship.

We are one of the great nations of the earth, and should respect ourselves and provide for our needs accordingly.

Other great powers, like England and France and Germany and Russia, have recently been taking possession of the islands of the Pacific, though far distant from their home soil, until there is little left but the Hawaiian group, which is so closely allied to us by its position and its population and its commerce. If we do not annex it, eventually some of these other powers will, and we shall have another Bermuda on our west coast to serve as a base of operations against us in case of a foreign war.

England has had a jealous eye on the Sandwich Islands for many years. At the time the cession of Pearl Harbor to the United States was first mentioned in the public journals the London Times, commenting thereon, stated that—

The narrow land-locked harbor named Pearl River is in itself small in absolute extent, but of inestimable value to any civilized nation possessing it for naval purposes.

And that—the maritime power that holds Pearl River, and moors its fleets there, possesses the key to the northern Pacific.

This policy of Hawaiian annexation is not new. It has been favored by our statesmen of both political parties for nearly or quite fifty years.

William H. Seward, in a speech in the Senate in 1853, predicted that—

The Pacific Ocean, its shores, its islands, and the vast region beyond, will become the chief theater of events in the world's great hereafter.

Secretary Marcy advocated annexation in 1854, Secretary Seward in 1867, President Johnson in 1868, and President Grant in 1871. Their words are on record and referred to in my former remarks.

On December 1, 1881, our Secretary of State, James G. Blaine, in an instruction to the American minister at Honolulu, wrote as follows:

It [this Government] firmly believes that the position of the Hawaiian Islands, as the key to the dominion of the American Pacific, demands their benevolent neutrality, to which end it will earnestly cooperate with the native Government. And if through any cause the maintenance of such a position of benevolent neutrality should be found by Hawaii to be impracticable, this Government would then unhesitatingly meet the altered situation by seeking an avowedly American solution of the grave issues presented.

Finally, in his message of December 3, 1888, President Cleveland made the following statement in regard to a submarine cable, the point at issue, though I regard it as merely preliminary to a closer connection:

Proclamation was duly made on the 9th day of November, 1867, of the conventional extensions of the treaty of June 3, 1875, with Hawaii, under which relations of such special and beneficent intercourse have been created. In the vast field of oriental commerce now unfolded from our Pacific borders no feature presents stronger recommendations for Congressional action than the establishment of communication by submarine telegraph with Honolulu. The geographical position of the Hawaiian group in relation to our Pacific States creates a natural interdependency and mutuality of interest which our present treaties were intended to foster and which make close communication a logical and commercial necessity.

There is surely enough authority to warrant either Democrats or Republicans in favoring closer relations with Hawaii, or at least to prevent either from being actuated by prejudice against annexation on party grounds.

The great bulk of the trade of these islands, 91 per cent it is said, is with the United States, and the controlling element largely of American birth or descent.

American ships were the first that opened trade with Hawaii after its discovery by Cook. American missionaries have civilized its natives. American energy, backed by American capital, has brought it into our commercial system and converted it into an American outpost in the North Pacific. The question is now, Shall we retain the hold we have peacefully acquired there? Our Pacific Coast is yearly growing in population and commercial importance, and the marvelous prophecy of Mr. Seward is fast approaching its fulfillment. Will our Government, with the advantages it possesses and with the prestige it has acquired, neglect to provide for the future of our commerce in that quarter?

It is due to our citizens commercially established there that some action be taken by this Government that will add to the stability of the large interests they have built up, and that will strengthen the ties that already bind them to their mother country, toward whom none can show more sincere devotion than our brethren on those islands.

Mr. Blount's report, which was surely not a jingo document, contained the following (page 21) description of the Hawaiian people:

The white race, or what may be termed the Reform party, constitute the intelligence and own most of the property in these islands, and are desperately eager to be a part of the United States on any terms rather than take the chances of being subjected to the control of the natives. With them we can dictate any terms. The feeling of the natives is that, while they do not want annexation, if the United States does it will be accomplished, and they will acquiesce.

I also quote from his report (pages 133, 134):

A majority of the whites, especially Americans, are for annexation. The Americans of what is sometimes termed the better class, in point of intelligence, refinement, and good morals, are fully up to the best standard in American social life. Their homes are tasteful, and distinguished for a generous hospitality. Education and religion receive at their hands zealous support. These general observations can be applied to the English and German population.

The question that confronts us to-day is, Shall these islands that have been civilized and Christianized by our teachers, that occupy so important a place in our commercial system, come within our political domain, or shall we leave them to others who are greedily watching for an opportunity to take them? We have a cession of a valuable harbor there already. The commerce between this country and Hawaii carried in American ships is larger than that with any other country in the world, and in the near future an Isthmian canal will add vastly to their importance as a depot on the world's great ocean highway.

We are expending large sums on our Navy, and I am glad of it, but if we are to use a navy in time of war we must have coaling and supply stations; and Hawaii is the most valuable one to us in the Pacific. I have fully elaborated my views on this point, and was pleased to find that they were approved by the highest military and naval authorities of this country.

I believe in annexation—and I believe in this cable as a step toward it—and I appeal to those gentlemen who agree with me in this general view to vote for this appropriation.

I also appeal to all who object to foreign interference in these islands. Even the majority of the present Committee on Foreign Affairs reported February 3, 1894, that "foreign interference in the political affairs of these islands will not be regarded with indifference by the United States Government."

Now, if we do not lay this cable, England will lay one; and after she has a cable and we none—she wanting the islands as a part of her great plan for commercial and naval supremacy, and we refusing even to establish suitable communication with them—how long does any sensible man suppose they will remain free from English control?

If any Representative here wishes to prevent that, now is the time to prevent it. It will be too late to take action after England is in possession. [Applause.]

[Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. HITT. I yield now to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN].

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, and in the judgment of the people of the entire Pacific Coast, there is no question presented to the Congress at this time which is of more overshadowing and transcendent importance than the one which is now before us, except it possibly be the construction of the great Nicaraguan ship canal, which will practically extend the mouth of the Mississippi from the Gulf to the Pacific Ocean and the mouth of the great Columbia River from the Pacific to the Atlantic, saving over 10,000 miles of transportation route by steam and sail, with millions and millions of dollars saved in reduction of freight rates, insurance, and other expenses to our shippers, manufacturers, and producers of all kinds, and with a saving in time of transit between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of weeks and even months, over the present long and costly voyages around the capes.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Let me ask the gentleman if these propositions are not twins?

Mr. HERMANN. They are substantially connected together. There is no doubt of that.

The construction of a cable line to the Hawaiian Islands is not the mere result of a patriotic impulse, nor is it prompted altogether by a sentiment of friendship to the people who reside on those islands. It is the legitimate prompting of a great commercial nation, which seeks to maintain close and intimate relations with those countries which engage in extensive traffic and exchange their products with it. That this prompting is well justified it need only be said briefly that our tonnage at the port of Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, exceeds our entire tonnage at Liverpool, Hongkong, Rio de Janeiro, Havre, Sydney, and Valparaiso. In fact, there are but two other foreign ports in the world where our tonnage exceeds that at Honolulu.

Our tonnage there exceeds that of any other nationality. Last year the value of our imports from the Hawaiian Islands amounted to $10,065,317, and our exports to the islands during the same year amounted to $3,306,187. As compared with other nations this people give us 90 per cent of their entire trade; and what is equally noticeable and greatly to our advantage is the fact that this traffic is carried on exclusively in American ships. Some of my constituents are engaged in this business, and sail their own ships in constant traffic with the Sandwich Islands, selling through this means our products of fruit, flour, our manufactured products, our lumber, fish, and all other commodities produced on our coast, and bringing back in return cargoes of rice, sugar, and miscellaneous products.

More American ships entered Honolulu last year than entered Liverpool, Hongkong, Yokohama, Southampton, or Sydney. As against our $3,838,359 in exports to the islands, Great Britain exported $380,000; China, $154,696; Germany, $99,113. Nearly 90 per cent were American products sold there and only 8 per cent were British.

So much for the present commercial inducement for a cable. Looking into the near future, we behold a canal across the Isthmus, when the industries of the islands will rapidly increase and their commerce grow to large magnitude and value, and then, too, as Hawaii becomes a midway station between the Pacific States and the proposed Nicaragua Canal, cable communication with Hawaii will be felt to be more than ever valuable to the great interests involved.

So much to the business of our people which alone demands and justifies the cable. Aside from this there are political or governmental, or I may say patriotic considerations, which of themselves warrant and require this cable. Hawaii is now a Republic, with a form of government modeled largely after our own. The people who are the moving spirits of this infant Republic are of our own kith and kin. They possess that exalted love of liberty which characterized their ancestors. They also revere the flag of their fathers, and gaze with yearning eyes to the Union of States, with prayerful hope that in the not distant future their own Hawaiian land shall be merged with the American Union and ultimately become as one or as several States in the great sisterhood of States.

But viewing it merely as a neighboring Republic, we are justifified in keeping in close and rapid and absolutely independent communication with it. The very proximity of the islands to our country makes it imperative that no foreign control by the nations of the Old World should ever attach to these lands. In the event of future complications in regard to them it is essential that we should exercise the earliest precaution in their behalf. This a cable communication will enable us to do. It is in one sense a compliance with the wise maxim of Washington: "In time of peace prepare for war."

An attack upon the Republic of Hawaii will henceforth be regarded by every patriotic American as an attack upon our own Republic. Time and again has our Government indicated to the nations of the world that it would not tolerate any foreign domination of those lands. But, even in the face of this notice, Great Britain very diplomatically paves the way for future advantage by her recent endeavor to obtain a privilege for a cable station on one of the islands. Do we require any further reminder of our own interests in this direction, or shall we permit the shrewd Briton first to acquire the great advantage of cable communication?

This cable can not be constructed by individual effort. The business at present will not justify the expenditure required, and the alternative is left for the entire American people to undertake the enterprise and make it an American project for Americans and under American control.

In conclusion, I would say if we are not yet prepared to accept the political annexation of Hawaii, we are prepared to accept commercial annexation, and one of the most favorable conditions toward such union will be the construction and maintenance of a telegraph cable between the two countries.

Mr. HITT. I ask that general leave to print be given on this subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] asks unanimous consent that gentlemen be allowed to print remarks in the RECORD on this subject. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HITT. Will the gentleman from Kentucky occupy some of his time? I have no one ready just at this moment.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER].

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Speaker, like my colleague from Ohio, I regret that this eminently practical question should have taken on a political aspect. It seems to me that we ought to be able to consider it from the everyday standpoint of the average taxpayer of the United States, and it is certain that is the standpoint from which it can be most properly and intelligently treated. It is immaterial to me, much as I respect the present Administration, whether Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Gresham want this cable laid, or whether they would prefer not to have it. It is simply a question of whether the interests of the country call for the construction of the cable, and whether, if laid, it shall be as a private enterprise or at the public expense. Certainly, when the public credit of the United States is at such a low ebb that its bonds sell on a basis of 3½ per cent interest per annum, while the bonds of the English Government sell at 2½ per cent per annum, and bring a premium at that—at a time like this it seems to me that unless the increase of the public debt is called out by a vital measure that we ought to refuse to make this appropriation and upon this ground.

Again, at a time when the people from one end of the country to the other are complaining of the burden of the hardness of the times, when this burden rests upon every family in the land, and when the current income of the United States is so far below the necessary expenses of the Government, there can be no valid grounds upon which we should vote to increase the public expenses or to enlarge the debt of the United States.

Mr. DRAPER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARTER. Not at this moment. Even if we had a Treasury overflowing with money, the first question that would naturally be asked would be, Is this a proper channel in which to let a portion of the surplus find its way out of the Treasury? It occurs to me, sir, from all that I have heard in this House, that this is an enterprise which is not called for either by the commerce of the United States of to-day or by the probable business of the United States for years to come. If the enterprise promised any pecuniary returns to the investor, certainly private capital all over the country would rush in to occupy the opportunity for profit, and certainly private capital should be encouraged to employ itself in this direction, and we should refuse to allow the Government to enter into this kind of illegitimate channels—illegitimate, I mean, for the Government. I am reliably informed now that a set of gentlemen representing large capital, themselves American citizens of reputation, have appeared before the proper committee and requested that they be chartered, that they be given an opportunity to build this cable at their own expense. If this is true—and I am here to say that it is true—what excuse, gentlemen, have you, as representatives of the people, for deciding that instead of permitting American citizens to build this cable as a private enterprise you will tap and break into our bankrupt Treasury and pour out money which ultimately will find its resting place in the pockets of people who have no claim whatever upon the taxes paid by the people?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HITT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RYAN].

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will recede from its disagreement and adopt the Senate amendment to the bill. To my mind, Mr. Speaker, it needs no argument to prove that very many and beneficent results commercially and politically will accrue to the people of the United States from the construction of the proposed cable. In considering this question, sir, we must not lose sight of the fact that from many causes to which the limited time at my disposal will not permit me to even refer, but which are very well known, our relations with the people of the Hawaiian Islands have become very different from those with any other people of the world, and as one of the results the interests of the people of this Republic of the isles and of our own have become so identified as to be practically inseparable; and so, sir, I believe they must remain.

As has been well stated during this debate, this is the only spot on the globe in which our merchants have been able to maintain and to extend the supremacy of the foreign commerce of this country during the past twenty-five years, and for this reason alone, if there were none other, I think that this Democratic House, during the last days of its existence, may well show its substantial sympathy with our merchants in their laudable and successful efforts to extend their foreign commerce by passing this bill. I believe this to be good Democratic doctrine; I believe it to be good, sound American statesmanship; and I am not willing to concede that there is any difference between the two.

Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in his speech yesterday stated that the nine submarine cables connecting the United States with foreign nations had all been built by private enterprise; and he instanced that as a reason why we should refuse to subsidize the proposed cable. I should like to ask the distinguished gentleman this question: If his country were not now connected with the other portions of the civilized globe, and if it had been demonstrated that it was entirely feasible to lay a connecting cable under the ocean, but that private enterprise was not equal to the task, or, what is the same thing, if through the timidity of capital sufficient funds could not be obtained to construct and lay a submarine cable, would he then refuse to vote a subsidy to connect this country with the other nations of the world?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I will answer that question.

Mr. RYAN. I hope the gentleman will in his own time. I have only three or four minutes of my time remaining.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. You asked me a question.

Mr. RYAN. The gentleman has all the time he desires. I have but a few minutes, and am sorry I can not yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. HITT. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield the gentleman from New York time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York has the floor.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I will answer the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York declines to yield.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kentucky objected to this proposed amendment for the reason, among others, that it seemed to impose no sufficient restraint upon the President as to the terms of the proposed contract; because the Senate had shown such unprecedented confidence in the business sagacity of the President of the United States that the safeguards usual in such measures are omitted from this. I believe that that objection is a minor one and one that can very easily be removed in conference; but even if it should not be found possible to remove such an objection, I should then, with the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT], whose loyalty to the Republican party does not prevent his advocacy of a measure designed to increase the powers of a Democratic President, be entirely willing to give a vote of confidence to this Administration to the extent of permitting it the unusual latitude of action allowed by this proposed amendment.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman also said in his speech that the people of the United States had lost $56,000,000 since the treaty between the Hawaiian Kingdom and the United States, made in 1876, by the provision of which that much tax on food products which were imported into the United States from Hawaii for the consumption of the American people has been remitted or not collected at the custom-house; and it seemed to me that was a very strange doctrine to be promulgated by a Democratic leader from Kentucky. I had been taught that what is really the same in principle, that is, that the foreigner pays the tax, when stated by a Republican leader of Ohio, was rank political heresy from a Democratic standpoint; but I do not believe that because it is stated now with the apparent sanction of the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky it is any different as a political doctrine from what it would be if uttered by an Ohio Republican leader.

I do not believe, sir, that the admission of sugar and rice free of a duty of $56,000,000, and which lowered the price of sugar and rice in this country from the date of that treaty of 1876 to the enactment of the McKinley tariff, cost the consumers of this country any such sum nor any sum whatever.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RYAN. I would like one minute more.

Mr. HITT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RYAN. I believe, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, that we can well employ ourselves during part of the few remaining days of this Democratic Congress by passing this bill as amended, so that it shall secure to us a cable connection to the islands which will inevitably, in the near future, be a part of our common country; and furthermore, that we should, before the expiration of our term, follow up this good work by favorable action on the proposed Nicaraguan Canal.

With the plea that the times are not propitious for undertaking projects that may entail the expenditure of any considerable sums of money by the Government I have no sympathy. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, I contend that when employment is most needed by our people is just the time when the General Government, as the largest employer in the nation, should undertake and carry on those public improvements which are needed and necessary, and which can be done now to better advantage than at any other time. No matter what may be said to the contrary, neither the nation nor its credit is too poor to do that which is necessary for its development or protection. The small sum required by this amendment is a mere bagatelle as compared with the resultant benefits. Let us grant it, and show that the Democratic party in the last as in the first decade of this century believes in the future development and magnificent destiny of the Republic. [Loud applause.]

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER].

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, it is well enough to understand the real question before the House. The amendment presented apparently is for the sole purpose of laying a cable by the Government of the United States between this country and Honolulu, to be owned and operated by the United States Government. I say that that is the proposition, Mr. Speaker, but that is not its ultimate object. Down below the laying of the cable, down in the bottom of the hearts of gentlemen who advance this proposition there is another—not to lay the cable to Honolulu, but to lay the wires for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

I am very glad, Mr. Speaker, that I have succeeded at last in smoking out the gentleman upon the other side. [Jeers on the Republican side.]

Mr. STORER. The gentleman can always smoke out the American flag.

Mr. TUCKER. I listened with great pleasure to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT], who is a noted diplomat, on yesterday. I noticed that his speech was given up to a discussion of the commercial interest that existed between this country and the Hawaiian Islands, but I failed to hear him declare openly for annexation. I noticed his magnificent appeal to the Americanism of this House. I accept it, sir. I am for America against the world. Yet, sir, I am for America for Americans, and not America for Chinese, Dagos, Japanese, and half-breeds in the Hawaiian Islands. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I must do justice to my honored friend and colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DRAPER], who, in his discussion in this matter, with a frankness which is characteristic of him, did not conceal the fact that his object was to have annexation. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe in an ambitious government. I do not believe in that principle which would lead us to cast our longing eyes across the seas, seeking what we can gather under the folds of the United States flag. Our duty, sir, as Americans is to see that honest and good laws are enacted for the advancement, cultivation, civilization, and progress of Americans, and to see that our commercial relations with other nations are proper and correct. I am against annexation.

Gentlemen have said in this discussion that they voted for the naval appropriation bill on yesterday carrying $20,000,000 for building four war ships in time of peace. Well, sir, I found it to be my duty to vote against it; but when that bill was passed, I at least congratulated myself that the country was at last safe. But now, my honorable friends on the other side say that the Navy alone amounts to nothing. We are to have it, but, they say, "What is a navy without a cable?"

Mr. BOUTELLE. A cable is a good thing for a navy.

Mr. TUCKER. A sort of umbilical cord! [Laughter.] Why, Mr. Speaker, if the United States can not get along with the reen-forcement of the Navy, with four battle ships provided for in the bill just passed, and which I think ought not to have been passed in the present condition of the Treasury—if we can not get along with that, what next will gentlemen bring up? Do they want to extend this cable to Japan and thence to the islands of the sea beyond, and in their wild dreams of conquest and power compel submission from those countries to ours? Mr. Speaker, I have no sympathy with that idea. I have no sympathy with annexation.

Have we not questions of sufficient difficulty to contend with in the vast domain now under our jurisdiction? Have we not political and social questions enough to engage our attention? And has our solution of the great race problem with which we have been struggling for thirty years been so successful as to warrant our acceptance of others? The acquisition of territory on this continent in the past for well-known political reasons is one thing; to attempt to bring into our social fabric the islands of the sea is an entirely different matter. Sir, the argument can not be resisted that if the Hawaiian Islands, 2,100 miles from our coast, are necessary for its protection, then must it follow that the countries beyond the Hawaiian Islands must be necessary to the United States for the protection of the Hawaiian Islands. I can not do more than suggest the argument in the limited period of five minutes.

I believe that our true principle is to legislate for Americans, and not to seek, by greed and lust of power, to extend our domain across the sea. Without meaning any pun, I may suggest, in the language of another, that "when you leave the land, then are you at sea indeed." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I yield twelve minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SICKLES].

Mr. SICKLES. Mr. Speaker, I am a little embarrassed, for two reasons. First, my esteemed friend from Ohio occupied this seat a while ago, and, having nothing else to do, he tore up my speech. [Laughter.] Furthermore, he took an unfair advantage, because, having read it and torn it up, he went over on the other side of the House and replied to it. [Laughter.] So here I am, sir, with twelve minutes of time and no speech.

Mr. Speaker, I am embarrassed for another reason.

I find myself here surrounded by my Democratic associates and unable to agree with Democracy as any of those who have spoken have defined it, except my esteemed colleague [Mr. RYAN]. I am obliged to appeal from the Committee on Foreign Affairs of this House to the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate for Democracy. I read in the RECORD the magnificent speech of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, Mr. MORGAN of Alabama, in which he advocates this measure on the broadest grounds of American statesmanship, and then I hear our worthy chairman of the House committee denouncing it as hostile to all the objects of American policy and antagonistic to Democratic principles as he understands them.

I am afraid, sir, that I shall be obliged to build a platform for myself, and describe Democracy as I understand it. [Laughter.] But, sir, when I go back a little in our history I do not find myself so circumscribed or embarrassed. Thomas Jefferson was the first American annexationist. He annexed Louisiana. I am a Jeffersonian Democrat to-day, and always have been. He was denounced for it. It was said to be unconstitutional, impolitic, unwise, dangerous. Coming down the line a little further I stand with Monroe, another Democrat, who took the whole American continent under his wing and announced the policy of an American protectorate over this hemisphere; and that policy has stood intact until to-day, and will stand forever. [Applause.]

I go further and put another plank in my little platform, which I get from Andrew Jackson, under whose inspiration Texas was annexed. Jackson, too, was an annexationist, inspiring the policy of Mr. Polk and Mr. Buchanan and of Robert J. Walker, all good Democratic names. They annexed Texas. How many Americans were there in Texas when she was annexed? Not one-third as many as there are now in the Sandwich Islands. The battle of San Jacinto was fought by seven or eight hundred Americans, who annihilated the Mexican army and captured its generalissimo. Yet we are told to-day that we can not annex territory that has any foreign population. The population of Texas at the time it was annexed was nine-tenths Mexican, but what is it to-day? Texas to-day is a vast empire with millions of population, one of the brightest stars in the Republic.

I go further and take another plank for my platform from the Administrations of Polk and Pierce. When we had extended our Pacific territory and boundaries, our wise Democratic statesmen of that epoch looked to the commerce of the East to aggrandize our trade and power; a railway across the Isthmus of Panama was projected; but it could not be built. Why? Because no private capital would trust itself to the protection of the insecure governments which existed there. What happened?

The Democratic Administrations of Polk and Pierce extended our protectorate over that isthmus and covered that railway with the American flag, which has waved over it from that time to this, nearly fifty years. This is American policy; this is Democratic policy, as I have been taught from my boyhood to understand it, and as I adhere to it. But, sir, if the time shall come when I am unable to assist in the development and the progress of my country within party lines, I will break party lines, and I will seek progress wherever I can find it, as an American. [Applause.] I have done so before and I will do it again. I am happy always to stand with my political friends and associates; and I trust I shall not be separated from them on this question. I know I am not separated from the hearts of the American people. There is nothing partisan, and should not be, in this question.

Gentlemen say that they can not find power in the Constitution of the United States to lay a cable. Mr. Speaker, the Constitution of the United States gives to Congress control over our foreign intercourse; it gives to Congress power to regulate commerce between the States and with foreign nations. It gives to Congress the control of postal communications; and these are not limited to a horseback rider carrying a mail bag; they expand and extend with the times and with civilization. To-day they include telegraphic wires and submarine cables as much as they do any other means of postal communication. We were told we could not build a railway to the Pacific, but we built it all the same. We were told this Government had not the right of self-preservation, but we saved the Union all the same.

The Supreme Court of the United States has held in a long series of decisions from the era of Marshall down to this date that the power of Congress, within its sphere, is absolute and unlimited. The power of Congress extends over commerce and foreign intercourse and all forms of postal communication. Therefore, a submarine cable is as much within the authority of Congress as it would be to authorize the Navy Department to build a wheelbarrow or to buy stationery. Whatever facilities are necessary to execute an unquestioned power of Congress, no matter what those facilities may be, the Supreme Court of the United States has again and again said are within the discretion of Congress. And so is this measure.

Now, as to the future. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] says he sees lurking under this measure a possibility of annexation. I see it, too, sir; and I accept it. [Applause.] I am for the annexation of the Sandwich Islands. Governor Marcy was for it. President Pierce was for it. A long line of statesmen, Democratic and Republican, have been for it. It is the traditional policy of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, my span of life can not be extended much longer; yet I hope to live until the day when the star of the new Republic of the Pacific shall add its tropical splendor to the starry flag of the great Republic of the western hemisphere. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] has one minute remaining.

Mr. HITT. I will not use it now.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I am entitled to close the debate, I believe. If the gentleman from Illinois desires to speak, I hope he will do so now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized, if he desires to use his time.

Mr. HITT. I believe I will not use my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] is recognized to close the debate.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I have the right to close this debate, I believe.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understands.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. And the gentleman from Illinois has declined to use the residue of his time.

Mr. HITT. I yield what time I have to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] is recognized for one minute.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, as I am about to cast my vote against some of the leaders of my party I desire to explain my position in a few moments; and I hope that the one minute which has been granted me by the gentleman from Illinois will be extended so that I may have five minutes.

Mr. SNODGRASS and others. No.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask that the gentleman from New York may have four minutes additional.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York be allowed five minutes.

Mr. SNODGRASS and Mr. CABANISS objected.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentlemen certainly did not understand the request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York will proceed in the one minute which has been allowed him.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, my reason for voting in favor of this proposition is that I believe it is part of that general scheme which is necessary for the maintenance of our Navy and the protection of our national defense. I believe it is necessary that we should control the direct telegraphic communication with the Sandwich Islands in order that we may maintain a coaling and repairing station there for our Navy. I believe that it is in consonance with the principles of the Democratic party as enunciated in their national platform, where they declare that they will maintain the Nicaragua Canal against foreign control.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the debate on the Senate submarine-cable amendment has taken a very wide range. The advocates of the amendment have discussed subjects that are far away from the real question before this House, and it is well that we inquire, what are we now considering? The question now before this House is, Shall $500,000 be appropriated to start the United States Government in the business of building and owning and operating a telegraph line between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands?

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] yesterday sought to make the House believe that the President of the United States had sent a message to Congress in 1888 in which he indorsed the plan now proposed in the Senate amendment. I denied that at the time, and I deny it now. The President of the United States in 1888 used these words in his message:

In the vast field of Oriental commerce now unfolded from our Pacific borders, no feature presents stronger recommendations for Congressional action than the establishment of communication by submarine telegraph with Honolulu.

Up to and including the year 1888 no man had ever dared in our country to advocate in any legislative body that the Government of the United States should go into the business of building or owning telegraph lines. The President had no cause to believe that the Government would be asked to make such a departure from the usages and precedents of the past.

His reference to Congressional action looking to the establishment of communication by submarine telegraph with Honolulu clearly meant that a company should be incorporated to build this telegraph line, as nine other telegraph lines had been built which then connected the commercial centers of the United States with the commercial centers of the world. Only a few years before these words were written by the President a bill had been passed by Congress authorizing Leland Stanford, Celso Cesar Moreno, John F. Miller, and others to construct and maintain lines of telegraph or submarine cable to connect the American and Asiatic coasts.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STORER] in his extremity to-day insinuated that when this cable question was before the Fifty-first Congress I did not oppose the Government constructing the telegraph line. That gentleman has not read the speech I made then with intelligence if he insists on this statement. I advocated on the floor of the House that an incorporated company should build the Hawaiian cable and referred to the fact that Senator Leland Stanford was president of a company already authorized to construct that cable line. I opposed earnestly the proposition that the Government of the United States should go into the business of building telegraph lines and owning them, just as I oppose it now.

The extremity to which our friends are driven to sugar-coat this scheme has been very remarkable. My friend from Ohio [Mr. STORER] says it is a higher question than politics. He says this is a great American question. I would like to call his attention to what his own party did in the Fifty-first Congress. Congress was then asked to grant a subsidy of $3,000,000 to the construction of a submarine line to connect San Francisco with the Hawaiian Islands, and when that question was brought before the House Democrats and Republicans were good Americans and voted against it, and it was defeated by a majority of 46 in a Republican Congress.

Mr. Speaker, this debate has developed the real sentiment underlying the proposed Senate amendment. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DRAPER], as well as the gentleman from New York [Mr. SICKLES], said that it meant annexation. The sweet morsel that all of these gentlemen present is an appropriation of $3,000,000 to build this cable, and afterwards provide for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands. I am opposed to the Government of the United States going into the business of building railroads or telegraph lines, and I am opposed also to the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States, and I wish I had time to answer the gentleman from New York fully, whose speech, although that subject was not before the House, was entirely devoted to the question of annexation.

Mr. Jefferson, to whom the gentleman referred, and from Jefferson, including all the Presidents of the United States, to Mr. Cleveland, with the single exception of Mr. Harrison, always advocated the acquisition of territory contiguous to the United States. The framers of the Constitution of the United States prepared that sacred instrument for the Government of the United States of America and not for countries in different parts of the world. It was not made and shaped for a colonial system, but for a family of sovereign States composing the American Union, held and governed by homogeneous people, with harmonious institutions, and as free as possible from entangling alliances with foreign nations.

In 1803, during the Administration of Mr. Jefferson, we acquired from France what is known as the Louisiana territory, which gave us the great father of waters, the Mississippi River, as an outlet and a vast and wonderful domain contiguous to our country. In 1819, in Monroe's Administration, we acquired Florida from Spain, as bordering on our Republic. Under the Guadalupe-Hidalgo treaty and the Gadsden treaty a large scope of country was acquired from Mexico, all of which was contiguous to the United States. When we acquired Alaska, the northwestern boundary line had not been run, and that territory was thought to be contiguous to the United States. But it is proposed now to go 2,100 miles from our shores to build a cable line to Hawaii, and then annex the islands. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DRAPER] was candid enough to say he wanted all the Representatives, in voting for the cable line, to understand that that was the meaning of the adoption of the Senate amendment. The gentleman deserves to be complimented for his candor.

My friend from Illinois [Mr. HITT] in his speech on yesterday showed how fond he was of the people living in the Hawaiian Islands. There are 90,000 people occupying the Hawaiian Islands. Eighty-six thousand of them are Portuguese, Chinese, Japanese, Polynesians, and Kanakas. There are only 2,000 Americans on the islands, and 2,000 French, German, and English, making 4,000 in all; and yet my friend [Mr. HITT], in the plenitude of his generosity and affection, speaks of all the people there as "our friends, our brothers, our children."

It might well be said of this mixed population, as was said by the great dramatist:

Black spirits and white,
Red spirits and gray;
Mingle, mingle, mingle.

If the gentleman from Illinois is pleased with his endearing language, I shall not endeavor to break the spell which binds him to those people; but I wish to bring the members of this House back to the American idea that it is not our policy, nor according to the traditions of our Government, to annex or acquire any country not contiguous to our own, and that we should not vote to provide a submarine cable line except according to the way they have been built in all the years that are past—by private corporations and private capital.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House the previous question is now ordered. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] moves that the House recede from its disagreement. The question will be first taken on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry. The first question, as I understand it, is on the motion of the gentleman to recede?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Then upon my motion?

The SPEAKER. If the House votes down the motion to concur, it is equivalent to the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky to insist on its disagreement.

Mr. HITT. And if the House should recede the gentleman will have the business disposed of. I ask the yeas and nays on my motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HITT and Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky were appointed tellers at the desk.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 114, nays 153, answered "present" 2, not voting 80; as follows:

Accordingly the motion to concur was rejected.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. ADAMS. If he were present, he would vote "aye," and I should vote "no."

Mr. CURTIS of New York (having previously voted). I desire to know if the gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. PENDLETON, has voted?

The SPEAKER. He has not.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Then I desire to withdraw my vote. Were the gentleman from West Virginia here he would vote "no." I have voted "aye," but I withdraw my vote for the reason stated.

Mr. CABANISS. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. MADDOX, is absent on account of sickness. If present, he would vote "no."

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. I am paired with the gentleman from Maine, Mr. REED. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. ERDMAN. I ask that my colleague, Mr. WOLVERTON, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. I ask that my colleague, Mr. McDEARMON, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. ABBOTT with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. McRAE with Mr. GEAR.

Mr. HUTCHESON with Mr. DRAPER.

Mr. WOODARD with Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee.

For this day:

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia with Mr. REED.

Mr. HATCH with Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. COOMBS with Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. DOCKERY with Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa.

Mr. McLaurin with Mr. QUIGG.

Mr. ENLOE with Mr. HEINER of Pennsylvania.

Mr. RAYNER with Mr. SWEET.

Mr. McDANNOLD with Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. MOON.

Mr. STOCKDALE with Mr. BELDEN.

Mr. ENGLISH of New Jersey with Mr. HEINER of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MADDOX with Mr. GROSVENOR.

Mr. BURNES with Mr. COGSWELL.

Mr. RUSK with Mr. SHERMAN.

Mr. SIPE with Mr. GILLET of Massachusetts.

On this question:

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia with Mr. CURTIS of New York.

Mr. SWANSON with Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania.

On this vote:

Mr. APSLEY with Mr. McETTRICK.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The motion to concur being voted down, is equivalent to an affirmative vote of nonconurrence.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. The House having refused to recede from its disagreement, I now move that we agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Without objection that order will be made.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky, Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi, and Mr. HITT.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

CLASSIFICATION OF MINERAL LANDS IN THE STATES OF MONTANA AND IDAHO.

Mr. ELLIS of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 3476) to provide for the examination and classification of certain mineral lands in the States of Montana and Idaho.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Can I raise the question of consideration against that conference report?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can. The Clerk will read the statement and then the gentleman can raise the question of consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3476) to provide for the examination and classification of certain mineral lands in the States of Montana and Idaho, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with the following amendments:

In line 8 of section 2, after the word "and," strike out the words "two of whom at least residents" and insert in lieu thereof the words "a resident;" and the Senate agree to the same.

In lines 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19 of section 3, after the word "determine," strike out the words "and to enable the Northern Pacific Railway Company to select the indemnity for mineral lands, as provided in its charter, the surveyor-general for said State or States shall compute the area of said unsurveyed tract or tracts so classified as mineral;" and the Senate agree to the same.

In line 23 of section 5, after the word "published," strike out the words "in the capital cities of Montana and Idaho" and insert in lieu thereof the words "at the capital city of the State in which the lands may be situated;" and the Senate agree to the same.

In lines 43, 44, and 45 of section 5, strike out the words "or by some proper officer of the Interior Department, detailed by the Secretary of the Interior for that purpose, who shall receive a compensation not exceeding," and insert in lieu thereof the words "unless the Secretary of the Interior shall detail some proper officer of the Department of the Interior for that purpose. The compensation for such service shall not exceed;" and the Senate agree to the same.

THOMAS C. McRAE,

W. R. ELLIS,

Conferees on the part of the House.

JAMES H. BERRY,

T. C. POWER,

FRED. T. DUBOIS,

Conferees on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

"The Senate amendment or substitute in many respects is identical with the bill as it passed the House. Both provide for the examination, classification, and segregation of the mineral lands within the limits of the Northern Pacific Railroad grant in four land districts in the States of Montana and Idaho by a board of three commissioners for each district. The Senate amendment requires that the examination and classification shall be fully completed in four years from the date of this act. The House bill fixed no limitation.

"The most important change is in section 3, which defines what shall be classified as mineral lands. The House provision on this point is as follows:

"That all lands shall be classified and taken to be mineral lands under this act which prior to the passage of this act have been located or patented as mineral lands, or which have, or probably will have, a market value by reason of the minerals which they contain, or which show such indications of valuable mineral deposits as would induce a miner to spend his time or money upon them with the reasonable expectation of finding mineral in paying quantitles, or which from their geological formation, or their situation or proximity or relation to known mineral lands, are or probably will be valuable for the mineral therein; and all of these matters shall be considered by the commissioners in determining the mineral or nonmineral character of such lands and in classifying the same.

"The Senate amendment on this point is as follows:

"Sec. 3. That all said lands shall be classified as mineral which, by reason of valuable mineral deposits, are open to exploration, occupation, and purchase under the provisions of the United States mining laws, and the commissioners in making the classification hereinafter provided for shall take into consideration the mineral discovered or developed on or adjacent to such land, and the geological formation of all lands to be examined and classified, or the lands adjacent thereto, and the reasonable probabilities of such land containing valuable mineral deposits because of its said formation, location, or character."

"The purpose of the change is to make the definition conform to the established practice of the Department and the decisions of the courts as to what should be classified as mineral lands, and has been approved by the Interior Department. The Senate amendment gives the Department full power and authority to direct the work of the commissioners and limits the total amount of compensation to be paid each commissioner annually, including transportation and subsistence expenses, to $2,500. It reduces the compensation of the district attorney or his assistant from $15, as provided in the House bill, to $10, and provides that the Secretary of the Interior may detail some proper officer of his Department for the purpose of representing the United States at hearings before said commissioners, with like compensation.

"The provision of the House bill which declares that nothing contained in this act shall be taken or construed as recognizing or confirming any grant of land or the right to any land in the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, or as waiving, or in any wise affecting any right on the part of the United States against the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company to claim a forfeiture of any land grant heretofore made to said company, is contained in the Senate amendment. That provision of the Senate amendment relating to indemnity to said road for mineral land, which is apparently in conflict with the spirit of the said reservation of the right to forfeit the grant, is to be stricken out by the adoption of this report.

"THOS. C. MCRAE.
"W. R. ELLIS."

Mr. ELLIS of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report, and upon that I demand the previous question.

Mr. SAYERS. I would like to have some explanation in regard to this report. It seems to me to be a very important matter.

The SPEAKER. The explanation has just been read.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I would like to know from the gentleman how long it will occupy before I relinquish the opportunity of raising the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the previous question. The question is on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will not raise the question of consideration.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I trust that the gentleman will make some explanation in addition to the statement that has been read. One of the conferees, I understand, has refused to sign this report; and the House ought to know what they are doing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can be heard in reference to the report of the committee of conference. There are fifteen minutes for debate on either side.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask the gentleman from California to make an explanation.

Mr. CAMINETTI. Mr. Speaker, on the 23d day of last July this House passed what is known as the "Hartman bill," providing for the examination and classification of mineral lands within the Northern Pacific Railroad grant in the States of Montana and Idaho. An urgent necessity existing for the extension of the law to the State of California and other mineral regions—

Mr. HERMANN. And Oregon.

Mr. CAMINETTI. Yes, sir.

I prepared an amendment and submitted it to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands [Mr. MCRAE]. At his earnest solicitation I refrained from offering it, as he said it would cause debate and prevent his committee from considering other measures of importance in the time assigned to it. The chairman kindly offered to assist me in securing its insertion in the report of the Senate committee.

I secured a hearing before the latter committee, and I confidently expected to see a general law reported on the subject, or secure at least the insertion of California.

On the report of the bill to the Senate without amendment I introduced H. R. No. 8551, providing for the examination and classification of mineral lands within the boundaries of railroad land grants in the State of California.

The House Committee on Public Lands, to which it was referred, after due consideration and an extension of its provisions to Oregon and Arizona, reported a substitute therefor (H. R. No. 8794) with a favorable recommendation.

Within the last ten days the legislature of the State of Oregon has memorialized Congress in favor of its passage.

California, by a mass convention of miners, held in the city of San Francisco, representing every county in the State, passed resolutions urging the California delegation to use all honorable means to secure relief in this matter.

When the Hartman bill as amended in the Senate reached this House, a conference was ordered on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and I had the honor of being named as one of the conferees.

In obedience to the duty I owed to my constituents, and in view of the favorable report of our Committee on Public Lands, I again endeavored to include California in its provisions.

The conferees held various meetings. The main difference arose on account of this endeavor.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. CAMINETTI. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Has the conference committee jurisdiction, by any amendment on the bill, to include that or other States?

Mr. CAMINETTI. Yes, sir; for this reason: When the bill was called up for passage in the Senate an amendment was offered striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the provisions, barring a few changes made afterwards by unanimous consent, sent to this House. It came here, as the record shows, as one amendment, hence under the rule was subject to alteration or change in conference throughout.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Is California, Oregon, or Arizona included in the amendment? I am asking for information.

Mr. CAMINETTI. No, sir; the Senate conferees refused to yield, not because they had any objection to the merits of my request, but for reasons I shall explain.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. It seems to me the committee of conference did not have jurisdiction.

Mr. CAMINETTI. The gentleman will not deny that an amendment made to a bill by one House is subject to change or elimination in conference. The rule is the same whether the amendment is to a sentence, section, or, as in this instance, the whole bill. The Senate having pursued this method had reopened the whole subject. I have the opinions of leading parliamentarians who have examined the question in support of this position.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow another question?

Mr. CAMINETTI. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Is the gentleman's objection to this bill because it does not include California and other States?

Mr. CAMINETTI. I will come to that later.

Mr. SAYERS. I would like to hear the gentleman answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois. If California, Oregon, and other mining States are included, the bill would in your judgment be right and would meet with your approbation.

Mr. CAMINETTI. It would be complete if that were done. It is not my purpose to antagonize this report, but to present the facts in favor of enlarging the scope of the proposed legislation so as to include all mining regions similarly situated, and particularly to call attention to the nature of the opposition to such extension.

THE DEMAND FOR A GENERAL LAW.

The Senate committee, in its report on the question of making the law general, says:

Your committee observes that this bill is not a general one, in that it does not apply to all land-grant railroads, and while it believes that legislation of a similar character applied to all land-grant railroads would be advisable, yet it does not feel that it ought to imperil the passage of the bill, which it believes to be a wise and conservative measure, even though it does not go as far as it might desire, by attempting to amend it to make it general in its provisions. It is a step in the right direction.

The House committee absolutely commits itself in the following terms:

A general law providing not only for the examination and classification of mineral lands within railroad grants, but also for their survey, with ample appropriations for its proper enforcement, is a public necessity.

The Secretary of the Interior has lately said in a communication to Senator BERRY, chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Lands:

I am impressed with the importance of adjusting as soon as possible the railroad land grants, and I trust that Congress will take such action as may be deemed necessary, providing for the examination and classification of mineral lands at the present session.

WHO OPPOSES GENERAL LEGISLATION, OR THE INCLUSION OF CALIFORNIA IN THIS BILL?

The only objection urged to an enlargement of the territorial jurisdiction of this measure is that to do so would defeat the wishes of Montana and Idaho.

It passed both Houses by practically a unanimous vote. What opposition was openly developed was not aimed against the general purposes of the bill; certain features only were affected, which by consent were altered.

Then whence comes this opposition? Certainly not from the people, or those who represent them.

I have already cited the action of the two land committees and of the respective Houses, and I know that the conferees desire in good faith to gratify the wishes of the people, each having expressed his willingness to aid legislation for their benefit.

It has been hinted to me from outside sources that any attempt to include new territory would defeat all legislation.

I can not blame the conferees, nor the friends of this bill, under the circumstances, for their refusal to endanger its passage; but I do think it necessary to unmask the real opponents of the efforts of California, Oregon, and Arizona to obtain relief.

The Northern Pacific Railroad, the only one affected as the matter now stands, singular as it may appear, favors its passage. Whether a preference on its part for the indemnity lands has caused this unusual indication of public spirit the future will determine. It is not a bond-aided road, and so far as I am aware is not indebted to the Government. In this respect it differs materially from roads interested in the mining regions of the Pacific Coast.

The Central Pacific, the Oregon and California, and other land-grant lines are bond-aided and also indebted to the United States. At this moment some are in default to the Government.

For over twenty years they have refused to take out patents for a considerable portion of their grants, in order to avoid State and municipal taxation. Now that they are in, or about to, default, selections are being filed and applications for patent urged with an energy only equaled by that which engineered the wholesale methods of the Contract and Finance Company and other similar organizations.

Nor are they particular as to whether the selections are on land to which they are entitled by law. In this again they are true to their record.

Mining regions of vast extent have been thus covered. Lands in Eldorado, Placer, Nevada, and other counties on the leading mineral belt of the United States, from which has been extracted the bulk of the gold California has given to the commerce of the world, are not exempt from this raid.

The same course has been pursued in the northern and southern mines of our State, notwithstanding that the grant therefor expressly reserves mineral lands from its operation.

These companies, through their emissaries, are here antagonizing the wishes of the people of California.

But it is not alone on this ground that I urge action. The Government as a creditor should interpose its power to protect itself. Existing laws have forfeited to the United States lands already patented to them, as well as all other property in their possession at the date of default, under what is known as the forfeiture clause of section 5 of the Pacific Railroad act of 1862, applicable to all bond-aided roads. It reads:

On the refusal or failure of said company to redeem said bonds, or any part of them, when required so to do by the Secretary of the Treasury, in accordance with the provisions of this act, the said road, with all the rights, functions, immunities, and appurtenances thereunto belonging, and also all lands granted to the said company by the United States which at the time of said default shall remain in the ownership of the said company, may be taken possession of by the Secretary of the Treasury for the use and benefit of the United States.

Ordinary prudence, as well as the obligations of duty, dictate that lands remaining unpatented to these bond-aided roads, especially after default has taken place or danger thereof exists, should be withheld as an element of security from further loss.

The Committee on the Public Lands of the House has acted favorably on a bill having this object in view.

Pending a settlement of their debt, or the institution of proper proceedings to protect the rights of the Government, all their applications should at least be suspended, if it is not the desire to declare an immediate forfeiture as of right should follow.

Concerning these lands President Cleveland, in his message transmitting the report of the Pacific Railway Commission, makes the following recommendation:

I desire to call attention also to the fact that if all that was to be done on the part of the Government to fully vest in these companies the grants and advantages contemplated by the acts passed in their interest has not yet been perfected, and if the failure of such companies to perform, in good faith, their part of the contract justifies such a course, the power rests with the Congress to withhold further performance on the part of the Government.

If donated lands are not yet granted to these companies, and if their violation of contract and of duty are such as in justice and morals forfeit their rights to such lands, Congressional action should intervene to prevent further consummation. Executive power must be exercised according to existing laws, and Executive discretion is probably not broad enough to reach such difficulties. I especially commend to the attention of Congress this condition of affairs, in order that it may determine whether or not it should intervene to save these lands for settlers, if such a course is justifiable.

I do not on this occasion, nor did I in conference, desire to prevent Montana and Idaho from receiving the benefits of this legislation. I believe its objects, if carried out in good faith, are for the public interest; but I appeal now, as I appealed in conference, for equal privileges. You are taxing the people of California to enforce this law in those States, and yet our people are suffering far more from the evils intended to be remedied by our action to-day than those of the States named.

It was feared by the conference that the California bill might fail in securing consideration owing to the crowded condition of affairs in both branches of Congress and the limited time left for the necessary work of the session.

It was then agreed that a concurrent resolution should be prepared and introduced providing for a suspension of action on all selections within the State of California. The resolution as introduced by me in the House reads as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to suspend action upon all selections filed by land-grant railroad companies for lands situated in the State of California until the first day of January, 1896, unless legislation providing for the examination and classification of mineral lands within the limits of such selections shall be enacted previous to said date.

This, it was supposed, would give an opportunity to the Fifty-fourth Congress to take action in case nothing could be done before the expiration of this session.

Senator WHITE, of California, introduced a like resolution in the Senate.

The public land committees of the Senate and House have promptly and unanimously reported favorably thereon.

The Secretary of the Interior kindly accorded me a hearing after it was referred to him by Senator BERRY. He gives it his approval as this communication will show:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 20, 1895.

SIR: I transmit herewith a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office upon the following concurrent resolution, to wit:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to suspend action on all selections filed by land-grant railroad companies for lands situated in the State of California until the 1st day of January, 1896, unless legislation providing for the examination and classification of mineral lands within the limits of such selections shall be enacted previous to said date.

I am impressed with the importance of adjusting, as soon as possible, the railroad land grants, and I trust that Congress will take such action as may be deemed necessary providing for the examination and classification of mineral lands at the present session.

I am, however, advised that in California the land-grant railroad companies are indebted to the United States for aid given in the construction of their roads. Entirely outside of the question of mineral lands, it seems to me unquestionably advisable that the United States should patent no lands to such railroads until an adjustment can be had of the indebtedness of the roads to the United States. In my opinion, the resolution should embrace all lands in any State or Territory granted to railroad companies thus indebted to the United States.

The view herein contained is the result of a suggestion only brought to my attention within the past few days.

For the reasons given I cordially approve the resolution.

Very respectfully,

HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

HON. JAMES H. BERRY,

Chairman Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate.

Now, my object in addressing the House at this time is to present the united desire of the two committees of conference for action favorable to California, and I hope, Mr. Speaker, that an opportunity will be given her people, as well as those of other States, to prevent mineral lands from being unlawfully patented to these corporations, and at the same time protect the interests of the United States.

The experience we are having in this matter brings us face to face with a power that defies law and sets at naught the will of the people.

These same companies are now the subject of considerable attention in Congress.

ANOTHER FUNDING BILL.

They are endeavoring to persuade us that a law providing for a settlement of the first and second mortgage bonds should be passed at this session.

Sugar-coat their propositions as they may they are made of material from which they have spun the webs and traps of the past thirty years.

The new bill which is about to be reported differs only from that which was so overwhelmingly defeated by the tempting bait of the offer to pay the principal of the debt due the United States within one year.

What proof have we, what guaranty is offered or proposed that the payment will then be made?

In the mean time they secure a year's delay, enjoying the license that has enriched their manipulators, while the hands of the Government will be completely tied up, legal proceedings suspended, and valuable properties now subject to forfeiture permitted to remain in their possession or otherwise dealt with without regard to the interests of the Government whose rights thereto may possibly be waived by this course of action.

One forfeiture has already taken place involving millions of dollars in value, yet we hear of no steps being taken to protect public interests.

Rather than toy with wily schemers and stockbrokers, let us arouse the sleeping power of our Government charged with the enforcement of the law.

A TAX ON THE WEST.

While on this branch of the discussion, I purpose to direct the attention of the House to the effect of the passage of any funding legislation which may be reported.

When the Reilly bill was before us it was denied by its supporters that the local traffic would be compelled to pay the bulk of this debt.

I took issue with them and was prepared to substantiate my view had an opportunity been afforded.

I assert now that the passage of any law postponing payment, or organizing a system such as proposed by the remodeled Reilly bill, will mortgage the labor, productions, and enterprise of the people inhabiting the country through which these lines run, for an indefinite period. This particularly will be the case with California.

There are many things Congress can do; there are some things Congress should refrain from doing. This is of the latter class.

Whatever errors of omission or commission it may commit on the tariff, silver, or bond issue, it ought not to yoke us against our solemn protest to a fate so unmerited and so indefensible as that proposed.

Now for the proofs:

The Senate Committee on Pacific Railroads, in its report to the Senate, filed in anticipation of the passage of the original Reilly bill, said of the funding proposition:

Whichever plan may be adopted will require the consent of the company, and ought to take into consideration the interests of the people living along the lines and depending wholly upon them for railroad facilities. As the honorable Commissioner of Railroads well says in his special report of April 1, 1892, above referred to:

"The interests of the people living along the lines and depending wholly upon the Union and Central Pacific roads for their transportation facilities are directly and vitally involved in this controversy. There is only one way in which the railroad companies can pay their debts—that is, by earning the money to pay them with. They have no surplus funds and no sources of income except from the operation of their roads. If the terms of settlement enforced by Congress demand too speedy payments or too high a rate of interest, then if the roads attempt to comply with such terms they can do so only by levying exorbitant rates upon their traffic. This would be a hardship upon the people living along their lines. There would be no escape for those who depend entirely upon these roads for their transportation. Through rates can not be advanced; competition would prevent that. The forces of commerce are more potent than any railroad company in fixing the rates from competing centers. The burden would inevitably rest upon local traffic."

A failure of crops, the closing down of the mines, and a general stagnation in business of all kinds have prostrated the affairs of nearly all the Western roads. With little to sell, and that little bringing a low price, and with the general scarcity of a circulating medium, the condition of the Western producer is far from satisfactory. The railroads, as before stated, must depend upon local traffic almost exclusively for their earnings.

The opinion of the Commissioner included in this quotation should have weight with us. We should impress upon our minds the pertinent suggestion with which he closes:

"The burden would inevitably rest upon local traffic."

The Senate report proceeds:

As we have stated with reference to the Union Pacific, the earnings of these roads must come almost wholly from local traffic. The competition for through business has become very sharp since the completion of the other transcontinental lines of road, so that now that business pays little or nothing beyond the cost of its transportation. Along the whole line of the main stem of the Central Pacific from Ogden to Reno, a distance of nearly 600 miles, there is no local traffic of any consequence whatever. The State of Nevada, through which this line extends, is not increasing in wealth and population at all. Its population is not now as great as it was some years ago.

The mining industry in that State has for years been on a decline, and now what mines remain are all practically closed down. That industry almost alone in former years made up the business of the Central Pacific in Nevada. Without it, and with nothing else to take its place, the long line of road from Ogden west to the mountains, in the language of Mr. Huntington, might as well be "1,000 feet in the air," so far as its value for local traffic is concerned, it being simply "what you might call a bridge to connect the East and the West."

The local traffic, therefore, of the Central Pacific system must come from the country along the lines west of the Sierra Nevada; that is, along the line of the old Western Pacific from Sacramento down to San Jose, along that portion of the main line from Sacramento east to the base of the mountains, and along the branch lines. All that country is very rich, and the business of it will, in all probability, increase from year to year. It is from those pieces of road that the Central Pacific must derive its income for many years—in fact, until, if ever, the State of Nevada takes on new life and is more fully developed.

Who has or can successfully dispute these conclusions?

HUNTINGTON AND STANFORD'S ADMISSIONS.

C. P. Huntington himself, in a pamphlet bearing his signature and lately distributed to the members of the House, said on this question, "The money has to come mostly from the people who live along the line; that is, from the local business, as the interstate-commerce law has enabled the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to take most of the through or overland business."

The report submitted on a similar bill by Senator FRYE of Maine, in the Fifty-first Congress, first session, contains a letter from Senator Stanford of California, in which occurs the following:

If the Government is to be paid it must be chiefly out of the earnings of the local roads in the State of California; therefore, while the benefit has been and is national, the burden of payment will be local.

Of course he had reference only to the Central Pacific debt.

I feel that we can safely rest our case on this point without fear of the rebuttal evidence of our opponents.

The local traffic, and not the manipulating syndicates, would pay this debt.

SPURIOUS CAPITALIZATION.

But again, any refunding scheme that may be forced on the Pacific Coast, and other States affected, that does not provide for a purging of the spurious and fraudulent capitalization of these roads, will continue indefinitely the tax upon their resources which they have unjustly borne since the opening of rail communication between the East and the West.

Official reports give the amount of watered or spurious capital at $172,347,115.

The burden has been patiently suffered in the past, as a result of frauds which the law did not impose. Let us not sanction it for the future by deliberate action of the lawmaking power.

I have been led to refer to this matter in connection with the mineral-land question because they constitute twin impositions, from which the Congress of the United States should defend us with all the power in its gift.

Mr. HERMANN. I merely wish to add to what has been said by the gentleman from California that the legislative assembly of Oregon, within the last few days, has sent a memorial here in favor of the classification of lands in that State upon the same basis as those of Montana and Idaho.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Speaker, the career of this bill has been a checkered one. It ran the gauntlet of the House; it came under the scrutinizing eyes of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], and is here now, after leaving the conference committee, appropriating less money than when it passed the House on the 23d day of last July.

Mr. SAYERS. I am not complaining of the bill.

Mr. HARTMAN. I know the gentleman has not complained of it; and I am glad he does not. It passed the Senate with amendments and went to the conference. It there had a stormy time between the five members of the conference committee and the gentleman from California [Mr. CAMINETTI].

This bill contains the results of five long years of hard work on the part of the Representatives and Senators from Montana and Idaho. It represents $30,000 in cash spent by our people to pay our mineral-land commissioner in the last six years. It represents untold effort on the part of the present Representatives on this floor and of the Senators in the other end of the Capitol. It is the most important piece of legislation for the people of Montana and Idaho that has ever been enacted by the American Congress. It meets the unqualified approval of the Land Office of the Interior Department and the entire legislatures of Idaho and Montana, including the governors and State officers.

The gentleman from California [Mr. CAMINETTI] had exactly the same opportunity that I had to procure this legislation for his people; and the Public Lands Committee is here ready to listen to his cause, and if he presents a good one—and I hope he has a good one—I shall be very glad to assist him with every power that I have to secure the legislation for his people. I have no resentment against him in that regard; but I do not believe that the gentleman from California has any right to come here at this day and hour and say to me and to this House, "If I can not get California provided for—California that has not been taken care of as you have taken care of Montana and Idaho in the bill—the bill itself shall go down to defeat." I do not believe that Congress is going to do anything of that kind.

A moment further, Mr. Speaker, and I will yield the floor. This conference report has been adopted in the Senate and the conferees discharged. The chairman of the conference committee of the House, the honorable chairman of the Public Lands Committee [Mr. McRAE], has been called to his home in Arkansas, to the bedside of a sick daughter, and can not be here to participate in any further conferences; and therefore voting down this report is to defeat the bill entirely. If the gentleman from California wants to assume that responsibility it is for himself and he understands what it means.

Mr. CAMINETTI. I said expressly in the conclusion of my remarks that I was not here to antagonize the bill of the gentleman from Montana. But it was understood in the committee that I should be permitted to present the facts on behalf of California, so that the case on which we base our claim for action of this kind in regard to California might be before the House. The remarks of the gentleman, therefore, that I am against the bill, are entirely out of place.

Mr. HARTMAN. I am very glad to hear that. I misunderstood the gentleman, and withdraw any remark that I made as to his opposition to the measure.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the conference committee.

The report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ELLIS of Oregon, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that gentlemen having reports to make from the committees may be permitted to file them with the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. Without objection that order will be made. There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The following reports of committees were handed in at the Clerk's desk, referred to their appropriate Calendars, and otherwise disposed of as indicated below:

SURVIVORS OF INDIAN WARS OF 1832 TO 1842.

Mr. TAWNEY, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8595) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions to the survivors of the Indian wars of 1832 to 1842, inclusive, known as the Black Hawk war, Creek war, Cherokee disturbances, and the Seminole war," approved July 27, 1892; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE OVER THE OBION RIVER IN THE STATE OF TENNESSEE.

Mr. DURBOROW, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8873) authorizing the Dyersburg and Mississippi River Railway and Improvement Company to bridge the Obion River in the State of Tennessee; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE EMORY AND THE CLINCH RIVERS, IN THE STATE OF TENNESSEE.

Mr. DURBOROW also, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8659) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Emory and the Clinch rivers in the State of Tennessee; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OWOSSO, MICH.

Mr. BRETZ, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 6319) for the construction of a public building at Owosso, Mich.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL GAS AND ELECTRIC LIGHT AND POWER COMPANY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 7310) to incorporate the National Gas and Electric Light, Heat and Power Company of the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CONSTRUCTION OF RAILROAD, TELEGRAPH, AND TELEPHONE LINE THROUGH THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8900) to amend section 9 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the Kansas City, Pittsburg and Gulf Railroad Company to construct and operate a railroad, telegraph, and telephone line through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;" which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REMOVAL OF SNOW AND ICE FROM SIDEWALKS, CROSS WALKS, AND GUTTERS, WASHINGTON AND GEORGETOWN.

Mr. HEARD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1921) for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks, crosswalks, and gutters in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and for other purposes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 8681) authorizing the Arkansas Northwestern Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 273) extending from March 1, 1895, to the 15th day of April, 1895, the time for making returns of income for the year 1894, and for other purposes; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 209) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver condemned cannon to Asher Gaylord Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Plymouth, Pa.; to the William H. Tarbee Post, Grand Army of the Republic, McGrawville, N. Y.; to the Eckley B. Coxe Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Freeland, Pa., and to the R. Carpenter Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Chelsea, Mich., and

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 273) extending from March 1, 1895, to the 15th day of April, 1895, the time for making returns of income for the year 1894, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment, joint resolution (H. Res. 277) in reference to the Free Zone along the northern frontier of Mexico and adjacent to the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Joint resolution (S. R. 134) calling on the President to take such measures as he may deem necessary to consummate the agreement between the Governments of Spain and the United States for the relief of Antonio Maximo Mora, naturalized citizen of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the Congress of the United States has learned with high gratification of the special honors paid to the memory of the deceased by the Government of Mexico upon the occasion of the death of the Hon. Isaac P. Gray, late minister of the United States near the Republic of Mexico.

Resolved, That in token of the appreciation of the same, the Secretary of State be requested to forward to the Mexican Government an enrolled copy of this resolution.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. TARSNEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8892) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first formal reading of the bill. It is quite a long bill, comprising many items, and must be taken up and considered by paragraphs.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I think unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading ought to be given. I believe there will be no objection on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would be glad if the gentleman from Illinois would give me his attention. I ask that there be no general debate on the bill, but that as items are reached about which there will be some discussion we shall then agree to such reasonable general debate on the several items, other than that allowed by the five-minute rule, as may be acceptable or desirable. There are some matters that will probably lead to more extended debate than can be allowed under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will say to the gentleman in charge of the bill that, so far as I know, upon this side of the House there is no disposition except to consider this bill in good faith. I concede that consideration and real debate is most valuable, provided it can immediately precede a vote of the House upon the proposition debated.

There are some matters on the bill, and I am advised that there will be perhaps a few other matters moved by way of amendments, that will probably lead to a more extended debate than can be had under the five-minute rule—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I agree that there shall be longer debate when they are reached.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And if the gentleman is willing to say that when we shall reach such items from time to time liberal general debate may be allowed, I am quite willing, so far as I am concerned, that he should proceed now with the consideration of the bill by paragraphs.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I agree to that; and when these items are reached I think the gentleman from Illinois and myself will have no difficulty in arranging a reasonable time for debate upon them.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. BAILEY. I would like to give notice to the gentleman from Kentucky that when we reach the appropriation for the payment of the judgments of the Court of Claims we shall want a longer time than the five-minute debate.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I understand that the gentleman from Texas may desire, or may not desire (for there may be such developments in the mean time as to render it unnecessary), a more extended debate than would be allowed under the five-minute rule on the Indian depredation claims. As the amount involved is large, and the principle quite important, I think that such an arrangement ought to be assented to, and I will gladly agree that there be a reasonable time allowed for debate on that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the understanding between the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] the gentleman from Kentucky now asks unanimous consent that general debate be considered closed. Is there objection? [A pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will proceed to read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read the following:

STATE DEPARTMENT.

For contingent expenses, namely: For care and subsistence of horses and repairs of wagons, carriage, and harness, rent of stable and wagon shed, care of clocks, telegraphic and electric apparatus, and repairs to the same, and for miscellaneous items not including the foregoing, $650.

Mr. DURBOROW. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 3, page 2, insert:

"And the Secretary of State be, and he hereby is, authorized to transfer to the trustees of the Columbian Museum, of Chicago, all of the exhibit of the Department of State at the World's Columbian Exposition that was procured with funds appropriated for the support of the board of government, management, and control, and exhibited in the building known as the Convent of La Rabida and the east gallery of the Government building."

Mr. SAYERS. I want to reserve a point of order on that amendment, pending an explanation by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBOROW]. I submit to the gentleman whether we had not better insert in the bill a clause transferring the seat of Government with all its archives at once to the city of Chicago? [Laughter.]

Mr. DURBOROW. Mr. Chairman, in explanation of this item I want to say that during the preparations for the late Columbian Exposition in Chicago the Exposition corporation and the United States Government, acting in conjunction, sent a number of special commissioners on special missions to the South American countries, to collect there such relics and exhibits as would be proper for that Exposition. These were collected, and in a large measure exhibited in the Convent of La Rabida and in certain sections of the Government building, chiefly under the control of the State Department. In order to take advantage of existing conditions at the close of the Fair, the citizens of Chicago subscribed very liberally to the endowment of what is now known as the Field Columbian Museum. A very large sum of money has been raised for this purpose; and it is intended—

Mr. SAYERS. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. DINGLEY. I renew it.

Mr. DURBOROW. It is intended, Mr. Chairman, to collect and perpetuate in this museum the most complete exhibit of relics and nautical apparatus of all kinds of the time of Christopher Columbus that has ever been embraced in any collection in the history of the world. The trustees of this museum desire very much that this small collection from the Latin-American countries, which really has now but a nominal value, should be turned over to them. The State Department has recommended such a transfer, and it needs only the formal action of Congress in order that the transfer may be completed. I hope the point of order will be withdrawn.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will ask the gentleman whether there is not in the Smithsonian Institution here a collection kindred to that referred to in the amendment, embracing duplicates of almost everything that is now at Chicago?

Mr. DURBOROW. Yes, sir; almost everything is duplicated.

Mr. SAYERS. I have withdrawn my point of order. I simply wished to afford the gentleman an opportunity of explaining the amendment.

Mr. DURBOROW. I certainly appreciate the gentleman's kindness.

Mr. DINGLEY. I reserved a point of order on the amendment. I desire now that it be read again in order that we may fully understand it.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. DINGLEY. This amendment, I see, covers the whole exhibit that was made—

Mr. DURBOROW. Only what is now left in Chicago.

Mr. DINGLEY. Some of it has been transferred?

Mr. DURBOROW. Almost everything now remaining is duplicated in the Smithsonian Institution. It is only the duplicates that it is desired to keep out at Chicago.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman says that "almost everything has been duplicated." What is there that has not been duplicated?

Mr. DINGLEY. I hope that the gentleman from Illinois will explain what this collection consists of.

Mr. DURBOROW. The collection consists of a number of curios collected from Mexico and the Central and South American States. It consists principally of photographs.

Mr. DINGLEY. What is the remainder?

Mr. DURBOROW. The remainder is pottery, nautical instruments of the time of Columbus, and records. Almost everything was gotten up in duplicate; and the principal part of the original collection has already been transferred to the Smithsonian Institution. These articles that we desire to have out there are only the duplicates.

Mr. DINGLEY. Would not this amendment cover the articles already transferred to the Smithsonian Institution?

Mr. DURBOROW. It was not so intended.

Mr. DINGLEY. The language of the amendment appears to cover all the articles which were exhibited, a large number of which I understand have been transferred to the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. DURBOROW. It is not intended to cover those already on exhibition in the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then does not the language need some modification? I am entirely willing that the articles remaining at Chicago shall be transferred under the amendment; but not those already transferred to the Smithsonian Institution. I suggest that the gentleman modify his amendment so as to cover specifically what he says was intended.

Mr. DURBOROW. I will accept an amendment to that effect.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent that this paragraph may be passed without prejudice.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. It can be settled now by inserting the words "except such as are already in the Smithsonian Institution."

Mr. DURBOROW. I will accept such an amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. Knowing that the most important of these articles have been transferred to the Smithsonian Museum, I do not want any paragraph adopted in this bill that will transfer the articles which have already been removed to the Smithsonian Institution. It seemed to me that the provision was broad enough to cover the whole, because those articles were a part of the exhibition.

Mr. DURBOROW. It occurs to me that such a construction might possibly be placed upon this amendment, but that is not the intention at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the amendment insert the following: "Except such as are now under the control of the National Museum."

Mr. DINGLEY. I withdraw the point of order.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

United States and Venezuela Claims Commission: For salaries and expenses of the Commission to arbitrate the claim of the Venezuela Transportation Company against Venezuela, under act of August 27, 1894, $7,500.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I am authorized by the Committee on Appropriations to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, after line 9, insert the following:

"Bering Sea damages: For the payment to the Government of Great Britain, under the agreement reached by exchange of notes of August 21, 1894, in full satisfaction of all demands for damages against the United States growing out of the controversy between the two Governments as to the fur seals in Bering Sea under the award and findings of the Tribunal of Arbitration at Paris, $455,000."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that that item and the next item, relating to the Bering Sea arbitration, be passed over for the present.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I am quite content that that should be done, with the understanding that it shall not be called up just about the time of adjournment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. As to that I shall consult the gentlemen of the minority.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. This is an important amendment and should be considered when there is a full attendance and when the members are not weary.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. We can agree privately as to that. We have eulogies at half past 3 this afternoon, and therefore it is impossible to discuss the matter to-day. I suggest that we pass it.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I heard the proposed amendment read, but did not understand the statement in reference to it. Has there been any agreement about it?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. We have agreed to pass it for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky state his proposition again?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent that this item and the next be passed for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the amendment pending and the next item be passed for the present. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

That the Auditor for the Treasury Department be, and he hereby is, directed to allow the expenses for personal services of officers, clerks, and employees in the Executive Department of the Treasury incident to the enforcement of the provisions of the act of October 1, 1890, respecting bounty on sugar and to the collection of internal revenue, under the provisions of "An act to provide for the collection of internal revenue, and for other purposes," approved August 27, 1894.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer at this point the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 4, after line 18, insert the following:

"Office of Auditor for Post-Office Department: For temporary clerks in the office of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department for the purpose of bringing up the work now in arrears in said office, $8,000, to be available from April 1, 1895, until expended; said temporary clerks to be appointed from those now in the classified service of the Treasury Department."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For post-office and court-house at Charleston, S. C.: For completion of building, $40,000.

For post-office at Fort Dodge, Iowa: For completion of building, $1,500.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move to strike out the item for the post-office at Charleston, S. C., and at Fort Dodge, Iowa, lines 3, 4, 5, and 6, on page 9, because those items have been put in the sundry civil bill in the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to strike out lines 3, 4, 5, and 6, on page 9.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Those two public buildings are provided for in the sundry civil bill in the Senate.

Mr. DINGLEY. Do they not properly belong in this bill?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. No; they belong really in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. SAYERS. I will state to my friend that some years ago, as I am informed, there was a double appropriation made for a building at a certain place in the United States, whereas but one appropriation should have been made, and yet they used the double appropriation. Now, these towns that the gentleman refers to are provided for in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. My query is, whether these items are not really deficiencies instead of being current expenses?

Mr. SAYERS. They are not deficiencies; they are to increase the limit.

Mr. DINGLEY. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to strike out lines 3, 4, 5, and 6, on page 9.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For post-office at Richmond, Ky.: For completion of building, $35,000.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I make the same motion as to that. It is also included in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to strike out the two lines which have just been read. If there be no objection it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I understand that today has been set apart, after half past 3 o'clock, for eulogies upon the late Senator Stockbridge. I, therefore, now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TARNSEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 8892, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HOOR OF MEETING.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the House meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock, and if that is agreed to I think we can conclude the consideration of this bill during the session of to-morrow. The larger part of Saturday is to be taken by eulogies on the late Senator Vance.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the House meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock, so as to go on with the deficiency bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. DURBOROW, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of William N. Pringle, Fifty-second Congress, no adverse report having been made.

LATE HON. FRANCIS B. STOCKBRIDGE.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Thursday, the 21st day of February, beginning at 3.30 o'clock p. m., be set apart for eulogies on the life and services of the late Francis Browne Stockbridge, late a Senator from the State of Michigan.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 9.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. Francis B. Stockbridge, late a Senator from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay proper tribute to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, As a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has received with sincere regret the announcement of the death of the Hon. Francis B. Stockbridge, late a member of the Senate from the State of Michigan, and tenders to the family of the deceased the assurance of their sympathy with them in the bereavement they have been called upon to sustain.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a public servant, the House, at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to transmit to the family of Mr. Stockbridge a certified copy of the foregoing resolutions.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, from the eastern shore of Lake Michigan and the scenes of his life work I bring my humble tribute of affectionate regard and lay it upon the grave of Francis B. Stockbridge.

Born in obscurity on the rocky coast of New England; apprenticed to business in Boston; achieving fortune and fame in the great Northwest, and dying in the fullness of years, honored alike by the great and the lowly—these are the graphic outlines of his illustrious career.

When he came to my State in 1851, an adventurous youth of 25, the resources of the Commonwealth of Michigan were comparatively unknown. Her primeval forests were then unsubdued. Beneath the site of the Indian wigwam lay vast deposits of unknown mineral wealth. Here it was, with a prescience worthy of maturer years, young Stockbridge cast his lot with that select body of men whose enterprise was destined in a few short years to transform Michigan into homes of comfort and cities of wealth.

The same sagacity that guided his business affairs characterized his political career.

Notwithstanding the presence of two distinct civilizations, apparently irreconcilable, he saw with a prophetic vision the inseparability of civil liberty and Federal union.

Through the darkest days of rebellion Governor Blair had no truer friend or safer counselor than Colonel Stockbridge.

When peace returned to our distracted country and great economic questions confronted our nation he brought with him to the United States Senate and to the solution of governmental problems the lessons of patriotism and the practical experience of business.

The curiosities of a new political economy never bewildered his judgment or entangled his feet. The truths of finance and of revenue wrought out in the white heat of the American Revolution and demonstrated during a century of national life were never abandoned by him.

In the Republican and Democratic parties he saw the embodiment of a natural and historical issue. Within one or the other of these parties he believed all the needed reforms could be accomplished. The disintegration of either by collateral issues he believed would result in the ascendancy of the other. Hence, he welcomed to Republican councils Prohibitionists and Populists and all who had a cause or a grievance.

I first met Colonel Stockbridge in 1871 at the convention which nominated him for the State senate. He was then a strong man of 45, of commanding presence and affable demeanor. His fine head was crowned with dark hair, and his full beard was untouched by age. His kindly face had no trace of severity, save those lines of thought which constant business habit had been registering there since his sixteenth year.

His largest title at that time was that of "The Saugatuck Lumberman." He had already served in the lower house at Lansing, and a man of his nature could not fail to appreciate the generous expression of confidence contained in his promotion to the State senate.

It is customary on occasions like this to speak of the early life of the illustrious dead. To be well born involves three factors, namely, lineage, locality, and liberty. Organic quality must be inherited, environment must favor development, and freedom to act attend upon opportunity.

The name of Stockbridge proclaims an English ancestry. To be descended from a race which has maintained the supremacy of one flag on all the seas during the most momentous centuries of human history is no mean honor and itself an earnest of inherited worth.

Of the locality of his birth I can not speak in detail, as I have never seen the storm-swept hills of Maine; but this I know, that great men have been nursed beneath her wintry skies. Their names are illustrious in our country's history. One was the second officer in rank in the Republic and the Presiding Officer of the Senate during all the years of civil war. One was a distinguished Secretary of State, whose fame as a parliamentarian and statesman outranked in honor the Executive himself. Another is the present distinguished Chief Justice of the United States; and on the decisive field of Gettysburg, at a spot where the combat was fiercest, I read an inscription to the soldiers of Maine who fell in the defense of their country's flag.

Francis B. Stockbridge was born at Bath, in the State of Maine, April 9, 1828, and died suddenly and painlessly at Chicago, Ill., April 30, 1894, while on his way to California with his wife.

His father was a physician in ordinary circumstances. He was nurtured in a home of comfort, education, and refinement until his sixteenth year, when, in 1842, he went to Boston and began his business career as a commercial clerk. In 1847 he removed to Chicago and connected himself with the lumber business, and, becoming interested in Michigan pine lands, in 1851 he removed to Allegan County.

Here he wooed and won his faithful wife, Miss Betsy Arnold, of Gun Plain. In 1874 I was elected to the seat formerly occupied by him in the State senate, and from that time to the time of his death I knew him well and he was closely identified with my county, my State, and my political party.

Colonel Stockbridge possessed the qualifications of leadership. His knowledge of men was intuitive and his charity for their failings unbounded. In his upward progress to fame and fortune he was never weighted with malice nor disabled by envy nor corroded by jealousy. His faith in men and in the possibilities of the future enveloped his life in the sunshine of hope and guided him to certain success.

It is often the case that men render favors from selfish motives and hope to receive personal advantages as a result of their benefactions. These men pass by opportunities to show unselfish "humanity to man."

Senator Stockbridge was often known to show his liberality, which came from the kindness of his heart, without the remotest expectation of praise or personal gain, and this virtue must have made him many friends.

During the campaign that preceded his last election to the United States Senate the contest for nominating members of the legislature was in some localities very active between the friends of Mr. Stockbridge and his opponents. In one locality the opposition united upon a man who was very popular and influential in his locality, and his friends also thought this a proper time to give him the honor of a seat in the councils of the State, and they so conducted the campaign in his interest that his nomination was conceded. But, to the surprise of all, when the roll was called at the convention, his nearest friends voted for his opponent, and thereby gave him the nomination. When asked afterwards why his personal friends had deserted him, he replied:

"Many years ago, when I was a poor boy, I walked into Saugatuck as good as barefooted and wore only an excuse for clothing. I met Mr. Stockbridge and talked with him about the prospects for work. He informed me that he had nothing for me to do. 'But,' said he, 'come with me to the store.' I did so, and he directed that I be supplied with everything necessary for my personal comfort. I accepted his generosity; and although since then I have been abundantly able to pay him, as you know, yet the spirit with which he supplied my necessities forbade my offering him a moneyed consideration. I have not seen Mr. Stockbridge in many years, but if I had been nominated and elected you would have expected me to have voted against him. This I could not have done, so I asked my personal friends to vote for the other man." Thus, the unselfish consideration given to that poor boy gave to the benefactor a vote for the United States Senatorship.

As society is now constituted the accumulator of wealth must be a leader of men. There was a time when leadership meant power; to-day it means justice; for such leadership the workmen of America are yearning.

The revolt of society is not against authority but against avarice. Of all the virtues that promote the well-being of man I would assign to justice the first rank. Industry, temperance, fortitude, and benevolence are grand virtues, but they are often self-relative and expend their force on a narrow field. What the world is perishing for is justice, not charity. If one-half of the millions that are wasted in organized Christian charity was expended to promote the plain pagan virtue of justice between man and man the daybreak of the millennium would flock the eastern skies.

Daniel Webster it was who said:

Justice, sir, is the great interest of man on earth. It is the ligament which holds civilized beings and civilized nations together. Wherever her temple stands, and so long as it is duly honored, there is a foundation for general security, general happiness, and the improvement and progress of our race.

Speaking of justice; Sydney Smith said:

Truth is its handmaid, freedom its child, peace its companion, safety walks in its steps, victory follows in its train. It is the highest emanation from the Gospel; it is the attribute of God.

Above all things is justice—

Said David Dudley Field—

Success is a good thing, wealth is good also, honor is better, but justice excels them all.

Such were the ethics of Senator Stockbridge. And whether you visit his mines in the upper peninsula of Michigan or his lumber yards in the lower; whether you inspect the plant of the Red Wood

Company of California, or the Spring and Axle Works of Kalamazoo, or his famous stock farm in western Michigan, everywhere and always the secret of his leadership was the recognition of the rights of those he led. And as a tribute to his memory I would carve upon his monument these words: "He believed in the equal rights of all and in rendering to each his own."

That was indeed a sorrowful day when Michigan paid its last tribute of love to the faithful son she had delighted to honor. Very few, if any, of the great cities of the State were unrepresented. Around his casket gathered alike the rich and the poor, the titled and the lowly; all social, political, and religious distinctions vanished beside the grave of one who was broad enough to be a patriot without partisanship, a capitalist without ostentation, and a Christian without sectarianism. Death has of late been a frequent visitor to the Senate Chamber. First, it claimed the distinguished Georgian, Senator Colquitt. Next, in rapid succession, Senator Vance, North Carolina's honored son; and before the funeral dirge of Senator Vance had died away, the announcement went forth that Michigan's senior Senator had received his final summons.

Farewell, most loyal citizen. Farewell, most wise statesman. Farewell, devoted husband, esteemed neighbor, and faithful friend. Well may we say with Senator McMILLAN, "His genial presence and kindly nature are now a loved remembrance."

Mr. GRIFFIN of Michigan. * Mr. Speaker, it was not my privilege to be personally acquainted with the late Senator Stockbridge. His social and business relations were largely remote from my home, in the city of Detroit. His political sympathies and surroundings, so far as political parties are concerned, were entirely different. Though both were members of the Fifty-third Congress, I came into it at its second session, and he was called from it when that session was little more than half under way.

It is sufficient, however, to warrant my use of a few moments' time that we both came from the same State. If more is needed it is to be found in the esteem accorded him while living and the respect paid him dead by every citizen of Michigan who knew of his honored career. Born in the East he sought the West for his fortune, and he was its own architect. Happily for him and happily for the State, he found a home in the Commonwealth made illustrious by the great statesman whose name is so often coupled with the names of Clay, Webster, and Calhoun; a State rich in its waters, its forests, and its mines; a State carved out of that immense Northwest Territory and inspired by the utterance of the ordinance of 1787, "Schools and the means of education are forever to be encouraged;" renowned for the intelligence and morality of its people, for its common schools and colleges, and for its great university, whose light through its teachers and scholars illumines and enlightens the civilized world, occident and orient alike.

He was quick to discover its natural advantages and its superior attractions as a home. It needs no personal acquaintance with the man to be assured that to be chosen from such a State and by such a people to the Senate of the United States there must be something in him of character and manhood to provoke admiration and win approval. If we turn, therefore, to that source of knowledge which is not infrequently more searching than the oftentimes partial judgment of personal association; if we turn to the common and united speech of his fellow-citizens, which go to make up reputation, we shall find by this estimate that the people made no mistake in their choice, for he was every whit a man. A member of the staff of Michigan's war governor during the second epoch in this country that tried men's souls, he cherished no bitterness and no sectional hatred when the contest was over.

With a full realization that this nation, to be the greatest must be united, and that the glory and grandeur of the Republic are to be preserved and perpetuated by the unflinching loyalty and undying devotion of every section and of all her sons, he longed for harmony and brotherly forbearance with peace, for real content and satisfaction with outward reconciliation. He was generous in sentiment, considerate in expression, not impatient of honest difference of opinion, and ever dominated by the patriotic impulse that lingers upon the words of one of America's most lovable poets—words which seem freighted with a divine afflatus:

Thou, too, sail on, O Ship of State!
Sail on, O Union, strong and great!

Our hearts, our hopes, are all with thee;
Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears,
Our faith triumphant o'er our fears,
Are all with thee, are all with thee.

Nor, Mr. Speaker, was he a novice in legislative experience when he entered the Capitol. He had in the very prime of manhood been successfully chosen representative and senator in the councils of his adopted State. It was there undoubtedly that he won his first spurs as a wise and safe legislator; there he gained the confidence of his associates and the plaudits of the people, riveting their attention upon him, until he became the target for kindly expression and generous approval, eventually culminating in the grateful summons to go up higher.

He had not been educated for the forum or specially equipped for the halls of legislation. He was not learned in the scholastic sense of the word, but nature had gifted him with a remarkable capacity to divine cause and effect, and had endowed him with a sort of correct a priori reasoning. These things stood him in good stead in business and public life, and enabled him to accumulate wealth, and at the same time hold himself secure in the growing love of the people. He was one of those rare men who, without early mental discipline in the direction of scholarship, in the midst of increasing business cares and responsibilities, fitted himself to creditably and faithfully serve his countrymen in the highest station the State can bestow.

I have alluded to his wealth. His fortune for these times was not extremely, but moderately, large. It had come to him by earnest and steady effort and by honest and wise management, availing himself of the opportunities offered in the legitimate avenues of traffic and trade. But he was not a man to glory in his riches. He was rich in good works and willing to contribute. He held his wealth in trust for the good that it could accomplish. He was a bountiful giver. Every object of charity and benevolence felt the kindly touch of his generous nature, and the benedictions of the poor were always over and upon him. In the quaint language of the old preacher, he "furred himself warm with poor men's hearts." He had scarcely attained the age of three-score years and ten, but if we live in deeds not years, he had reached the full limit of four-score.

Mr. Speaker, I should be untrue to my own instincts, and this most imperfect sketch would be most unjustly incomplete, if I failed to recall one feature of his life which, pervading as it did his entire business and public career, is deserving of a most marked recognition. The voice of Him who spake as man never spake, whose utterance gave back to the despairing widow of Nain her only son, called from the tomb the brother of Mary and Martha, restored the ruler's daughter, and on the midnight lake even the winds and sea obey, had a potency and charm for him that permeated all his ambitions, and, as unerring as the Star of Bethlehem, always brought him in sight of the will and command of the Master. His religion was not a thing of lip service. It was not the seeming, but the real. It was not without only, but within also. He left no wound prints, the marks of gross betrayal, and no deeds that reveal the whitened sepulcher.

Humbly at this hour I pay this meager tribute to his memory. He lived a life of usefulness, of honorable distinction, of worthy example, and bequeathed to those he left behind a precious legacy of good works and a record of high and lofty achievement. He sleeps the sleep of the just. How true it is—

The last end
Of the good man is peace! How calm his exit!
Night dews fall not more gently to the ground,
Nor weary, worn-out winds expire so soft.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, my acquaintance with Francis Browne Stockbridge, late a Senator from the State of Michigan, was not intimate, but sufficient to give a distinct impression of his manly, sturdy character.

His neighbors at home and his colleagues in the Senate all testify to his singleness of purpose and his straightforwardness; also to his great good sense and his faithful perseverance in whatever work he undertook. His judgment was always excellent, whether on questions of business or of public concern. Though always able to express himself clearly and forcibly, he was in no sense an orator. In fact, he made no attempt at display in speech, but was rather a man of action than of words.

He had only a common-school education, with perhaps a term or so at the academy. He was a native of the State of Maine and was 69 years of age at the time of his death. He had been eight years in the Senate, having been first elected in 1886 and again in 1892.

The high honor of a seat in the United States Senate is matter of recognition by the entire American people. And no man can reach that enviable distinction, and especially be reelected, except there be that in him worthy of high approval in the estimation of the people of his State. It seems that Senator Stockbridge had reached this commanding position with the people of the great State of Michigan, and had become the worthy successor in the Senate of such distinguished men as Lewis Cass, Zachariah Chandler, and Jacob M. Howard. Yes, Senator Stockbridge had made his way to this goal of great difficulty and placed his name among these great names in the history of his State. And the question I am going to ask, if you will bear with me for a little time while I answer it, is, By what means was this grand result reached? What was the secret of this great success?

And first of all, in answering, let me say that this was not Senator Stockbridge's first great success. He had before that made a great success in business and amassed a large fortune, not by speculation, but by a lifetime of industry and patient labor. He had also accomplished the great success of winning the hearts and the absolute confidence of all who knew him; the great success of being esteemed, not only independent and able, but thoroughly upright, and always to be relied upon to perform to the utmost verge all that he had promised, and frequently more than was expected of him, not only in matters of charity but in business as well. And these great successes, possibly thought by some not very great, but, I repeat, these great successes were the stepping-stones by which Senator Stockbridge rose in the estimation of the people of Michigan, till they crowned his reasonable ambition for a seat in the United States Senate with success also, thereby honoring honest worth and providing themselves with a representative in that body sure to guard well their interests and always to uphold their honor.

Senator Stockbridge had served creditably in both branches of the State legislature, and had shown himself familiar with public questions, both State and national. In his extensive business enterprises he had displayed great courage and ability; in fact, here he was a veritable leader among men. But that which most of all impressed the people with his superiority was the rectitude of his life, both public and private, and the nobility and grand individuality of his character. He was, indeed, a fine specimen of American manhood, and his noble qualities came partly from inheritance and partly from a well-ordered life, into which entered but little of frivolity and vanity, and much of sober, thoughtful work, not only as the means of success for himself but of usefulness to his fellow-man. He was a good illustration of the poet's conception that—

Life is real! Life is earnest!
And the grave is not its goal;
Dust thou art, to dust returnest,
Was not spoken of the soul.

He was in the first place born with that idea. He was of good, strong Puritan stock, which is never quite destitute of energy and a certain religious flavor which have made New England civilization what it is, and not alone New England civilization, but largely that of the great West.

He acquired no extravagant false notions in the receptive, formative period of childhood and youth, spent as it was in the simple, quiet home of his father, a country doctor. And if we had a full and particular history of the four years, from the age of 17 to 21, spent by young Stockbridge in the wholesale store in Boston, we should undoubtedly find him strictly faithful and conscientiously diligent in the work of his employer and exemplary in all his habits—doubtless standing then, as in all after life, on the principle of total abstinence from intoxicating drinks, which he did not depart from here at the capital, but exemplified, as few have the courage to do, by having no wine served at his elegant and sumptuous dinner parties.

Yes; if the curtain could be raised on these four years, young Stockbridge would undoubtedly be presented as "many a time and oft" politely but firmly declining the invitation of friends and acquaintances to partake of the flowing bowl.

It would also disclose the fact that his companionship was not with the prodigal young man who "wasted his substance in riotous living." He evidently did not invest all his current earnings in "wild oats," as was unquestionably done by many a gilded and giddy youth of his acquaintance, whose life naturally enough in most instances ended early in failure.

No; for at the age of 21 we find him with some cash and much character, and with good habits and good health, settled in the lumber business in the then young city of Chicago. Here, as at every point in life, he was successful. His upright dealing won confidence and credit, and his business sagacity and foresight, backed by unusual energy of character, soon carried him from his lumber yard in Chicago to the sources of supply in the pineries of Michigan.

Here he bought lands and built mills and pushed his fortunes till he was accounted a rich man. Villages sprung up about him and thousands of men were in his employ; all of whom, because of his kindly relations with them, had come to look upon him as a sort of foster father.

Of a sudden, however, one of those terrible forest fires which have more than once devastated the State of Michigan overran his lands and swept lumber and mills out of existence. He was thought to be utterly ruined, but the indomitable spirit within him rose equal to the occasion.

He at once set himself with unabated courage to the work of repairing his fortune. His employees stepped forward to a man with a loan of their savings. They had implicit confidence in Mr. Stockbridge, the same as the people of Michigan had when they intrusted him with their interests in the Senate of the United States. And thus seconded by the men in his employ he resumed business, striking out into new fields, and, phoenix-like, out of the ashes of his first estate sprung another far greater, but which he all the time looked upon as a trust fund for the benefit of mankind—for the relief of the orphan world, rather than for his own personal use and aggrandizement. He always held open hand toward charities, both great and small; to which the Kalamazoo College, Academy of Music, and Young Men's Christian Association building stand as eloquent witnesses; while the church of which he was a member leaned upon him as upon a pillar for support. And the poor whom we have with us always, and whose benevolent steward he felt himself to be, were never turned empty away—he seldom, if ever, stopping to inquire if, perchance, he might not sometimes be imposed upon.

Such, in brief, were some of the qualities of the late Senator Stockbridge, and is it any wonder that when his sudden death was announced the newspapers told us of many a moist eye and husky voice in the city where he had his home and where everyone felt that he had lost a personal friend?

Any picture of Senator Stockbridge would be incomplete which did not present his benevolent and sympathetic acts as wholly without ostentation or display, and as well guarded by a dignified and quiet reserve, both of manner and speech, which to the stranger seemed to make him a little inaccessible; but with the acquaintance and the friend the cordiality was complete, while with the needy a statement of the case was all that was necessary.

The picture would also be incomplete if it did not disclose underneath this sober, earnest exterior a vein of pleasantry and humor that always relished a joke and had a keen sense of the ludicrous; a taste, also, for the beautiful, both in art and nature, especially for that most beautiful and noble of animals for the use of man, the horse. And so strong was his admiration not only for the beautiful but for the lively in nature, that he had one of the largest and best establishments for breeding the trotting horse in the whole Northwest, in which he took great pride and pleasure. Here is, indeed, a bright, brisk spot in the otherwise quiet outline of his sedate career.

But the picture would be still incomplete, sadly incomplete, if it did not bear testimony to those rare qualities of head and heart which always saved him from serious mistakes and kept him on the right side of all public questions. He was wise and patriotic. His judgment was clear, strong, and practical. His convictions were always a fixed quantity, he was never tossed about by the uncertain winds of expediency, and, as the result, his public record is one of fidelity to duty and of honor alike to himself, his party, and his State.

Mr. Speaker, aside from respect for the dead, if there be any profit to the American people in the memorial exercises held from time to time in the two Houses over deceased Senators and Members, it is to be found in the lesson for the living, and especially for young men, to be drawn from the life and career of those who have gone out from amongst us and are now at rest.

It seems to me that in the life of this deceased Senator may be found a valuable lesson for American youth. Here was a poor boy of humble birth, who won his way to a seat in the American Senate, with only limited educational advantages, and with none of the gifts or arts of oratory, which sometimes obscure defects in judgment and are frequently accepted as a substitute for sounder qualities, but which never fail to dazzle and attract, and are really the mediumship of the highest public service; with none of the arts, either, of the professional politician, but with a life devoted to the stern demands of business, in which everything he undertook was thoroughly and conscientiously done; a life of which each day gave proof of his sense of responsibility to his Creator and his fellow-man; a life filled with the every-day heroism of the faithful and the just; in short, a life worthy of imitation and of commemoration.

Mr. Speaker, the following verses from Longfellow's "Psalm of Life" were written of such men as the late Senator Stockbridge, and are fit to be read in any presence:

Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime,
And departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time.

Footprints that perhaps another,
Sailing o'er life's solemn main,
A forlorn and shipwreck'd brother,
Seeing, shall take heart again.

* * * * *
Let us, then, be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that Senator Stockbridge was a native of the State of Maine and of the district which I have the honor to represent, it is fitting that I should unite in the tributes offered on this occasion to his memory.

I do this all the more gladly because the bond of sympathy which always unites the sons of Maine wherever they may have cast their lot was supplemented in the case of the departed Senator by the ties of mutual respect and confidence.

Although only 17 years of age when he left his boyhood home in Bath, Maine, in 1848, to enter upon the struggles and take up the responsibilities of active life in a large business establishment in Boston, yet, young as he was, he was equipped with endowments inherited from a Pilgrim ancestry that always insure success—industry, self-reliance, integrity, pluck, and that practical grasp of men and affairs popularly styled "common sense," not because it is common, but because it embodies those qualities which enable the possessor to speak the word or do the act which is at once recognized by men everywhere as the right thing at the right time.

When, five years later, at the age of 23, young Stockbridge went to Chicago, then just entering upon that marvelous career possible nowhere else than in the great West, and entered into business for himself as a lumber merchant, he was admirably fitted by the thorough training which he had received in business methods, added to his natural aptitude for business affairs, to take high rank in a city famed for the ability and push of its captains of industry and trade. True to the instincts of a son of the Pine Tree State, he soon found himself pushing his way into the forests of Michigan, the New England of the West, to which State he removed in 1851, and in whose development and business and political activities he was a tireless and prominent factor till the day of his death.

When called to positions in public life Senator Stockbridge displayed the same practical qualities in State and national affairs that he had shown in his successful business career. On committees, where the work of legislation is really done, his thorough acquaintance with business and industrial life made him exceptionally useful. Although never trained as a public speaker, yet his plain, businesslike statements on practical questions always commanded attention and carried conviction. The confidence which his character inspired gave great weight to his brief speeches, strikingly illustrating the truth that it is not so much the words uttered as the man behind them which gives potency to speech.

Mr. Stockbridge's fame rests, however, on his conspicuous success as a business man. He was one of those sagacious and enterprising men, endowed with a rare business insight and foresight and capacity to organize and execute on a grand scale, who have been instrumental in developing the wonderful resources of this country within a generation to a degree that surpasses the fabled energies of Aladdin's lamp. Under their sagacious leadership and marvelous inspiration our broad expanse has been spanned with railways, the valleys and the mountains have been made to yield up their treasure, the rivers coursing to the sea have been laid under contribution, the forests have been utilized, and the broad prairies, no longer "tickled with the hoe" in the hands of man, but cultivated with machinery, which works with human intelligence, have "laughed with harvests" such as the world never before saw. The forces of nature have been harnessed by capital and made to so cooperate with labor that human energy has been multiplied many fold and wealth produced as never before—wealth which has been distributed by an economic law higher than statutes in increased wages to labor, lower cost of products to every human being, and a bountiful recompense to those exceptional captains of industry whose genius and skill have made possible such results.

It is to me, Mr. Speaker, a peculiarly gratifying trait of the well-rounded character of Mr. Stockbridge—a trait, indeed, without which no character can be said to be well rounded—that he regarded the wealth which had come to him by virtue of his rare God-given business capacity, not as his alone, but in large measure as a trust placed in his hands for the benefit of his fellow-men. In that charming gem of the many beautiful cities of Michigan in which he so long resided, and to which his remains were taken for burial, his benefactions were so numerous that his name was a synonym of public spirit and benevolence.

The sympathy of his nature and the kindliness of his heart were manifested in his beaming countenance, his helpful greetings, and his philanthropic deeds. Some men are a perpetual benediction as they tread the pathway of life, and cheer and aid the struggling around them. Such was Senator Stockbridge.

While possessed of abundant means to gratify every desire, Mr. Stockbridge was unostentatious, modest, and simple in his tastes and mode of life. The simplicity, sobriety, and rectitude which were a part of his pilgrim inheritance followed him through life, and were as manifest in the whirl of business and the gayeties of the national capital as when, a boy of 17, he left his quiet home on the Kennebec, with the benediction of those who had watched over him in infancy and boyhood and taught him the way of truth.

He was a type of that grand Pilgrim character—judged by its influence and fruitfulness, worthy of eulogy in story and song—for which Brewster and Winslow and Standish stood, leaders who, though dead, are still striding from the Atlantic to the Pacific, molding our institutions, framing our laws, inspiring our policies, and impressing themselves on the West as well as the East, on the Pacific slopes as well as on New England.

Those who are accustomed to denounce New England as if her people were of a different type from the people of the great West, and to speak of the men of the East as if they were in antagonism to the men of the West, forget that it was the sons of New England and New York and Pennsylvania, of whom Senator Stockbridge was a type, who laid the foundations of Ohio and Michigan and the States beyond; and that the bond of kinship and sympathy which exists between those who left our hearthstones to found a new empire and those who remained behind and their descendants can never be broken.

Mr. Speaker, I should fail to give an adequate conception of the character of Mr. Stockbridge, and undoubtedly of the potent influence which shaped his life, if I should lose sight of the fact that he was a Christian man in the sense that he was an earnest believer in the great truths of Christianity and had a deep and abiding personal faith in the Saviour of mankind. It is such a faith which builds character that stands like a rock when the hours of trial come, and inspires a life's weary wayfarer with courage and hope. It is such a faith that lifts men above the storms and buffetings and disasters of this life and enables them to do their duty here nobly, bravely, and grandly by widening their vision, deepening their faith in God, and giving them root not simply in the transient world that now is, but also in the immortal world beyond.

The great change which with our narrow vision we call death, but which to the spiritual vision is only the laying aside of the worn and dusty garments of this brief life and the putting on of the splendid robes of immortality, must come to all. It never comes hidden, whether it appears with or without warning. It came to him whose memory we honor to-day suddenly, but I doubt not it found him prepared.

It is a consolation to those who mourn that, though he has passed through that great change which we call death, yet he still lives—lives in the fragrance which his helpful life shed; lives in the loving remembrance of those who best knew him; lives in that higher, nobler, and better unending life, of which this is only the preparation and threshold.

Mr. LINTON. Mr. Speaker, we have met at this time for the purpose of paying a tribute to the memory of a leader, a typical American, and an honest man. I, sir, not only had the honor of being a member of the legislature which first elected Francis B. Stockbridge to the Senate of the United States, but it was my lot and privilege also to be a member of the caucus which placed him in nomination for that high position; and, having been one of his supporters therein, I watched his career with the greatest interest, and now, during the busy closing scenes of the last session of the Fifty-third Congress, it is indeed a sad pleasure for me to say kind words of the man whom all Michigan loved.

He was a great organizer if not a great orator, but at times he spoke with much force, while his genial manner and kind actions toward all who had the pleasure of his companionship won for him admiration and respect.

He was loved not only by his home people, but by all residents of Michigan, and by every American citizen who was honored by his acquaintance.

He was ever vigilant and watchful when the interests of his constituents and the Peninsular State were at stake, and was diligent and careful when performing any and every duty assigned to him.

He was a man of good judgment, with firm convictions, and his counsel and advice were always in demand by those who knew him; and now that he has passed to the great beyond, we here this afternoon exemplify in his honor one of the kind features of political life, when members of all parties join in kindly, courteous tributes to his memory.

His employees knew him to be a friend in time of need; honest and intelligent, he was a safe counselor to those in trouble; determined upon doing right, he never faltered in the battle of life and his courage never weakened. No other man assisted more in developing the great resources of Michigan. He caused her soil to be cultivated, her live stock to be improved, mines to be opened, railroads to be built, caused the enactment of wise laws, and in divers other ways helped to make the Wolverine State great, wealthy, and strong. He was a man of deeds and not of empty words, while his votes in the United States Senate and elsewhere were cast for honest convictions and not for policy. He was loyal to the party of his choice, but was free from offensive partisanship or prejudice toward those who differed from his political views.

It was my privilege to be assigned as a member of the House committee which attended Senator Stockbridge's funeral in the pleasant city of Kalamazoo, chosen years ago for his life's home. There I saw the lip quiver and the tear fall upon the faces of neighbors and those who were bound by ties of relationship as they looked for the last time upon the form about to be laid away upon the hill top in their beautiful cemetery. There were gathered men and women who had long known the dead Senator during his active life and had been associated with him in social, business, and political affairs. I shall never forget their sad hearts, sorrowful countenances, and the great attendance, showing the high esteem in which he was held by those whom he had so often joined in enterprises for the advancement of his city and State, and also many times aided in charitable works, being enabled so to do by his wealth, every dollar of which was accumulated in honorable pursuits, and the possession of which never caused him to lose that gentleness of manner or the spirit of good fellowship for which he was so well known.

The community in which he lived considered him a benefactor in every sense of the word. We all remember the warm clasp of his hand and the heartiness of his greeting. We know that in his public as well as his private life he evaded no duty nor shirked any responsibility. Although seldom heard in debate, his judgment in committee rooms was considered the best, and there where our work is mostly performed he often decided the fate of a bill or measure under consideration. His record has no stain upon its page, as evil doing was never thought of in connection with his name; and his life being full of success and exemplifying the possibilities of American citizenship, it is proper and fitting that we should to-day pay homage to whom homage is due by revering the memory and saying kind words of Senator Stockbridge, whose name and deeds will be cited as an example so long as our Commonwealth exists.

He died with his armor on. Commissioned by the people of a great State to sit in the council chamber of the world's leading Republic, and with his name still upon the roll, he was called beyond the grave, where we hope at the end of earth's existence the universal congress of all nations may assemble for time eternal.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. Speaker, in deference to a long-established custom of paying tribute to a deceased member of either branch of Congress, I rise to make a few remarks touching the life and official career of the Hon. Francis B. Stockbridge, late a Senator from the State of Michigan.

I am not given to lauding the services of the living or rendering fulsome praise to the dead. I am constrained, however, to feel that it is a matter of justice and a common expression of feeling of respect to the late Senator to call to mind some attributes of strength, success, and admiration that attended him through life. Of his birth I know nothing other than what is now a matter of history; of his training neither do I know anything than what his neighbors have told; of his public career, when called to official dignity and state, I am fairly well conversant.

Two things have always strongly impressed me with a feeling of admiration for Senator Stockbridge. The first is that unconquerable disposition that he has always manifested to succeed in that to which he aspires. The second is his absolute and unquestionable loyalty to his friends that he made. The first great element of his strength is that which commands the respect and admiration of every American citizen. Success once attained, the beneficiary is justly entitled to the consideration of his fellow-men. Coming into the business, social, and political controversies of this life as he did quite fully and fairly demonstrates the possibilities that are within the reach of the young men of this country who are not upheld and supported by distinguished parentage, wealth, or social relations. No more beautiful illustration of the possibilities of a young man in this country could possibly be exemplified with more force and effect than that which Senator Stockbridge has given to the people of his adopted State.

As it has been said many times, some are born to honors, others have honors thrust upon them. Neither could be said of the late Senator; he acquired all that he had, and is therefore more to be honored than if they had come by any other source. I never had a very extended personal acquaintance with Senator Stockbridge, but from what little I did see of him and have known of him, I am satisfied that he must have had elements of strength in his honesty with his friends, his devotion to his principles, and his strict compliance with his promises and obligations in every walk of life, that made him especially strong with those who came in everyday business contact with him.

I occupied a seat in the upper branch of the Michigan legislature when Senator Stockbridge was first elected to the honorable position, to which he was subsequently reelected, in the United States Senate. I occupied a seat on the floor of the house of representatives at Lansing, when a very warm friend of mine, Senator Palmer, of Big Rapids, presented the name of Francis B. Stockbridge as a candidate for United States Senator in the Republican caucus. With the eloquent and oratorical effort for which Senator Palmer was especially distinguished, he pictured in such glowing terms the life, the business qualifications, the capacity, the honesty, the probity, and the worth of Mr. Stockbridge as an honorable citizen of the State that it made an impression on my mind that I never have, and perhaps never will, forget.

In speaking of the second great qualification, for which Senator

Stockbridge has been especially admired and respected by his associates and friends, irrespective of party, throughout the State, that is, his loyalty to his friends, I can not too strongly express my admiration for a man who is particularly identified as the one who never forgets his friends. I do not believe that a man ought to be blind to the interests or wishes of those who are not especially classed as his friends, but I do think that one of the strongest elements that any man in public life can bring to bear in his own behalf, and in the behalf of his party, is that of faithfulness to those who were faithful to him. This may not be in strict accordance with the doctrine of the New Testament, but it is the most natural to human kind, and justified in Holy Writ. To my thinking the most beautiful tribute that I could pay to the memory of a departed friend would be to say he thought first of those who were loyal to him in the hour of need.

Senator Stockbridge did not believe in the public policy of Governmental affairs that I do; he believed in the advocacy of a policy purely and exclusively American. Whether I think he was right or wrong, is a matter of little concern here; it is enough to say that I believe he was sincere in the advocacy of his principles. I have great respect for any man who advocates a policy, even though I think him wrong, if he is sincere in the advocacy of the same. That Senator Stockbridge was sincere in everything that he did, I have no question of doubt, and I do not think that others who know him have; that he was honest in his purposes goes without saying; that he was kind-hearted is well known by the many beneficiaries of his liberal purse; that he was broad gauged and considerate in the national and religious rights of others is well known and wholly appreciated by all the people familiar with his life. He was honest, sober, sincere, and liberal in what he did.

He was a beautiful illustration of the possibilities of American citizenship—an unquestioned type of a self-made man.

Mr. WEADOCK. Mr. Speaker, having had for many years only that knowledge of Colonel Stockbridge which every citizen of Michigan had, having known him as one of the prominent business men and one of the political leaders of the State, my closer knowledge of him began in the Fifty-second Congress. Colonel Stockbridge prior to that time had illustrated in the highest way one of the most beautiful aspects of political life in this country; that is, the strong and enduring friendship that political contests bring, for there are none of us who can fail to remember those friends who, at great cost to themselves either of time or money, or both, have stood by us and the principles which we represented in those contests with that loyalty which inspires a memory lasting as long as life itself. This is one of the few compensations which come to those who are engaged in public life.

One incident I wish particularly to speak of. At a certain time in the history of Michigan a certain Senator who belonged to Senator Stockbridge's party, and whose term was about to expire, was the candidate of a large majority of his party for reelection. A revolt was led against that choice. Colonel Stockbridge, then a private citizen, stood by this man who was the choice of his party with a loyalty, an earnestness, and faithfulness that challenged and won the admiration of the people of that State. Financial and other misfortunes had come to this man of his choice, but he stood in the breach unflinching, ready to fulfill every obligation and every requirement of the situation.

When the nomination for Senator was offered him, if he would step aside and abandon his friend, he firmly refused to do so, and a new man was elected. He served only one term. In his stead, there came from the State of Michigan, with a very strong public sentiment behind him, created by the steadfastness and loyalty he had shown to his friend, the man whose memory we are commemorating to-day, Francis B. Stockbridge.

In the Senate, and throughout his career, Colonel Stockbridge was always plain, modest, unassuming, loyal, and friendly. He belonged to that class of lumbermen that in Michigan, using the colloquialism of the camps, we call the "State of Mainers." They are among the most successful lumbermen of the State, and it was in that line of business that his great success was achieved prior to his coming to the Senate.

Of his career in Washington the gentlemen who have preceded me have perhaps sufficiently spoken. Never at any time nor at any place did he fail to remember the slightest wish of any citizen of his State or fail to respond to it in the fullest measure. Without pretension to great learning, his library was one of the choicest in the State, and he was a man of wide information. He had studied nature in her great forests; he had studied men in the great arenas of business and public life. And education is not so much that which we are taught as that which we know. With such an education as that our departed friend was exceedingly well equipped.

Those who see their friends taken from them wonder often that the busy hum of life goes on without any change; that the birds still sing, and the sun shines, and the world follows its usual avocations, when everything seems so dark before them. So on these occasions of enlogies upon our departed brethren, the great demands upon human activities call this and that and the other man away, so that at the close only a few men, who have some special interest in the proceedings by their closer acquaintance with a departed fellow-member, remain to pay the last tribute of respect to the deceased.

In such facts as these there is perhaps but little encouragement to enter upon a career in the public service. At such times such a career seems perhaps the most thankless and disappointing that can fall to the lot of anyone. But it is a part of the obligations of good citizenship to discharge in the best manner we can the official duties we may be called upon by the preference of our fellow citizens to perform. And to the discharge of such duties with a hearty loyal friendship, with a thorough love of country, with thorough loyalty to friends, and with a thorough appreciation of the every-day duties of life came Francis B. Stockbridge, whose memory we honor to-day.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. Speaker, Senator Stockbridge, with whose friendship I was honored while in the Senate, was a man of genial and equable temperament, most courteous and obliging in manner, who never for a moment seemed to lose his self-poise, much less to act from impulse which endangered in the slightest degree his absolute self-possession. But his calmness of demeanor did not indicate any want of strong opinions and deep convictions or of determined will. He was really a man of great intellectual powers, and his views upon all questions were those of a strong thinker, guided and controlled by sound judgment and the promptings of a philanthropic heart.

He was of New England birth. In fact, Michigan has been called the New England of the West, and it is true, probably, that the influence of the three northerly States of that section of the country, Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont, has been felt more strongly in the growth and development of Michigan than in almost any other of the States which have been begotten of the old thirteen. To New Hampshire the State of Michigan seems almost as a daughter, although the mother may not ever be too fondly remembered, for the great girls of the family do not always like to think of the little cradles in which they were rocked; but later on they will remember, for Cass and Chandler were from New Hampshire, and our hills are high enough for us to behold the mighty growth of Commonwealths born of her own institutions which tower along the lakes, in the great valley, and across the continent, overtopping the mountain ranges with still more elevated moral and political institutions, to the far-setting sun and the Pacific seas.

Senator Stockbridge was from our sister State of Maine, and it is enough to say of any man that he was a worthy son of that noble mother. He was a business man in the largest and best sense. He knew how to make money without robbing his fellow-men under the forms of law, and the great fortune which he acquired by wise and prudent intellectual grasp of the resources and opportunities which surrounded him, but which would have been wasted but for his capacity to comprehend and utilize them, was as legitimately his own as the wage of the laborer for his daily toil.

Wealth thus acquired does not provoke the envy of the less fortunate. They rejoice in it, rather, and point their children to such examples of the success of honest and generally of self-made men as a proof of the excellence of our institutions and the justification of the hopes which should stimulate their own honorable activities.

The masses of the American people do not subscribe to the doctrine that "property is robbery," and they never will. But too often, as they look upon the millionaire, they know that robbery is sometimes the source of property.

Men like Senator Stockbridge restore the public mind and demonstrate not only that honesty and fair dealing may result in great wealth, but by their wise and humane administration of vast possessions assure the people that a man is a man for all his wealth as well as for all his poverty. With the constantly increasing prejudice in our country against owners of immense wealth, it is something—perhaps I may well say that it is high honor—to have acquired and administered great fortune so as to have won the approval of society as a rich man.

Senator Stockbridge was a model for all rich men.

The strong, solid business man, with his practical ideas and his old-fashioned honesty and conservative conduct in affairs, is an indispensable element in the successful statesmanship of this country. We are preeminently a business country, and the happiness of our people depends upon the prevalence of sound and sensible ideas in economic affairs. More and more business men must come to the front in the making and administration of our laws.

Of this increasingly important class of men in our higher politics Senator Stockbridge was one of the most influential and best illustrations that I have known. His loss in the very prime of life and while his influence was ever widening and increasing, and when his State and country hoped for his services for many years to come, was a distinct and serious calamity to the public, as it was a source of irreparable grief to his large circle of personal friends.

But his high example will long be remembered for the encouragement and instruction of those who survive, and the benedictions of those who loved him will keep his memory fresh and unfading forever.

[Mr. RICHARDSON of Michigan addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. AVERY. Mr. Speaker, the death roll of the Fifty-third Congress is a long one, and Michigan has contributed to it two honored names, J. Logan Chipman from this House, an able lawyer, an eloquent speaker, an upright judge, and an earnest and steadfast friend of the veteran soldiers; and Francis B. Stockbridge from the Senate, in whose memory these exercises are being held.

Death comes unheralded, asks no questions, and will take no excuses, but leaves with the living its admonition, "Be ye always ready."

Senator Stockbridge came of sturdy New England stock, and traces his ancestry in this country back to 1635, when a young Englishman by the name of John Stockbridge, well born and prosperous, with his young wife and baby boy 1 year old settled in Scituate, Mass. He bought a mill and built another, also a mansion house, which was used as a garrison during King Philip's war.

Mill-building and the milling business seem to have descended in almost regular line from this four times great-grandfather down to the late Senator.

From this John Stockbridge have descended some of the most eminent men and women of New England—business men, merchants, lawyers, physicians, and scientists.

About 1800 William Stockbridge, the grandfather of the late Senator, is described as the greatest landholder in Hanover, Mass., and it is of record that he was a man of "ready wit, lively and sociable in his habits, an agreeable companion, and an industrious and upright citizen."

He was a selectman in Hanover in 1812. His son John, father of the late Senator, was a physician, and settled in Bath, Me., in 1805, where he practiced his profession for forty-eight years, and was known as a "scientific and successful practitioner, a consistent and devoted friend, and an honest and upright man."

Here Francis B. Stockbridge was born in 1826. His mother, Eliza Stockbridge, was the daughter of the Hon. John Russell, for many years the editor and proprietor of the Boston Commercial Gazette. Here he attended the common schools and academy until he was 16 years of age, when he accepted a position as clerk in a wholesale dry goods store in Boston.

When barely twenty-one years of age, in 1847, he turned his face westward, and from a clerk in a dry goods store in Boston became at that early age a lumber merchant in Chicago. Soon after this he saw across the lake in Michigan an almost unbroken forest of pine. He saw also the practically unlimited demand for lumber the settlement of the vast prairies of Illinois and the West would create.

At that time he could hardly have foreseen the wonderful growth of that marvel of the West, the city of the World's Exposition of 1893.

But with true business instinct and sagacity he saw his opportunity and added to his business as a lumber merchant that of a manufacturer of lumber in Michigan. And while yet a young man only 27 years of age, in 1853 he took up his residence in Saugatuck, Mich., just across the lake from Chicago, where he had already mills engaged in cutting lumber.

Here he rapidly extended his business until he became one of the most prominent and extensive lumber manufacturers and dealers in the Northwest.

In 1863 he married Miss Betsy Arnold, the estimable and accomplished daughter of Daniel Arnold, of Gun Plain, Allegan County, Mich., who survives him and is now living in elegant retirement in this city.

Always domestic in his tastes, genial and social, though somewhat of a retiring disposition, his social and domestic relations have ever been most pleasant. At his elegant home in his own beloved city and State he was noted for his hospitality, and the humblest of his many friends always found as warm a welcome as those most favored by fortune.

At the nation's capital he and his accomplished wife have moved in the most select circles and have been noted for the munificence and elegance of their entertainments and receptions; and many there are who will remember the genial and unostentatious host and hostess of the Stockbridge mansion.

My first acquaintance with the late Senator was in 1870, while he was serving his first term in the Michigan legislature. I there learned to respect him for his sterling qualities of head and heart.

He was known for his good sense and attention to duty, and as an industrious and painstaking committee worker. He seldom took part in the discussion of subjects not directly connected with his committee work. When he did he was brief, pointed, and clear and commanded the attention of all.

He never posed as an orator, and yet he had a good, strong, clear voice, well modulated, and spoke directly to the question under discussion with great clearness and force, but without any attempt at ornamentation.

He took an active part in several campaigns and was counted a well-informed and logical speaker. He always spoke within the comprehension of the common people, and made plain the question he discussed, and the people understood him and believed in his honesty and sincerity of purpose.

After serving one term in the lower branch of the Michigan legislature he was elected to the State senate, where he served one term with the same conscientious fidelity to the interests of his constituents and State as he had in the lower branch. He was never an office seeker, but he was always ready to respond to any duty, public or private, imposed upon him.

In 1874 he removed to Kalamazoo, one of the most beautiful of Michigan's inland cities, where he resided at the time of his death. Though never a politician in the general acceptance of the term, he was always interested in public affairs and kept thoroughly informed upon all questions affecting the interests of his State and nation, and he was frequently mentioned as one who would honor the State as its chief executive.

In 1887 he was elected to the United States Senate to succeed the Hon. Omar D. Conger, and in 1893 he was reelected to succeed himself. In the Senate he was known and respected as a practical business Senator, as an industrious worker, and for his devotion to the interests of his constituents and State. He always kept in close touch with the people of his State, and the humblest citizen could write him at any time with perfect assurance that his business would receive prompt attention and his letter a respectful answer.

While he was a Republican of pronounced views upon all the economic questions that divided the parties, and gave to these questions close study and practical application, he was never offensive in giving expressions to them, and thus by his courtesy and firmness won for himself the respect of his colleagues for his honesty of purpose and practical ability.

He was a lover of the beautiful in art and nature. He adorned his home with rare and fine pictures and stocked his farm with fine horses and thoroughbred cattle; and he never appeared to better advantage than at home when he had laid aside the cares of state and business, and gave himself up to the enjoyment of the beautiful in his home and on his farm. As a business man he had a capacity and liking for large operations, and yet he was conservative, methodical, and always thoroughly familiar with the details of every interest with which he was connected. And in business, as in political life, he was the soul of honor, and nothing so aroused the fire of his indignation as to have his confidence betrayed by one in whom he had confided.

As a citizen he was ever mindful of the interests of his own city and State, and was in every way a broad-minded and generous man. In his private charities he followed the injunction of the Master, "Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth," and many a needy and distressed family in his neighborhood have had their prayers for food and warmth answered by an unseen agent.

In his public benefactions he exercised the same careful thought that he did in his business investments, but never neglecting the charitable, educational, and religious institutions of his own city and State.

The Children's Home at Kalamazoo, the beautiful home of the Young Men's Christian Association at the same place, Kalamazoo and Albion colleges and Hobart Hall at Ann Arbor all bear eloquent testimony to his munificent and practical liberality. But more eloquent than all, perhaps, would be the words spoken from the room in the Woman's Hospital at Chicago, endowed by his generosity, and which he constantly kept occupied by some unfortunate but deserving poor woman.

In his death the State loses one closely identified with all its interests and a faithful guardian of every one of them; very many who were wont to rely upon him, a safe counselor and a generous benefactor; the Congress a safe and practical legislator, and the community in which he lived a public benefactor, an upright citizen, and a courtly Christian gentleman.

The career of Senator Stockbridge is eminently worthy of emulation by the young men of to-day. He set up a high standard in early life and few men came nearer attaining it than he.

Starting with a well-grounded Christian character, by his industry, perseverance, honesty, and an earnest and upright life he has assisted the upward movement of Christian civilization, and has demonstrated that true worth outweighs genius in the great struggle for success in life.

He lived an active, earnest life, was faithful to every trust, and his "works do follow him."

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of several gentlemen who had expected to participate in these proceedings and pay tribute to the memory of our dead friend, I ask unanimous consent that those who desire to do so may print remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 22, 1895.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings; when, on motion of Mr. HILL, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting for the favorable consideration of Congress a letter from the chief of the division of stationery, printing, and blanks, Treasury Department, stating that an additional sum of $120,000 will be required for printing and binding for that Department; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. JAMES KERR, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate expressing appreciation of the special honors paid by the Mexican Government upon the occasion of the death of Hon. Isaac P. Gray, late minister of the United States near the Republic of Mexico.

The message also communicated to the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives commemorative of the life and services of Hon. Francis B. Stockbridge, late a Senator from the State of Michigan.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 3476) to provide for the examination and classification of certain mineral lands in the States of Montana and Idaho;

A bill (H. R. 6750) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Yellowstone River, in the county of Dawson, State of Montana; and

A bill (H. R. 8499) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River in the county of Dakota, in the State of Nebraska, and in the city of Sioux City, in the county of Woodbury, in the State of Iowa.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of sundry citizens of Washington, D. C., sufferers from the local water famine, praying that the provision of the House in the District of Columbia appropriation bill which appropriates $125,000 for increasing the height of the dam at Great Falls be retained; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of 67 citizens of Chagrin Falls, Ohio, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the appropriation of moneys for sectarian institutions; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of 67 citizens of Chagrin Falls, Ohio, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing that "no State shall grant the right of franchise to any person who is not a citizen of the United States;" which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. QUAY. I present resolutions of the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia, Pa., bearing upon the currency question. It is an important subject and the Manufacturers' Club is an important commercial body. I should be glad to have the resolutions read. They are brief.

There being no objection, the resolutions were read, and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

MANUFACTURERS' CLUB OF PHILADELPHIA.

February 21, 1895.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the Manufacturers' Club, held on Monday evening, the 18th instant, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas the troubles in which the Treasury of the United States is involved are chiefly due to the failure of the present tariff law to produce sufficient revenue; and

Whereas the practice of borrowing money to meet expenditures which may be fully provided for by procuring revenue from usual sources by the employment of usual means, is most ill-advised, whether it is pursued by a private citizen or by a Government: Be it, and by the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia it is,

Resolved, That we make solemn protest against the policy which, after impoverishing the American people by prostrating their industries and subjecting them to injurious foreign competition, heaps upon them in a time of profound peace new and wholly needless burdens of debt.

Resolved, That we also protest against the action of the President in secretly giving to European bankers at high cost to the people a monopoly of the right to lend to the Treasury money which may be had at lower cost, if it must be had at all, from the people themselves.

Resolved, That we repudiate as un-American, as humiliating to the nation, and as disgraceful to those who are responsible for it, that conduct of public affairs which has placed the Treasury of the United States in a position of dependence upon the favor of foreign bankers and has permitted Europeans to shape, to control, and to direct the economical and fiscal policies of this great nation.

Resolved, That we call upon our representatives in Congress to voice the indignation with which the people regard these iniquitous performances and to demand that the Treasury and the public credit shall be strengthened solely by the acquirement of sufficient lawful revenue obtained through the medium of duties upon imports.

Attest:

WM. S. STOCKTON,

Assistant Secretary.

Mr. QUAY presented petitions of 108 citizens of Pittsburg, of 159 citizens of North End, of 200 citizens of Rowersville, of 73 citizens of Clarion, of 60 citizens of Fayette City, of 53 citizens of Worthington, of 41 citizens of Upper Middleton, of 41 citizens of Buttercup, and of 40 citizens of Casselman, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing that "no State shall grant the right of franchise to any person who is not a citizen of the United States;" which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of 41 citizens of Buttercup, of 73 citizens of Clarion, of 66 citizens of Kempton, of 52 citizens of Worthington, of 100 citizens of Upper Middleton, of 40 citizens of Casselman, of 159 citizens of North End, of 200 citizens of Rowersville, and of 40 citizens of Irwin, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the appropriations of moneys for sectarian institutions; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VEST presented a memorial of District Assembly No. 4, Knights of Labor, of St. Louis, Mo., remonstrating against the enactment into law of the provisions recommended in the recent message of the President on the financial question; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of 26 citizens of Sheffield, Mo., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the appropriation of moneys for sectarian institutions; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of 26 citizens of Sheffield, Mo., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing that "no State shall grant the right of franchise to any person who is not a citizen of the United States;" which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of Branch No. 393, National Association of Letter Carriers, of Binghamton, N. Y., praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 2523 regarding the tenure of letter carriers, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by himself on the 21st instant intended to be proposed to the naval appropriation bill, reported it with an amendment, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Select Committee on Forest Reservations, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by Mr. PETTIGREW on the 20th instant intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 840) to correct the muster of Lieut. Gilman L. Johnson, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HUNTON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8696) to amend the act to incorporate the American University, reported it without amendment.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8624) for the relief of James Linskey from the operation of the act restricting the ownership of real estate in the Territories and the District of Columbia to American citizens, reported it without amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8714) to incorporate the Capital Railway Company, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8698) to authorize the Washington and Marlboro Electric Railway Company of Maryland to extend its line of road into and within the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8427) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, reported it without amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom were referred the bill (S. 2771) to authorize the extension of the Columbia Railway Company and the bill (H. R. 6816) to amend the charter of the District of Columbia Suburban Railway Company, to report them without recommendation, there being a difference of opinion in the committee in regard to the bills.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bills will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2519) granting an increase of pension to Adelaide Morris, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1707) granting a pension to Caroline Reed, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 725) for the relief of the trustees of the Presbyterian Church of Bethel Springs, Tenn., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BLACKBURN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported an amendment concerning sea-duty pay of officers intended to be proposed to the naval appropriation bill, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and be printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, the amendment being to insert in line 7, page 46, after the word "manufacture," the words "and may be constructed of steel or other metal or an alloy," and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I submit an amendment which it is proposed to be offered to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and I present it by direction of a majority of the Committee on Appropriations. I move that the amendment be printed, and that it lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7038) to pension Joseph W. Snyder, crippled son of a soldier of the war of 1812, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. POWER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2714) granting certain lands in the abandoned military reservation at Fort Maginnis, Fergus County, Mont., to the State of Montana, for a soldiers' home, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

BERLIN SILVER COMMISSION.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following order; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Ordered, That there be printed and bound in paper covers, for the use of the Committee on Finance, 3,000 copies of part 1, Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 274, being the proposals submitted to the Berlin Silver Commission of 1894, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate document room.

OREGON STATE SOLDIERS' HOME.

Mr. PERKINS. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 237) authorizing the Secretaries of War and of the Navy to donate to the Oregon State Soldiers' Home, at Roseburg, Oreg., certain cannon, etc., to report it without amendment. The joint resolution simply provides for the donation of unused cannon under the control of the Secretary of the Navy. I ask that it be now considered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, and, by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BATTERY PARK, BURLINGTON, VT.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 189) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to deliver unserviceable or condemned cannon to the mayor of Burlington, Vt., to be used in decorating Battery Park, to report it without amendment. I ask that the joint resolution be put on its passage.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WITHERBY & GAFFNEY.

Mr. HILL. There is a claim bill which has passed the other House and which came over to the Senate and has been reported favorably by the Committee on Claims, not granting the claim but simply referring it to the Secretary of War to take testimony. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4507) for the relief of Witherby & Gaffney.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to examine into the contract entered into by Witherby & Gaffney with the United States on the 9th day of September, A. D. 1889, to tear down and reconstruct the west wing of the officers' quarters at Madison Barracks, Sacketts Harbor, New York, and ascertain what work was done thereunder and whether any balance is still due to the said contractors therefor; also, whether the said contractors were required by the officers of the Government having direction of the work to modify or change the plans or to add to the work; and if so, whether the cost of construction was thereby increased, and the amount of such increase; also, whether there was any failure on the part of the Government to comply with any agreement or obligation to furnish heat for the work during the winter whereby the contractors were injured or damaged; and if so, the value of the material lost and of increased labor caused thereby; also, whether there was any loss to the contractors justly chargeable to the Government on account of the removal of the old building mentioned in the contract and the rejection of any materials it contained which the contractors had a right to expect they could use in the construction of the new building; if so, the amount in value of such loss; also, whether for any other reason or because of any other facts the said contractors are equitably entitled to any additional compensation on account of work performed or material furnished in the construction of said barracks. And the Secretary is authorized to take evidence to ascertain the facts in the case, notwithstanding the terms of the contract, and to determine the aggregate amount that is justly and equitably due the contractors as the result of his examination into the matters aforesaid; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the said contractors, Witherby & Gaffney, the aggregate sum so found to be due to them when properly certified by the Secretary of War. And a sufficient amount of money is hereby appropriated, out of the funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the said aggregate sum to the said Witherby & Gaffney.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES STEWART.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. KYLE. May I ask what is the pending order of business? The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate is proceeding under the call of reports of standing and select committees.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator will allow me to have a bill passed for the relief of a soldier, to enable him to sue in the Court of Claims.

Mr. KYLE. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5224) for the relief of James Stewart.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to refer to the Court of Claims the claim of James Stewart, who served as first sergeant Company B, second and first lieutenant Fourth Artillery, and captain Eighteenth Infantry of the United States Army in the late war of the rebellion, for a balance of wages earned by him in the suppression of the rebellion and during his entire time of service in the Army, and not paid to him.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the bill been referred to a committee?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, yes; it has been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. It is a House bill; it has passed the House and has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] submitted the report.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President—

Mr. HALE. Let me give a notice. I wish to state that after this bill is disposed of I shall ask for the regular order of business and that the morning business shall proceed regularly. When that is through, if the Senate chooses to go on and consider bills by unanimous consent I do not object, but it is getting to be too much the practice here for Senators in the midst of morning business to call up matters from the Calendar and break into the routine morning business.

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill will take but a moment. There can be no objection to it.

Mr. HALE. I do not object now, but after the bill is passed I shall object to the consideration of any other bill until after the conclusion of the routine morning business.

Mr. DAVIS. For the information of the Senator from Missouri, I will state that this is one of those cases of which Captain Pull man's is the leading one, often passed upon by the Committee on Military Affairs and concerning which an omnibus bill is on the Calendar for many claims directing the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and pay them.

Mr. WHITE. With reference to the remark made by the Senator from Maine concerning the calling up of bills, I wish to say that there are some Senators upon this floor who have bills of local importance and who do not obtrude themselves sufficiently perhaps to get their bills before the Senate. It seems to me that there ought to be some arrangement made by which every Senator shall have a right to call up some bill of local importance. I have a matter here in my hand which affects a few citizens of the county in which I live, and it is an eminently just bill, to which no one would object. While I do not intend to offer any objection to the bill now proposed to be passed, I suggest that the Senators having these matters in charge, in deference to the wishes of all others here who do not care to enforce their particular interests to the disadvantage of public business, should consent to some kind of a programme by which there might be a fair deal all around.

Mr. HALE. We ought to have a couple of hours some day for just such business and just such consideration as the Senator from California has referred to, but we ought not to break into the routine morning business with it.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to call the attention of my colleague to the fact that always during the last five or six days of a session, when the appropriation bills get into conference, there is ample time to pass local bills.

Mr. HALE. That is the time when there will be more space than any other.

Mr. FRYE. We have always had ample time to pass these bills at the last of the session.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE ON PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Pacific Railroads, reported the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pacific Railroads be instructed, either by full committee or such subcommittee or committees as may be appointed by the chairman thereof, with the full power of such committee, to continue during the coming recess of Congress the investigations authorized by the resolution of October 13, 1893, with the authority and in the manner and to the extent provided in said resolution, and in pursuance of such investigations such committee or committees are authorized to make a personal examination of the roads and other properties of the bond-aided Pacific railway companies and their branches, and the country through which they pass or which is immediately contributory to their income, with a view of ascertaining their present status and their ability to pay their indebtedness to the United States and how that indebtedness can be adjusted and paid. In pursuing such investigations said committee or committees are hereby further authorized to sit during the recess or sessions of the Senate, at such times and places as they may deem advisable; and they shall have power to send for persons and papers, to administer the necessary oaths, and to employ a stenographer and such clerical and expert assistance as they may deem necessary. Said committee or committees shall have authority to cause its proceedings and testimony taken to be printed from time to time as they may see fit; and such expense as may result from said investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of said committee and by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. Any subcommittee appointed by the committee or the chairman thereof shall have all the powers of the full committee.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. McLAURIN introduced a bill (S. 2794) to relieve the United States of the costs of election contests; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. PETTIGREW introduced a bill (S. 2795) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the extermination of fur-bearing animals in Alaska, and for other purposes;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FAULKNER introduced a bill (S. 2796) approving an act entitled "An act to provide an addition to the insane asylum of New Mexico, and for other purposes;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2797) approving an act entitled "An act authorizing the rebuilding of the Territorial capitol at Santa Fe, N. Mex., which was destroyed by fire May 13, 1892;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MILLS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. QUAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. QUAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WOLCOTT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. FRYE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HUNTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DUES TO ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. DAVIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2297) to provide for the restatement, readjustment, settlement, and payment of dues to army officers in certain cases; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

IMPORTANT PERIODS IN THE HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. KYLE. I submit a concurrent resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas Gen. James D. McBride is the originator of the centennial memorial entitled "The administrators of the United States Government at the beginning of its second century;" also the Columbian state paper entitled "The administration of the United States Government at the beginning of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America," to which the seal of the United States, the seal of the Supreme Court, the seal of the Senate, and the seal of the House of Representatives have been affixed by authority of law: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to accept for the Senate and House two copies of the said publication entitled Important Periods in the History of the United States.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

Mr. KYLE. I will state that this resolution does not involve any expense whatever. A year ago, under a resolution of Congress, Mr. McBride was authorized to use the seal of the United States in preparing a chart for the Columbian Exposition, and the same privilege was also granted to him in 1876 in reference to the administration of the Government at that time. He also made a chart of the Declaration of Independence of 1776, thus making a complete chart of the three periods in the administration of the United States. No doubt many Senators will remember having signed their names to this chart. [Exhibiting.] Mr. McBride, out of gratitude for what the Senate has done, wishes to present one of these charts to the Senate and one to the House of Representatives. That is all the resolution contemplates. It was prepared by the Committee on the Library.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire—I do not know whether the Chair would consider himself at liberty to answer the question from the chair, but some Senator may perhaps do so—whether it requires a concurrent resolution of the two bodies to have a book put in the library of the Senate or the House of Representatives. I suppose that it is within the power of the librarian as a matter of course. If that be so, the passing of this resolution may embarrass everybody hereafter who wants to send a copy of any book which he thinks may be useful and interesting to the library of either House of Congress.

I think the resolution had better go over or be referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. COCKRELL. Probably there may be a good reason for this action, for the reason that there is an amendment here, offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], which authorizes the purchase of quite a large number of these charts.

Mr. KYLE. That has nothing at all to do with this question, I will say to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VOORHEES. Allow me an observation in reply to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that the resolution should go to the Committee on the Library, if there be no objection.

Mr. VOORHEES. This is a perfectly harmless matter.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, the Committee on the Library is a perfectly harmless committee.

Mr. VOORHEES. That is true, especially since the Senator from Massachusetts is no longer a member of it. [Laughter.]

This gentleman has a very handsome chart, and he asks the privilege of presenting two copies of it, one to the Vice-President and the other to the Speaker of the House of Representatives. I do not know about the precedents, or whether there be a precedent or not, but this costs no money, it can do no harm, and may do some good.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not quite agree with the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] in saying that this will do no harm. It affords a precedent for other people of more vanity and less usefulness coming here and bothering Congress, in the hope that they will be able to carry about as scalps at their belt such evidence as this of the distinguished treatment they have received, the extreme value of their services, and all that sort of thing. I would much rather have a report from the Library Committee; and I move the reference of the resolution to that committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut to refer the concurrent resolution to the Committee on the Library.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. I should like to have the chart go with the concurrent resolution to the committee, so that the committee may see what it is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. GORMAN. I submit an order to print a document for the use of the Senate to-morrow. This is the only copy that can be found. By accident all the copies but this one were destroyed, and we want it for to-morrow morning.

The order was read and agreed to; as follows:

Ordered, That there be printed for the use of the Senate the usual number of copies of the report of the hearings before the Committee on Interstate Commerce on December 14, 1892, on the bill (S. 3577) to amend the interstate commerce act.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. JAMES KERR, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8880) to authorize the Pittsburg, Monongahela and Wheeling Railroad Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 277) in reference to the Free Zone along the northern frontier of Mexico and adjacent to the United States; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

AFFAIRS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order. If there be none such, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] coming over from a previous day.

Mr. BLACKBURN. May I ask, as the morning business seems to have been completed—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business has not been completed.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I meant reports of committees, the introduction of bills, and the introduction of resolutions.

I was going to ask the Senate to take up at this time for consideration two bills, neither of which, I am sure, will provoke a minute's discussion. They are House bills to amend the Articles for the Government of the Navy, and it is important that they should be passed. The Naval Committee has reported them unanimously favorably; they are on the Calendar here and have been passed by the House of Representatives. The Secretary of the Navy is very solicitous that they should be passed before the adjournment of Congress. They are both very short bills, there being not more than a half dozen lines in either; and I am sure no one will want to discuss either of them.

Mr. VOORHEES. Do they relate to the reorganization of the Navy?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; they are simply to amend the Articles for the Government of the Navy.

Mr. STEWART. They do not relate to the personnel of the Navy?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Oh, no. I will say to the Senator from Florida that if he thinks the consideration of these bills would delay the consideration of his resolution and interfere in any wise with the disposition of it I will withdraw the request.

Mr. CALL. I was going to say that the resolution submitted by me was sent here by the labor organizations of the District of Columbia. It is a resolution only asking for information, and it will not take any more time than the reading of it.

Mr. PLATT. What is the order of business, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair was laying before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from Florida coming over from a previous day. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CALL on the 21st instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and are hereby, directed to furnish as soon as practicable for the information of the Senate a statement showing—

First. The names of all streets, avenues, alleys, and reservations in the limits of the cities of Washington and Georgetown partially or wholly unpaved, and the total length thereof so unpaved; also the lengths thereof unpaved; also the lengths thereof without water mains; together with the estimated cost of fully improving, paving, sewerage, and laying water mains in the same.

Second. An estimate of the amount required to carry out the provisions of an act passed March 2, 1893, to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown; and the amount and cost of condemning lands and buildings for said highways and reservations; also an itemized estimate of the cost of building bridges, culverts, grading and fully improving said highways, streets, avenues, alleys, and reservations as contemplated by said act of March 2, 1893; also an estimate of the cost of improvements in such other unpaved streets and avenues as lie outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown; also the assessed value of private and Government property lying outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown and in the District of Columbia.

Third. A statement showing the amount of taxes collected in the cities of Washington and Georgetown and the county, respectively, by years, from 1878 to 1893, both inclusive; and in like manner the amounts expended in each of said sections from the District revenues during the same period.

Fourth. The amount of surplus revenues of the District of Columbia covered into the Treasury of the United States from 1878 to 1894, inclusive, and to what fund credited; also the amount of surplus now in the Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest that in line 25, before the words "Government property," the words "estimated value of" be inserted. The resolution as it reads asks for "the assessed value of private and Government property." Government property is not assessed at all. As I propose to amend it the resolution will ask for "the assessed value of private property and the estimated value of Government property."

Mr. CALL. I will accept that amendment and modify my resolution accordingly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

PROPOSED EVENING SESSIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], coming over from a previous day; which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CALL on the 19th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate meet at the hour of 11 in the morning and remain in session until 5 p. m., then take a recess until the hour of 8 p. m.

Mr. CALL. That resolution may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection it will be so ordered.

ARTICLES FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF THE NAVY.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now ask for the consideration of the two bills to which I have alluded. They are both purely administrative; their consideration is absolutely necessary, and they are pressed upon us by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. DUBOIS. I inquire of the Chair if the morning business has closed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business has closed.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I first ask for the consideration of House bill 6323.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky for the consideration of the bill named by him?

Mr. QUAY. I have no objection; but I wish to say to the Senator from Kentucky, that by an agreement between the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON] and myself, the joint resolution relative to the bridge between the cities of Camden and Philadelphia was to be taken up and disposed of to-day after the routine morning business.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that the bills for whose consideration I ask will not require five minutes' time.

Mr. QUAY. With that understanding, of course I have no objection.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6323) to amend the Articles for the Government of the Navy relative to punishment on conviction by court-martial, which was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, in line 5, after the word "Article," to strike out "64" and insert "63," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Articles for the Government of the Navy be, and the same are hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"ART. 63. Whenever, by any of the Articles for the Government of the Navy of the United States, the punishment on conviction of an offense is left to the discretion of the court-martial, the punishment therefor shall not, in time of peace, be in excess of a limit which the President may prescribe."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5218) to amend the Articles for the Government of the Navy.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that the Articles for the Government of the Navy be amended by adding thereto the following:

ART. 61. No person shall be tried by court-martial or otherwise punished for any offense, except as provided in the following article, which appears to have been committed more than two years before the issuing of the order for such trial or punishment, unless by reason of having absented himself, or of some other manifest impediment he shall not have been amenable to justice within that period.

ART. 62. No person shall be tried by court-martial or otherwise punished for desertion in time of peace committed more than two years before the issuing of the order for such trial or punishment, unless he shall meanwhile have absented himself from the United States, or by reason of some other manifest impediment shall not have been amenable to justice within that period, in which case the time of his absence shall be excluded in computing the period of the limitation: Provided, That said limitation shall not begin until the end of the term for which said person was enlisted in the service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8890) to authorize the Pittsburg, Monongahela and Wheeling Railroad Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

DELAWARE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. QUAY. I now ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the motion of the Senator from New Jersey to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the joint resolution (S. R. 133) directing the Secretary of War to make an examination of the bridge to be constructed over the Delaware River between the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania, which motion was entered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON] a few days ago.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to yield to me to allow me to ask for the consideration of a House bill, which will take but a moment.

Mr. QUAY. If the bill provokes no discussion, I have no objection.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill No. 7259.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The title of the bill will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 7259) for the relief of certain settlers who have entered lands under the timber and stone act, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to know from what committee that bill comes.

Mr. WASHBURN. It has been reported favorably by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask that the bill may be laid over until to-morrow.

Mr. KYLE. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. QUAY. I now ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the motion of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON], to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed Senate joint resolution No. 133.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be stated by title.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 133) directing the Secretary of War to make an examination of the bridge to be constructed over the Delaware River between the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

Mr. FRYE. Let the joint resolution be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania—

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, the object of my entering the motion—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from New Jersey that the pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to proceed to the consideration of the motion for the reconsideration of the vote by which the joint resolution was passed, and that motion is not debatable.

Mr. HALE. How long a time, I will ask the Senator from Pennsylvania, is this subject likely to take?

Mr. QUAY. So far as I am concerned, I am ready to move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, and if any time is occupied it will be occupied by those in opposition to the joint resolution.

Mr. McPHERSON. I have the floor, Mr. President. I do not think the Senator from Pennsylvania has it.

Mr. QUAY. The Senator is mistaken. I think I have the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the motion is not debatable, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HALE. Then let us have the question put, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand the motion is to take up the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to take up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were 15.

Mr. QUAY. I will say, Mr. President, pending the vote—

Mr. HARRIS. The Senate is dividing.

Mr. QUAY. That it was agreed between the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON] and myself that this question should be taken up at this time to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senators opposed to the motion will rise and stand until they are counted.

Mr. QUAY. Let us have the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. The Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]. We have agreed to exchange pairs, so that the Senator from Louisiana will stand paired with the Senator from North Carolina. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILSON of Iowa (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. McMILLAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire whether the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana has not voted.

Mr. McMILLAN. Then I will withdraw my vote, as I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. QUAY. In accordance with the notice I gave I now move—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has not announced the result.

Mr. CALL. The hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, I ask the Senate to proceed with the regular order.

Mr. GORMAN. The result has not been announced.

Mr. QUAY. I hope the Senator from Florida will wait until we dispose of this matter.

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—42.

Allison,	Dixon,	Martin,	Rosch,
Bate,	Faulkner,	Mitchell of Oreg.	Sherman,
Berry,	Gallinger,	Morrill,	Squire,
Burrows,	Hansbrough,	Peffer,	Stewart,
Butler,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Teller,
Call,	Hill,	Pettigrew,	Vest,
Cameron,	Hoar,	Platt,	Washburn,
Carey,	Jones of Ark.	Power,	White,
Chandler,	Lindsay,	Proctor,	Wolcott.
Cockrell,	Lodge,	Quay,
Davis,	Manderson,	Ransom,

NAYS—15.

Allen,	Hale,	McPherson,	Pasco,
Blackburn,	Harris,	Mitchell of Wis.	Voorhees,

Gorman,	McLaurin,	Palmer,

NOT VOTING—31.

Aldrich,	Daniel,	Huntton,	Pugh,
Blanchard,	Delph,	Irby,	Shoup,
Brisson,	Dubois,	Jones of Nev.	Smith,
Caffery,	George,	McMillan,	Turpie,
Caunden,	Gibson,	Munroe,	Vilas,
Clark,	Gordon,	Mills,	Wilson of Iowa,
Coke,	Gray,	Murphy,	Wilson of Wash.
Callom,	Higgins,	Pritchard,

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President—

Mr. QUAY. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from New Jersey to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I think, Mr. President, I am entitled to be recognized, as I addressed the Chair first.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from New Jersey—

Mr. SHERMAN. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. QUAY. This question is not debatable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair was about to state that the motion is not debatable.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I understand the motion is not debatable, but, as I addressed the Chair first, I thought I had a right to be recognized.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not hear the Senator from New Jersey address the Chair, but the Chair will hear the Senator's inquiry.

Mr. QUAY. The Senator from New Jersey, as a matter of fact, did not address the Chair first. I was on the floor and addressed the Chair pending the calling of the roll, and was ruled out of order on that account.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I addressed the Chair immediately after the announcement of the result of the vote.

Mr. MANDERSON. I rise to a question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. MANDERSON. The question of recognition is entirely for the Chair to decide, and can not be debated on the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands, but the Chair was listening to the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to withdraw his motion for a single moment in order that I may make a statement.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, under ordinary circumstances I should do that with pleasure, but after the Senator from New Jersey made a deliberate agreement with me yesterday to proceed to the consideration of this question and then voted against the motion to take it up I do not feel compelled to do so.

Mr. HARRIS. I object to any statement upon a motion to lay on the table. If the Senator from Pennsylvania will not withdraw his motion he can not debate the question.

Mr. QUAY. I merely wished to make a personal explanation.

Mr. FRYE. It is 12 o'clock, and I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8479) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President—

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order, which is, that a motion to reconsider is a privileged motion, and having been taken up by the Senate and being under consideration it must be decided. I believe it goes on until it is disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks it is not a privileged motion in the sense indicated. The hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, it was the duty of the Chair under the rule to lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. GORMAN. That is right.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the unfinished business be informally laid aside until the business which by the roll call was just ordered to be taken up is proceeded with.

Mr. HARRIS. That can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. QUAY. I think the Senators in opposition to this—

Mr. FRYE. I am not going to interpose any objection provided an opportunity is given to discuss the question. It never has been discussed before the Senate. It is a question of grave importance. There are 800 men at work to-day on this very bridge.

Mr. QUAY. They will remain at work if the joint resolution is passed.

Mr. FRYE. They will be discharged forthwith if the joint resolution passes and goes to the other House.

Mr. QUAY. They will remain at work if the joint resolution passes. The work will not be interrupted for two weeks.

Mr. FRYE. I do not make any objection if I can have an opportunity to discuss the question. The matter was referred to the Committee on Commerce, but the committee made no report, except, as frequently happens here, by a poll by the Senator from Pennsylvania on the floor, without any consideration. That is the only way the joint resolution passed the Senate. It is entitled to consideration and discussion in the Senate before it passes under a motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President—

Mr. CALL. I call for the regular order.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the motion to reconsider, and I shall insist on the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. CALL. I call for the regular order.

Mr. QUAY. I do not desire to discuss it, but if necessary I will lay before the Senate the resolutions of commercial bodies of the city of Philadelphia and the State of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey at whose instance I am proceeding.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business. The Chair will then hear the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to postpone the regular order is in order. That motion will be entertained.

Mr. QUAY. That is the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FRYE. Is that not debatable?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is debatable.

Mr. FRYE. So I understand.

Mr. STEWART. I hope the motion will not be agreed to. I like to see fair play in the Senate. I think the Senator from New Jersey should be permitted to make the explanation he desires. Senators have voted—at least I did—without the slightest knowledge of the question. A motion to lay on the table without any explanation is unusual in the Senate. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will withdraw the motion to lay on the table and allow an explanation of the joint resolution.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, it seems as though it were the purpose to press this matter without any opportunity whatever to explain it. The Senator from Pennsylvania has referred to some kind of an agreement which he said took place between himself and myself yesterday in regard to the disposition of this motion. I did say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that I had no objection to his moving to take up the motion which I entered to prevent further action upon the joint resolution; but gentlemen upon this side of the Chamber, the hour of 12 o'clock having nearly arrived, were desirous of going on with the appropriation bill. I could not agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania to use an hour or two hours of the time of the Senate for the purpose of discussing the motion.

Now, I wish to say a few words with respect to the whole matter, and then I will leave the subject to the Senate. The bridge bill was passed some time in 1894. It provided for a bridge across the Delaware River between Pennsylvania and New Jersey. The bridge act required that the bridge should be 40 feet in height. It required that it should have draw spans of 125 feet. It required that it should have channel spans of a certain width. The company which undertook to build the bridge voluntarily increased the height of the bridge 10 feet, making it a 50-foot bridge. They increased the channel span something like 100 feet, and they increased the draw span from 125 feet to 129 feet. The bridge is under construction, and a large number of workmen are employed to-day in building it.

Now it is proposed to arrest the progress of the work by introducing a joint resolution here which requires that the whole question shall be again submitted to a board of engineers. When the bridge act was passed the matter was submitted to the engineer in charge, who reported to the Chief of Engineers, and the report of the engineer was approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] one day when there were but few Senators present—at least I know I was not present at the time, and I think the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] who had reported the bridge bill, was not present—polled the committee upon the floor as I am informed, introduced his resolution, and passed it in the absence of the Senator from Maine and myself. When I returned to the Senate Chamber I made a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed in order that we might arrive at the true facts in the case.

Now, if any error has been committed, it is an error which has been committed by the board of engineers and by the Congress of the United States in passing the original act. The bridge is much wider in its span and much higher than the act required, and now it is proposed to stop the work, to annul the contract, if another board of engineers shall so declare, and spend months of time, perhaps, in arriving at a judgment respecting it. And all for what purpose? To gratify, I understand, some gentlemen in the State of Pennsylvania and perhaps a few in the State of New Jersey.

I heard it stated here yesterday that some action had been taken by the legislature of New Jersey respecting the bridge. Nothing was done by the legislature in opposition to the bridge, but a resolution was passed merely referring to a dike, which was to run on the New Jersey side of the river at the terminus of the bridge where it connects with the shore.

Mr. QUAY. What was mentioned in connection with the New Jersey legislature was mentioned to the Senator privately. I said nothing of the kind upon the floor. The Senator's statement is correct. The action of the New Jersey legislature referred to the dike and not to the bridge.

Mr. GORMAN. I wish to make an appeal to the Senator from Pennsylvania, as well as to the Senator from New Jersey, to let the matter go over until we can reach some convenient point for its consideration, either to-day or to-morrow, after the appropriation bill is disposed of. It will unquestionably lead to quite a discussion. It may be disposed of before we get through the present session, but we are in great jeopardy of not being able properly to consider the great appropriation bills. The Indian appropriation bill, which is pending here to-day, will take some hours, undoubtedly, if it is to be intelligently considered by the Senate. Then all the other great appropriation bills are behind it—the sundry civil bill, which practically deals with every department of this Government and in which questions of great moment are involved, and the legislative bill.

Now, I appeal to the Senator to let the matter go over, and if we can find a convenient point where it can be discussed—it ought to be discussed for a half hour or an hour—some reasonable time—then take it up.

Mr. QUAY. I have no objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland. I never resist any of his suggestions. If he will name a time to-day or to-morrow when a vote can be taken, I shall have no objection. But the Senator from Maryland will remember that the joint resolution has already passed the Senate, and that it is held up and has been held up for ten days in an iron cage by a motion to reconsider entered by the Senator from New Jersey. If the joint resolution does not pass the other House this week it can not become a law. If a time can be fixed for a vote any time to-morrow I have no objection to letting the matter go over. I am quite as anxious as is the Senator from Maryland to speed the passage of appropriation bills.

Mr. GORMAN. I hope we can arrange a time when the question can be voted upon.

Mr. FRYE. If a time is fixed for the consideration of this matter am I to suppose that the Senator from Pennsylvania will renew his motion to lay upon the table?

Mr. QUAY. I will.

Mr. FRYE. Then no discussion will be had upon it.

Mr. QUAY. No, sir.

Mr. FRYE. I propose to discuss the joint resolution before it passes.

Mr. QUAY. There is nothing to prevent the Senator from Maine from discussing the matter upon any bill before the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. I never do that, I will inform the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUAY. I will do it.

Mr. FRYE. I discuss questions only when they are before the Senate for discussion.

Mr. QUAY. I will do it. I will state that what I have to say on the subject will be confined, as I have said, to the resolutions adopted by my constituents, whom I represent in my action here.

Mr. FRYE. I do not see that I am obliged to discuss the question now. I do not wish to interfere with the appropriation bills, for I feel as anxious as does the Senator from Maryland that they shall be acted upon and passed, so that we shall not have an extra session.

Mr. GORMAN. I will now make a suggestion to the Senators on both sides. This is an important matter, it is true, and I trust we will be able to fix some time to-day or to-morrow when, after fair statement on each side, with no prolonged discussion, we can take a vote on the joint resolution. I hope we will be able to arrange that, if the Senator from Pennsylvania will postpone his motion for the time being—

Mr. QUAY. I have no objection to the matter going over, but it must pass this week, as the Senator from Maryland knows.

Mr. GORMAN. That to-morrow morning by unanimous consent we dispose of it in the morning hour.

Mr. HALE. Let us take it up to-morrow morning.

Mr. QUAY. What is the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland? I did not clearly understand it.

Mr. HALE. We can take it up to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes; immediately after the reading of the Journal is concluded and devote half an hour to it.

Mr. HALE. Say one hour.

Mr. QUAY. I should like to dispose of it. It is a joint resolution.

Mr. HALE. That is fair.

Mr. QUAY. If there is no disposition to talk it to death.

Mr. HALE. My colleague has indicated a desire to speak on the subject.

Mr. FRYE. Did the Senator from Pennsylvania ever know me to talk anything to death? I simply wish to debate the question.

Mr. QUAY. Would it be indelicate for me to ask the Senator from Maine how much time he will occupy?

Mr. FRYE. Not over twenty-five minutes.

Mr. QUAY. All right. Then I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Maryland again state his proposition?

Mr. GORMAN. It is that the matter may be taken up at a quarter past 11 o'clock to-morrow morning and voted on by 12 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. QUAY. There is none.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

CONSIDERATION OF UNOBTected CASES ON THE CALENDAR.

Mr. GORMAN. I wish to submit a request to the Senate, that on Tuesday next the Senate will begin a session at 8 o'clock in the evening to take up unobjected cases upon the Calendar, so as to give each Senator, as has always been the rule, an opportunity to call up at least one bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Chair state the request?

Mr. ALLEN. I understand the request of the Senator from Maryland merely embraces unobjected cases on the Calendar.

Mr. GORMAN. Unobjected cases, and with the distinct understanding that if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations finds it necessary to consider an appropriation bill that night, of course the unanimous-consent agreement will not stand.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Maryland that the consideration of those bills should also be under Rule VIII.

Mr. GORMAN. Under Rule VIII.

Mr. HARRIS. And debate limited to five minutes.

Mr. GORMAN. Under Rule VIII, and unobjected cases only.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. ALLISON. Subject to appropriation bills.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Chair kindly state the understanding?

Mr. GORMAN. It is that on Tuesday next, from 8 o'clock in the evening, the Senate will consider unobjected cases on the Calendar under Rule VIII, giving to each Senator an opportunity, as has always been the rule, to call up a bill, subject, however, to the consideration of an appropriation bill if it becomes necessary to consider one that night.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8479) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on the Indian appropriation bill and the amendments be limited to five minutes to each Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. MORGAN. I object.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I object at the present time. Perhaps some time during the day I shall consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] to the amendment of the committee, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the word "Alaska" in line 2, page 73, down to and including the word "cease," in line 11 of the same page, and insert:

Provided, That $515,000 of said sum of $1,253,440 shall be expended in support of schools with which contracts have heretofore been made; Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may in his discretion expend 20 per cent of said sum of $515,000 in the purchase of the property of such contract schools as may be offered for sale.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, when the amendment was offered yesterday I had the floor, which I very cheerfully yielded to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to make a motion for an evening session. I had not then very carefully examined the amendment; it was not printed, and I had very grave doubts as to its effect and purpose. I have looked it up during the past few minutes, and I am very thoroughly satisfied that it is a mischievous amendment, intended to annul practically the provisions which are now proposed to be put into the bill by the committee.

It is a very good principle in legislation, as in other things, to adopt the well-known maxim to beware of the Greeks when they come bearing gifts; and I have learned in these matters to be somewhat careful in considering propositions offered by my friend, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW]. The Senator has extremely winning ways, and I always like to accommodate him when I can; but I am very well satisfied that his winning ways in this case are designed to obscure the facts and to lead us to adopt what we do not want to adopt in relation to the education of Indian children.

I may be wrong in my analysis of the amendment, but I think I am right. It is certainly very loosely drawn. It states, in the first place, the sum of $1,253,440, which is not the sum appropriated in the bill. The amendment furthermore provides that $515,000 shall be expended in the support of Indian schools with which contracts have been heretofore made. Then it provides further—

That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, expend 20 per cent of said sum of $515,000 in the purchase of the property of such contract schools as may be offered for sale.

So the entire amount is in the first place to be used for the education of Indian children, and 20 per cent of it is to be diverted for the purchase of school property.

Mr. PLATT. Is $515,000 precisely the amount which was expended last year for that purpose?

Mr. GALLINGER. So I understand. If the pupils in the contract schools are reduced 20 per cent, the number in Government schools will necessarily be correspondingly increased, and the same amount of money and possibly more money will be required to educate those children than is required under the existing condition of things. So if we divert 20 per cent of the school money to the purchase of property, it will necessarily result in depriving 20 per cent of the children of school facilities. I do not think the Senator from South Dakota intends to reach that result, but it seems to me manifest and indisputable that if the amendment is adopted it will bring about precisely that condition of affairs.

Now, I have this to say to the Senator from South Dakota, and I hope he will accept the suggestion in the spirit in which it is offered: Let us proceed to act upon the provisions of the bill as they are now before us. Let us determine whether or not we will stand by the other House in providing that each succeeding year there shall be a proportionate reduction of 20 per cent, so that at the end of five years we will get rid of the contract schools. Let us either accept or reject the other provisions in this paragraph of the bill. Then having done that, let the Senator from South Dakota, if he sees fit to do so, offer an amendment appropriating a certain amount of money, whether it be great or small, for the purchase of school buildings, and let the Senate proceed intelligently and openly to discuss and act upon that question.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he will vote for such a provision.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will consider the matter and listen very attentively to any argument the Senator from South Dakota chooses to advance in the matter, and very likely I may vote for it; I do not know whether I shall or shall not vote for it. But I suggest that if we are going to appropriate money for that purpose we ought not to take it from the school fund and rob the Indian children of the facilities which we have always given them in matters of education and divert the money to the purchase of real estate in the State of South Dakota or any other State in the American Union. If we are going to purchase those school buildings, if that is the policy of the Government, and I think we will have to come to it sooner or later, let us meet the matter fairly and squarely; let us appropriate money for that specific purpose and not appropriate it under the guise of an amendment that is going to take from the children the money to which they are entitled to secure their education.

I believe I have said all that I desire to say on this question. I hope the Senate will reject the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota unless he temporarily withdraws it. Whether I have intelligently discussed this matter or not (I may be laboring under a misapprehension; the Senator from South Dakota knows much more about the details of Indian education, as well as Indian affairs, than I do), I hope he will see the propriety of withdrawing his amendment and letting us act upon the provisions of the bill which we are now considering. Then if he chooses to offer an amendment appropriating money for this specific purpose, let him do so, and we will act upon it as an independent proposition.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President—

Mr. CALL. I rise to a point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida will state his point of order.

Mr. CALL. It was unanimously agreed that we should consider the committee amendments first as the bill was read, and then consider other amendments that might properly come before the Senate. I hope the Senator from South Dakota will not insist upon discussing at this time the amendment which he proposes.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The amendment is an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. CALL. It not only increases the appropriation but it proposes general legislation. So I hope the Senator will not bring me to the necessity of objecting to it or making a motion to lay it upon the table.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall insist upon my amendment at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Florida that the pending amendment, submitted by the Senator from South Dakota, is an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It does not increase the appropriation.

Mr. CALL. I beg pardon; it does increase the appropriation. It increases the appropriation by $515,000 added to $1,164,000.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I intend by my amendment to provide not for any increase of the appropriation, but to make definite the sum which shall be expended for contract schools and not leave that amount in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I made the sum the same amount that was expended last year for this purpose.

In addition to that, I provide for complying with the policy of the Government in reducing the amount 20 per cent in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and propose that that sum shall be expended in the purchase of schools. If we purchase schools, the Government at once takes care of the children in those schools. So the other schools are still provided for by the amendment. If it is not clear, if it is not plain, I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will give us the benefit of his thought and judgment, and offer such amendments as will carry out my intention.

Mr. GALLINGER. With the permission of the Senator from South Dakota I will ask him one simple question. If I am wrong I should like to be set right. If 20 per cent of the money appropriated is to be taken for the purchase of real estate, does it not take just that amount out of the school money, and does it not leave those children without the facilities for education?

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Senator from New Hampshire talks about purchasing real estate. The bill proposes to purchase schools with which we have heretofore contracted.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. PETTIGREW. If we purchase a school where there are 125 children, those children will be taken care of by the Government; and the other 80 per cent of the appropriation goes to take care of the other schools which we do not purchase.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will 80 per cent take care of their education when heretofore 100 per cent has been needed?

Mr. PETTIGREW. There will be that many less children.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not call it real estate; I will say school buildings, if the Senator from South Dakota prefers. If you take 20 per cent of the school money for the purchase of contract school buildings, how are you going to accommodate and educate the children? There is the same number of children. If you take them out of contract schools you must put them in Government schools. The money must be expended, and if you appropriate it in this way how are the children going to be educated?

Mr. PETTIGREW. The bill provides for a reduction of 20 per cent anyway.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not of the children.

Mr. PETTIGREW. There is a 20 per cent reduction for contract schools. What are you going to do with the children who are in contract schools? You provide, anyway, for the expenditure of the money to purchase schools. So the school capacity will not be decreased. There is no question about that.

Mr. GALLINGER. The children, of course, are going to be transferred to the Government schools, but the Government can not educate children without spending money for that purpose. In fact, the contention has been that it costs more to educate in Government schools than in contract schools. If you take 20 per cent for the purchase of schools you must certainly deprive 20 per cent of the children of education.

Mr. PETTIGREW. But the proposition is to reduce the appropriation 20 per cent, and thereby close up a portion of the schools without any provision at all as to them. I am perfectly willing to increase the appropriation; I am perfectly willing that a specific sum shall be appropriated to purchase those schools outside of the sum provided for their maintenance and support. I think my amendment may be improved. But I am not afraid of any proposition or suggestion or amendment which the Senator from New Hampshire may frame, and I am not afraid that he will deceive me one particle with regard to its contents.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not propose to draft amendments for the Senator from South Dakota. He is fully competent to do that himself. Now, he has conceded precisely the ground that I have contended for, that we must increase the appropriation if we purchase the school buildings. Let the Senator from South Dakota meet the matter squarely. Let him propose an amendment to the bill that will provide an appropriation for this specific purpose, and then the Senate can adopt it or vote it down just as it pleases; but to come in here and, under the guise of an innocent amendment, undertake to rob 20 per cent of the Indian children of school facilities and divert the money to the purchase of school buildings is an absurdity so patent to my mind that I do not think the Senator from South Dakota is going to stand here and advocate it many minutes longer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it has been made very plain that the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota takes the 20 per cent which is taken from the contract schools, and which ought to go to Government schools in order to educate the same number of children, and uses it for the purchase of buildings and equipment. I have no objection to an additional appropriation if it is desired for the purpose of compensating the contract schools for buildings and equipment taken by the Government. It seems to me very clear that an additional appropriation is needed if this amendment is to be agreed to, as it would have the effect of crippling the educational fund used solely for the education of the children.

But there is, to my mind, a very much more important objection to the amendment presented by the Senator from South Dakota. If adopted by the Senate it entirely effaces the proviso on page 73. In that proviso is contained a declaration of the policy of the House of Representatives embodying the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior. That declaration of policy adopted by the House is that this reduction shall go on steadily for five years until all these contract schools are abolished. I believe entirely in that policy. I think those schools ought to be abolished and that Government schools should take their place. If the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota is adopted it carries all that declaration out with it and we shall have no opportunity of reaching it. I am quite aware that one Congress can not bind another, but at the same time I think it is of the utmost importance that that declaration of policy should stand. It is the abolition of a class of schools and of the appropriation of money for them in what I think is a wrong manner, and I am most anxious that those lines should be reached. If the amendment is adopted the opportunity of voting upon that amendment is taken away. It not only becomes a portion of the educational fund, but entirely wipes out the declaration of policy of the House in favor of the abolition of these schools, which, I think, is of the utmost importance.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Of course, the object for which I strive is accomplished by a direct appropriation for the purchase of these schools. In the amendment I propose to take the 20 per cent which is to be diverted from the contract schools to Government schools, and apply it to the purchase of contract schools. The Senator objects on the ground that it would reduce the appropriation for the Government schools. All the Government schools are provided for and filled to their fullest capacity. If 80 per cent is taken off from the contract schools you can not remove those children to Government schools, for we have not the buildings to accommodate them. Therefore the Secretary of the Interior will be compelled to erect new buildings. I propose, instead of having him erect new buildings, to buy the old ones and continue the schools where they are.

I am perfectly willing that this shall be brought about by increasing the appropriation. I think it would be better to conform as far as possible to the idea of the committee and not increase the appropriation. If the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Massachusetts are willing that an increased appropriation shall be made I am heartily in favor of it.

Mr. STEWART. Allow me to make a suggestion. It is to add to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota:

And in case of such purchase a sum equal to the money expended for such purchase is hereby appropriated for the support of the schools which become Government schools by such purchase.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The Chair understands that the pending amendment is an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from South Dakota accepts my amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I beg pardon; I modify my amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be read as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is accepted as part of the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota. The amendment to the amendment will be read as modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That $515,000 of said sum of $1,164,350 shall be expended in support of schools with which contracts have heretofore been made: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, expend 20 per cent of said sum of $515,000 in the purchase of the property of such contract schools as may be offered for sale. And in case of such purchase a sum equal to the money expended for such purchase is hereby appropriated for the support of the schools which become Government schools by such purchase.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am glad to make the last clause a part of my amendment. I understand that it carries out the idea of the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly it does not carry out my idea, I beg to suggest to the Senator from South Dakota. In the first place, I contend, as does the Senator from Massachusetts, that striking out certain provisions from the bill and inserting any sort of an amendment strikes at the very fundamental doctrine for which we contended in this Chamber one year ago and for which we contend to-day.

I suggest to the Senator again, that if he is to offer an amendment of this kind, whether in its original form or as modified, he should withhold it until we act upon the important provision of the bill that is embraced in the portion that he proposes to strike out. I do not know whether I should vote for the amendment as modified or not if it is offered as an independent proposition. I certainly shall not vote for it if it is offered as a substitute for the most important provision that the bill contains, and that is the declaration of policy which we passed upon one year ago, which the Secretary of the Interior has confirmed in his late report, and which the House of Representatives has incorporated in this bill, that we shall proportionately reduce the amount 20 per cent each year, so that at the end of five years we shall get rid of these contract schools entirely. I trust that if the amendment is insisted upon in its present form it will be rejected, and that we shall proceed to act upon the provisions of the bill as they come from the House of Representatives and from the Committee on Appropriations on the part of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will first state the parliamentary situation. The Chair understands that the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota proposes to strike out all after "Alaska," in line 2, on page 73, to the end of the proviso. The committee amendment is to amend that language, and the committee amendment is, therefore, first in order. Until there has been an opportunity to perfect the text, a motion to strike out is not in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then let us have the question on the committee amendment.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment of the Senator from South Dakota as modified undoubtedly meets the objection as to the disposition of the school funds, but it does not meet the objection which to me is most important, that it strikes out the declaration of policy made by the House of Representatives in regard to the abolition of these schools. I had supposed that when a motion was made to strike out it was necessary to perfect the text first before the motion to strike out was put.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Chair holds to that view.

Mr. LODGE. Therefore, as the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota is intended to perfect the passage which the committee proposes to strike out, it would have precedence. I think that is the rule laid down in Jefferson's Manual. I am not prepared to say whether it is the practice of the Senate or not.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that the Chair has stated as his ruling that the committee amendment is now in order.

Mr. LODGE. I did not so understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The matter was so stated, the Chair understands, by the Vice-President last night. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] said:

I have an amendment on the desk which has not been disposed of that I think covers the question. I ask that it may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. When the text is perfected the Chair will recognize the Senator from South Dakota.

The Senator from South Dakota then said:

I think if the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas prevails it may take the place of the one I offered. As I offered my amendment first, I should like to have it disposed of first.

The Chair thinks that the motion to perfect the text would be in order before the motion to strike out and insert. The question, then, is on the adoption of the amendment of the committee to insert in line 3 what will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "contracts," line 3 of page 73, insert the words "but only with present contract schools."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "eighteen hundred and ninety-five," in line 7, page 73, strike out:

And each succeeding year he shall proportionately so reduce the amount thus used that at the end of five years from the date on which this act goes into effect all contracts for such education shall cease.

Mr. CALL. I hope we shall have a vote on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The language having been perfected, the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota is in order to strike out the whole proviso and insert the words which will be read by the Secretary.

Mr. CALL. I hope the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota will not prevail. The bill has been very carefully prepared with a view of providing strict and impartial justice between the different contract schools. If we propose to interfere with it we shall destroy entirely the harmony and propriety of these provisions. The amendment of the Senator from South Dakota would require an increase of appropriation unless we abandon the whole theory of the bill in its adjustment of the schools. I hope that the Senate will vote down the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have only to say in reference to this matter that I trust the committee amendment may not be adopted. We had a declaration yesterday from the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that this amendment was not put in the bill at his instance, but in opposition I think to the position he then held. I understand the Senator in charge of the bill to say that he does not approve of it. It is certainly the vital part in the whole matter, and if it is stricken out will emasculate the bill and relegate us to precisely the same condition of things that existed one year ago when this contention was inaugurated.

I trust that the amendment of the committee may be rejected, and if necessary I shall ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from New Hampshire that the pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota, and not the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I beg the Chair's pardon.

Mr. GORMAN. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is to strike out the proviso on page 73 as amended by the committee and insert the language offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. GORMAN. Let it be read, so that we may see how it stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proviso will first be read as amended and then the amendment suggested in lieu of it by the Senator from South Dakota.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may make contracts, but only with present contract schools, for the education of Indian pupils during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, to an extent not exceeding 80 per cent of the amount so used for the fiscal year 1893.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota to strike out the proviso which has just been read and insert what the Secretary will now read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That $515,000 of said sum of $1,164,330 shall be expended in support of schools with which contracts have heretofore been made: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, expend 20 per cent of said sum of $515,000 in the purchase of the property of such contract schools as may be offered for sale. And in case of such purchase a sum equal to the money expended for such purchase is hereby appropriated for the support of the schools which become Government schools by such purchase.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. What became of the amendment I moved yesterday to perfect the text by striking out the word "may" and inserting the word "shall," in line 2, page 73?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 2, page 73, strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall," so as to read:

That the Secretary of Interior shall make contracts, etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment is now in order, it being to perfect the text proposed to be stricken out. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. GORMAN. I inquire of the Chair whether the committee amendment striking out the clause from line 7 to line 11 has been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been agreed to, the Chair will state.

Mr. LODGE. Not the amendment beginning in line 7?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly not.

Mr. FRYE. It was declared agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was announced agreed to by the Chair in the absence of objection.

Mr. LODGE. I did not so understand.

Mr. GORMAN. I certainly did not so understand.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment of the committee in line 3 was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that both amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I certainly did not understand it, because I myself have an amendment pending to that clause.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The matter can be easily set straight. It was so declared by the Chair in the absence of objection while the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts was probably withdrawn; but by unanimous consent the vote will be regarded as reconsidered, and that will be declared to be the pending amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I understood the Chair to hold that before the committee amendment to strike out that clause could be put it was necessary to put the question on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is entirely mistaken. Perhaps the Chair was not sufficiently clear in his statement. The statement of the Chair was that the text must first be acted upon and perfected before a motion to strike out is in order.

Mr. LODGE. Do I now understand the Chair to state that the question is on the committee amendment to strike out the clause beginning in line 7?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The text has been perfected by two amendments, one by inserting the words "but only with present contract schools," in the third line, and the other by substituting "shall" for "may" in line 2. The pending amendment is to strike out from line 7 to line 11, beginning with "and" and ending with "cease."

Mr. LODGE. On that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the question? Let us understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "eighteen hundred and ninety-five," in line 7, page 73, strike out:

And each succeeding year he shall proportionately so reduce the amount thus used that at the end of five years from the date on which this act goes into effect all contracts for such education shall cease.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I trust the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be agreed to. The bill as it comes from the House is a radical change in the entire system, and attempts on an appropriation bill to determine what we shall do for the next five years. That is bad in principle in any case. The Committee on Appropriations thought we ought to deal only with the next fiscal year, and we have tried to eliminate everything from the bill that would bind the Government to what it shall do in the next five years in the matter of the education of Indian children.

I trust the Senate will sustain the Committee on Appropriations in this amendment. Let the next Congress deal with the fiscal year thereafter. Nobody can tell to-day how this new system will operate, what injustice may be done concerning investments which may have been made in buildings, or the effect upon the schools already in existence. I confess that I do not know that the way these schools have been conducted all over the country has been a very great success, beginning with the highest school and going down to the lowest; but it seemed to the committee, and it seems to me, that in fairness to everybody, to the people who are interested in this work, to the Indians themselves, and to the Government, we ought to deal with the subject for only one year. In the next Congress we shall have had nearly a year of the operation of the system that we are inaugurating in this bill, and we shall have all the facts before us. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the people who are engaged in the education of the Indians will be able then to give us further light on the matter, and we can deal with the subject intelligently. It is possible that we may then be able to make a greater reduction, and that such an adjustment of this matter can be had as to enable the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to present a scheme which can be satisfactorily introduced. At all events, it is bad policy in a matter of this sort that Congress should without due consideration change the whole system for five years in advance. It is unusual.

If this provision had been proposed in the Senate of the United States as an amendment it would have been out of order. It has no place and no right in this bill under the rules of any parliamentary body that I know of. But like some other provisions, it has come to us and we have attempted to correct it, and to correct it without running counter to the sentiment which unfortunately has crept out in this whole matter, and which ought not to be permitted to influence the mind of anyone here. But at all events we can afford to do simple justice and confine the reduction to one year. I trust the Senator from Massachusetts, who I know to be as much interested in the matter of Indian education as any Senator here, will see the justice and the propriety of doing what the Committee on Appropriations have attempted to do.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, much that the Senator from Maryland has said with reference to attempting to control future Congresses in legislation is correct and true; but we have a very peculiar state of affairs here. In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, there was spent for contract schools $512,435. In last year's appropriation act a clause was inserted declaring it to be the policy of the Government to change the contract schools to Government schools as rapidly as possible. Yet with that clause in the appropriation act there was spent between June 30, 1893, and June 30, 1894, I understand, an increased amount of money, $515,000, for the contract schools. So instead of the amount having been decreased it has been increased during the past year, although Congress has declared it to be the policy of the Government to have a reduction.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is doubtless right on that point, but still we have submitted the matter to the Secretary of the Interior for his examination and report, and he reports that hereafter we ought to decrease the amount 20 per cent.

While I am on my feet I wish to say a single word further. I listened to the argument of the Senator from Maryland in favor of the committee amendment. I do not agree at all with him. I know of no reason why we may not in a statute, and especially in an appropriation act, where we declare all sorts of things, make a declaration looking to the future as well as to the present. If the bill as it comes from the House of Representatives is enacted into law and works a hardship we can take care of that in the next appropriation bill, where, as my colleague has frequently said, we enact all sorts of legislation.

I was somewhat surprised to hear the Senator from Maryland suggest that if this provision had been offered as an amendment in the Senate it would have been out of order. Mr. President, almost one-half of the bill is out of order to-day, but we are passing upon it. We are not raising the point of order on these various amendments. Hence that suggestion does not carry any weight. I think we have a clear and plain duty to perform in this matter, and that is to reject the amendment and to pass the bill, so far as this provision is concerned, precisely as it came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I quite understand, as the Senator from Maryland has pointed out and as I have already said in this debate, that one Congress can not bind another. That is perfectly obvious. But these schools are the schools known as sectarian denominational schools. I believe, and I think that it is the general belief of the American people, that the public money ought not to be appropriated for sectarian purposes or for sectarian schools. I have held that view ever since I have served in Congress. Now, the Secretary of the Interior has recommended their abolition and stated that it can be done in five years by a gradual reduction.

It seems to me it might be done in a much shorter time; but it is admitted on all hands that it is desirable to get rid of these schools. If we are going to do it, I see no objection to Congress making a declaration of policy. On the contrary, I think it is of great importance that Congress should so declare the policy of the Government in regard to these schools. There can be no surprise, no complaint of unfairness. It can be known that they are to be removed in the course of the next three or five years. Undoubtedly the next Congress will not be bound by it, and equally undoubtedly the next Congress will give due weight to the action of the present Congress.

To me, Mr. President, this is far the most important provision in the pending appropriation bill, and I sincerely hope that the amendment of the committee to strike out will fail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll call will proceed on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN]; otherwise I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Has the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin has not voted.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am paired with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. McMILLAN (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana has not voted.

Mr. McMILLAN. Then I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. BURROWS (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. WHITE (after having voted in the affirmative). The Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] and I are paired. I voted inadvertently, and withdraw my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the negative). I inquire whether the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from Texas has not voted.

Mr. GALLINGER. I notice he is in his seat, and therefore will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. HARRIS. I inquire if the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] is recorded as voting?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont is not recorded.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that we transfer our respective pairs.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not necessary, inasmuch as my pair is present.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well. Then I withdraw my vote, and announce my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. PASCO's name was called). The present occupant of the chair is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD].

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Bate,	George,	McPherson,	Power,
Blackburn,	Gorman,	Mantle,	Roach,
Brice,	Gray,	Martin,	Stewart,
Caffery,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell of Wis.	Turpie,
Camden,	Hill,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Carey,	Hunton,	Murphy,	Walsh,
Clark,	Jones of Ark.	Palmer,	Wilson of Wash.
Davis,	Lindsay,	Pettigrew,

NAYS—23.

Call,	Gallinger,	McLaurin,	Pugh,
Cameron,	Hawley,	Manderson,	Quay,
Chandler,	Higgins,	Peffer,	Squire,
Cockrell,	Hoar,	Perkins,	Wolcott,
Dixon,	Kyle,	Platt,

NOT VOTING—34.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	McMillan,	Smith,
Allen,	Dubois,	Mills,	Teller,
Allison,	Faulkner,	Mitchell of Oreg.	Vest,
Berry,	Gibson,	Morrill,	Vilas,
Blanchard,	Gordon,	Pasco,	Washburn,
Butler,	Hale,	Pritchard,	White,
Coke,	Harris,	Ransom,	Wilson of Iowa,
Cullom,	Irby,	Sherman,
Daniel,	Jones of Nev.	Shoup,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the proviso beginning on page 73, line 2, and insert:

Provided, That $515,000 of said sum of $1,164,350 shall be expended in support of schools with which contracts have heretofore been made: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, expend 20 per cent of said sum of $515,000 in the purchase of the property of such contract schools as may be offered for sale, and in case of such purchase a sum equal to the money expended for such purpose is hereby appropriated for the support of the schools which become Government schools by such purchase.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand it was agreed by unanimous consent that we were first to go through with the committee amendments, and then that amendments were to be submitted by individual Senators. I make that point now. I will suggest to the Senator that this is not the time to offer his amendment; it can be offered later on.

Mr. CALL. I desire to say that I made that point; I think it is a correct point; but the Vice-President, then in the chair, ruled that it was an amendment to the committee amendment, and not to the text of the bill, and therefore was in order. I should be very glad if that decision could be reversed. In justice to myself I feel that I should make this statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that when the Vice-President occupied the chair that point was raised and it was determined that the amendment was in order, and it was the pending amendment when the present occupant took the chair. The present occupant is not disposed to overrule the action of the Vice-President, and decides the amendment to be in order. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. Very well.

Mr. CHANDLER. Do I understand that the Presiding Officer now holds the amendment to be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment was declared to be in order when the Vice-President was in the chair.

Mr. CHANDLER. As the amendment is to be voted on, I should like to have it again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again read.

The Secretary read the amendment proposed by Mr. PETTIGREW.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], and in his absence withhold my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. PASCO's name was called). The present occupant of the chair is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD].

Mr. WILSON of Iowa (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRICE. I am paired with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. BURROWS (after having voted in the negative). I wish to withdraw my vote, and announce my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from Texas has not voted.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am paired with that Senator, but I will transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. McPHERSON. I inquire if the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware has not voted.

Mr. McPHERSON. Then I withhold my vote, as I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. HARRIS. In order to make a quorum I will record my vote, notwithstanding my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—13.

Caffery,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,	Stewart.
Cameron,	Jones of Ark.	Pettigrew,
Chandler,	Manderson,	Power,
Davis,	Martin,	Squire,

NAYS—33.

Blackburn,	Harris,	Murphy,	Turpie,
Blanchard,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Voorhees,
Call,	Hoar,	Peffer,	Walsh.
Cockrell,	Huntton,	Platt,
Dixon,	Lindsay,	Proctor,
Frye,	Lodge,	Pugh,

NOT VOTING—42.

Allen,	Dolph,	Kyle,	Shoup,
Allison,	Dubois,	McPherson,	Smith,
Brice,	Faulkner,	Mantle,	Vest,
Burrows,	George,	Mills,	Vilas,
Butler,	Gibson,	Mitchell of Oreg.	Washburn,
Camden,	Gordon,	Mitchell of Wis.	White,
Carey,	Hale,	Morrill,	Wilson of Iowa,
Clark,	Higgins,	Pasco,	Wilson of Wash.
Coke,	Hill,	Pritchard,	Wolcott.
Cullom,	Irby,	Ransom,
Daniel,	Jones of Nev.	Sherman,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from South Dakota that unanimous consent was given that the committee amendments should first be considered. The Senator will please withhold his amendment until the committee amendments have been acted upon.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Very well, I will withhold the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I gave notice of an amendment which I intended to offer at this time. It was an amendment making the time for the abolition of these schools three years, but as the Senate has just declined to keep in the proviso declaring it to be the policy of the Government to abolish them in five years, it is obviously quite useless for me to press an amendment declaring it to be the policy to abolish them in three years. So I do not press a vote upon it, but withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 73, line 18, before the word "dollars," to increase the total from "$1,184,350" to "$1,273,440."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, line 19, after the word "of," to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "three hundred;" in line 23, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty-one thousand seven hundred and fifty" and insert "fifty thousand one hundred;" and, on page 74, line 3, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty-four thousand seven hundred and fifty" and insert "fifty-three thousand one hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at Albuquerque, N. Mex., at $167 per annum for each pupil, $50,100; for pay of superintendent of said school, $1,500; for general repairs and improvements, $1,500; in all, $53,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, line 13, after the word "pupil," to strike out "$90,000;" in line 13, after the word "school," to strike out "$5,000," and in line 15, before the word "thousand," to strike out "$3,000; in all, ninety-eight," and insert "one hundred and five;" so as to make the clause read:

For support of Indian industrial school at Carlisle, Pa., at not exceeding $167 for each pupil; for transportation of pupils to and from said school, for general repairs and improvements, $106,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, line 21, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "five," and in line 23, after the word "thousand," to insert "three hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 125 Indian pupils, at $167 per annum each, at the Indian school at Carson City, Nev., $20,875; for pay of superintendent at said school, $1,500; for general repairs and improvements, $1,000; in all, $23,375.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, line 10, after the word "repairs," to insert "and;" in the same line, after the word "improvements," to strike out "and," and insert "one thousand dollars; for;" and in line 14, before the word "hundred," to strike out "twenty-seven thousand two" and insert "twenty-eight thousand five;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 150 Indian pupils at Flandreau, S. Dak., at $167 each per annum, $25,050; for general repairs and improvements, $1,000; for water supply, $1,000; for pay of superintendent of said school, $1,500; in all, $28,550.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, after line 21, to insert:

That any unexpended balance of the amount appropriated for buildings and repairs of buildings for Fort Shaw Reservation and Indian Industrial School, Montana, for the fiscal year 1895, not needed for that purpose, may be used for purchase of seed, agricultural implements, irrigation, and for water and sewer system for said school, and shall be available during the fiscal year 1896.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 5, after the word "support," to insert "and education;" in line 6, before the word "Indian," to strike out "two hundred and forty" and insert "three hundred;" in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty thousand and eighty," and insert "fifty thousand one hundred;" and in line 12, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty-two thousand five hundred and eighty" and insert "fifty-two thousand six hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 300 Indian pupils, at $167 per annum each, at Indian school, Fort Totten, N. Dak., $50,100; for pay of superintendent at said school, $1,500; for general repairs and improvements, $1,000; in all, $52,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 14, before the word "Indian," to strike out "and fifty;" in line 17, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty-eight thousand four hundred and fifty" and insert "fifty thousand one hundred," and in line 20, before the word "dollars," to strike out "sixty thousand nine hundred and fifty" and insert "fifty-two thousand six hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 200 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Genoa, Neb., at $167 per annum each, $33,400; for general repairs and improvements, $1,000; for pay of superintendent of said school, $1,500; in all, $35,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 1, after the word "dollars," to insert "for erection of hospital, $1,500; and in line 2, after the word "all," to strike out "twenty-seven thousand five hundred" and insert "twenty-nine thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 150 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Grand Junction, Colo., at $167 per annum each, $25,050; for pay of superintendent at said school, $1,500; for general repairs and improvements, $1,000; for erection of hospital, $1,500; in all, $29,050.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the two clauses for the support and education of Indian pupils at the school at Hampton, Va., and at the Lincoln Institution in Philadelphia, on page 77, extending from line 4 to line 10, have already been acted upon by the Senate. The next amendment in order will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 77, line 15, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one thousand five hundred" and insert "two thousand;" and in line 17, before the word "dollars," to insert "five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 500 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Haskell Institute, Lawrence, Kans., at $167 per annum each, $83,500; for pay of superintendent at said school, $2,000; for general repairs and improvements, $1,000; in all, $86,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 22, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "five;" in line 24, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one thousand" and insert "three thousand two hundred and fifty;" and on page 78, line 2, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-seven thousand two hundred and fifty" and insert "thirty thousand three hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 150 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Mount Pleasant, Mich., at $167 each per annum, $25,050; for pay of superintendent of said school, $1,500; for general repairs and improvements, $3,250; in all, $30,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, line 3, after the word "hundred," to insert "and fifty;" in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "sixteen thousand seven hundred" and insert "twenty-five thousand and fifty;" in line 8, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "five;" in line 9, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "ten," and in line 11, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty thousand nine hundred" and insert "thirty-six thousand five hundred and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 150 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Ferris, Cal., at $167 each per annum, $25,050; for pay of superintendent of said school, $1,500; for erection of additional buildings and general improvements, $10,000; in all, $36,550.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, line 12, after the word "hundred," to insert "and fifty;" in line 16, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty-three thousand four hundred" and insert "forty-one thousand seven hundred and fifty;" and in line 20, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty-six thousand four hundred" and insert "forty-four thousand seven hundred and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 250 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Phoenix, Ariz., at $167 per annum each, $41,750; for pay of superintendent at said school, $1,500; for general repairs and improvements, $1,500; in all, $44,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 3, before the word "Indian," to strike out "sixty" and insert "seventy-five;" in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "ten thousand and twenty" and insert "twelve thousand five hundred and twenty-five;" in line 8, before the word "dollars," to insert "two hundred," and in line 11, before the word "dollars," to strike out "eleven thousand five hundred and twenty" and insert "fourteen thousand two hundred and twenty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 75 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Pipestone, Minn., at $167 per annum each, $12,525; for pay of superintendent at said school, $1,200; for general repairs and improvements, $500; in all, $14,225.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 19, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one" and insert "two;" in line 23, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-five thousand and fifty" and insert "forty-seven thousand seven hundred and fifty;" on page 80, line 1, before the word "dollars," to insert "five hundred;" in the same line, after the word "for," to insert "erection of additional buildings;" in line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one" and insert "fifteen," and in line 3, before the word "hundred," to strike out "twenty-eight thousand five" and insert "fifty-nine thousand seven;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 250 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Santa Fe, N. Mex., at $167 each per annum, $41,750; for pay of superintendent at said school, $1,500; for water supply for irrigation and fire protection, $1,500; for erection of additional buildings, general repairs and improvements, $15,000; in all, $59,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 6, before the word "Indian," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifty;" in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty thousand eight hundred and seventy-five" and insert "twenty-five thousand and fifty;" in line 10, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "five;" and in line 13, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-three thousand and seventy-five" and insert "twenty-seven thousand five hundred and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 150 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Shoshone Reservation, Wyo., at $167 per annum each, $25,050; for pay of superintendent at said school, $1,500; for general repairs and improvements, etc., $1,000; in all, $27,550.

Mr. CALL. In line 11, I move to strike out the words "and so forth."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 18, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "five," and in line 20, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eighteen thousand nine" and insert "nineteen thousand two;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Tomah, Wis., at $167 per annum each, $16,700; for pay of superintendent at said school, $1,500; for general repairs and improvements, $1,000; in all, $19,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, line 4, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "forty;" so as to make the clause read:

For collecting and transportation of pupils to and from Indian schools, and also for the transportation of Indian pupils from all the Indian schools and placing of them, with the consent of their parents, under the care and control of such suitable white families as may in all respects be qualified to give such pupils moral, industrial, and educational training, under arrangements in which their proper care, support, and education shall be in exchange for their labor, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, after line 4, to strike out:

That the allotments of land made to the Quapaw Indians, in the Indian Territory, in pursuance of an act of the Quapaw national council, approved March 23, 1893, be, and the same are hereby, ratified and confirmed. And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue patents to said allottees in accordance therewith: Provided, That said allotments shall be inalienable for a period of twenty-five years from and after the date of said patents: And provided further, That the surplus lands on said reservation, if any, may be allotted from time to time by said tribe to its members under the above entitled act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the next committee amendment, to strike out, on page 81, from line 5 to line 15, inclusive, has already been acted upon.

The next amendment was, on page 84, line 14, after the word "hundred," to strike out "ninety-six" and insert "ninety-five;" so as to read:

But no such goods or supplies shall be distributed or delivered to any of said Indians prior to July 1, 1895.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, on page 89, line 6, after the word "this," to strike out "act" and insert "section;" so as to make the clause read:

And on failure of any purchaser to make payment as required by this section he shall forfeit the lands purchased, and the same shall be subject to entry and sale, at the appraised value thereof, or shall be again offered at public sale, as the Secretary of the Interior may determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 12, before the word "the," to strike out "Act" and insert "section;" so as to make the clause read:

That there shall be exempted from the provisions of this section the lands upon which the two boarding or industrial schools are located on these reservations, not exceeding 640 acres for each school, the amount to be determined and designated, after the tribe shall have assented, by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 17, after the word "this," to strike out "Act" and insert "section;" so as to make the clause read:

That for the purpose of carrying this section into effect the sum of $1,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which sum shall be reimbursed to the United States out of the proceeds of the first sales of lands made under the provisions hereof, each tribe to be charged only with the expenses attending the sale of its own lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, line 3, after the word "this," to strike out "act" and insert "section;" so as to make the clause read:

That before any of the surplus lands belonging to the Kickapoo tribe of Indians shall be sold under the provisions of this section there shall be allotted by the Secretary of the Interior 80 acres to each of the children of said tribe residing on or adjacent to said reservation who have not heretofore received any lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, after line 8, to insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. 11. That in all payments or disbursements of money to Indians individually the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to detail an officer from his Department or appoint a special agent to make or to superintend and inspect such payment; and when made by special agent the Secretary shall fix a reasonable compensation, not to exceed $200 per month when actually employed, for the services of such special agent and pay it out of the money to be disbursed. In all cases the agent making such payment shall give bond to the United States in double the amount to be disbursed, with good and sufficient security, to be approved by the Secretary, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties. All such payments to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I propose to suggest an amendment to the committee amendment. In lines 14 and 15 I move that the words "not to exceed $200 per month when actually employed" be stricken out. The purpose of conferring on the Secretary of the Interior the power of employing an agent to pay out these money to the Indians per capita is to avoid such scandals as have characterized such transactions. The amendment requires that bonds shall be given for such payments. Where a half million or a million dollars has to be paid out to one of these tribes and a bond is required to be given for double the amount, say for a million or two million dollars, I do not think any man can be found who would be willing to make the bond for the paltry consideration of $200 a month for the time he was actually employed, which perhaps would not be more than three or four weeks of actual payment.

To strike out these words will leave the matter of compensation in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. Of course he will not act in such cases except by consent of the Indians concerned. It seems to me there can be no harm done so far as the payment of salary goes. I suggest to the members of the committee in charge of the bill that the words "not to exceed $200 per month when actually employed" ought to be stricken out of the amendment. That will leave it in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to fix a reasonable compensation wherever he chooses to direct that a special agent shall be employed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "compensation," in line 14, page 90, strike out "not to exceed $200 per month when actually employed."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I desire to call attention to the amendment on page 47, which was passed over. I understand the committee amendments have been gone through with.

Mr. PLATT. Several committee amendments have been passed over.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. The amendment to which I allude was the first committee amendment passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate now recurs to the amendments passed over, the first of which is on page 47. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Under the head "Miscellaneous," page 47, beginning in line 4, the committee report to strike out:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the Stockbridge Indians, per capita, one-half of the trust fund now to their credit in the United States Treasury, and heretofore appropriated, when the allotment to their lands shall have been completed.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no objection to the recommendation of the committee being disagreed to. The committee had no information about the matter, and the amendment was—

Mr. PLATT. I think the amendment of the committee ought not to be disagreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well, if there is any objection to disagreeing to it. The clause was in the bill as it came from the House, and we had no information about it from the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs. Before this amendment is taken up I should like to correct one or two other things that will take no time. Let the amendment on page 47 be passed over informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the amendment will be passed over temporarily.

Mr. COCKRELL. After line 8, on page 47, under the head of "Miscellaneous," I move to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to negotiate with the Indians on the San Carlos Reservation, Ariz., through an interpreter, for the cession or relinquishment to the United States of the lands embracing the coal fields, and any agreement made shall be submitted to Congress for its action.

We find in the sundry civil appropriation bill a very vague provision as it came to us from the House authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to segregate these coal lands without any provision for the consent of the Indians or any negotiation. I referred the matter to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and he reported back a recommendation that in the Indian appropriation bill a provision of this kind should be inserted; stating that the coal fields are there; that the Indians know they are valuable; that they will never be satisfied unless through regular negotiation the United States shall obtain title to them, and that as they are not available to the Indians he thought it was the best policy to negotiate and adjust the matter and make them available. So I ask that the amendment I propose be adopted, and that the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may be printed in the RECORD and also as a separate document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is so ordered in the absence of objection. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Office of Indian Affairs, Washington February 9, 1895.

SIR: I received from you on yesterday a telephone message requesting me to examine the paragraph on page 59, lines 5 to 7, of the sundry civil bill as passed the House, relating to survey and segregation of the coal fields on the San Carlos Reservation, Ariz., and make full report to you as to purpose and effect of said provision and my opinion as to the necessity or propriety of this work.

The provision referred to is as follows:

"For the purpose of a survey and segregation of the coal fields on the San Carlos Indian Reservation, in Arizona, $5,000."

As to just what ultimate effect this legislation would have I am not prepared to say, as there is no provision as to what disposition shall be made of the coal fields when segregated. The avowed purpose of it is to cut off from the reservation the lands embracing the coal fields and have them surveyed, in order that they may become subject to disposal under the general land laws.

These coal fields lie south of the Gila River, opposite the present site of the San Carlos Agency. For many years the people of Arizona especially have been endeavoring to get possession of these lands in order to utilize the coal which is known to exist there in more or less quantities. The legislature of Arizona has several times petitioned Congress to that end.

This office has always been in sympathy with the people in their desire to obtain possession of these coal fields, but has always taken the ground that the consent of the Indians should first be obtained and that they should be paid a reasonable sum for the lands.

I had occasion not long ago to make a report to the Secretary of the Interior touching this very matter, in which I remarked in substance that the Indians of the White Mountain Reservation were known to be very jealous respecting their boundary lines; that they were well aware that these coal fields were and have long been coveted by the whites, which fact doubtless gave them a value which they did not possess before this was so well understood.

My suggestions were that an inspector of the Department be sent to negotiate with the Indians for the cession or relinquishment to the United States of the lands embracing the coal fields, and that any agreement made should be submitted to Congress for its action.

I am still strongly of the opinion that these lands should not be segregated without the consent of the Indians and just compensation; and if the effect of the clause in the sundry civil bill above cited would be contrary to this equitable plan, I think it should be stricken out.

As having a direct bearing upon this question, I have the honor to invite your attention to the fact that only the other day the President vetoed a bill granting a right of way to a railway company through this reservation largely upon the ground that it did not provide for first obtaining the consent of the Indians. (See Senate Executive Document No. 49, Fifty-third Congress, third session.)

In conclusion I will add that the paragraph in the sundry civil bill providing for this "survey and segregation" did not originate in this office, nor do I know where it did originate. I am free to say, however, that these coal fields ought to be made available to public use, and I believe that upon a proper presentation of the case to the Indians they would give their consent.

Very respectfully,

D. M. BROWNING, Commissioner.

Hon. F. M. COCKRELL,
Chairman Senate Committee on Appropriations
(Through the Secretary of the Interior).

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, on page 62 is the next amendment passed over. I suggest an amendment in lieu of any amendment there. In line 20, strike out "the surplus lands purchased by the United States," and after the word "thereof," in line 19, insert "purchased by the United States." This is offered in lieu of the amendment proposed by the committee. Let it be read as it would stand if amended in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Amend the paragraph so as to read:

That any State or Territory entitled to indemnity school lands or entitled to select lands for educational purposes under existing law may select such lands within the boundaries of any Indian reservation in such State or Territory from the surplus lands thereof, purchased by the United States, after allotments have been made to the Indians of such reservation and prior to the opening of such reservation to settlement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The original committee amendments are withdrawn and the amendment suggested by the Senator from Missouri is declared adopted in the absence of any objection.

Mr. CALL. I think some consideration ought to be given to this amendment. It seems to me it opens the whole of these lands to outside allotment and location of scrip. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] yesterday objected to it because it would open the lands to selection in other States and Territories than those in which these Indian lands lie. I call his attention to it.

Mr. PLATT. Let me suggest that whether this amendment is adopted or not adopted the whole matter will go into conference, and it can be fully examined in conference.

Mr. CALL. That may, perhaps, be the advisable course to pursue.

Mr. PLATT. It seems to me well to adopt the amendment and leave the matter for adjustment in conference. I do not know what the Senator from South Dakota thinks about it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Senator from South Dakota thinks so, too.

Mr. COCKRELL. We had to amend the provision as it came from the House to make it mean anything.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think the Senator from Missouri has it in such shape that it is entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. PLATT. Let it be agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment I have offered is in lieu of the amendments of the committee.

Mr. PETTIGREW. That I agree to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the committee to the paragraph have been withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment on page 58 will be reported.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was really agreed to the next morning. I offered certain amendments as a settlement of the whole question. Let it be read, however, if the record does not show it.

The SECRETARY. After the word "barred," page 58, line 14, insert:

And provided further, That it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States, within ten days after the filing of said petition—

Mr. PLATT. All that has been read.

Mr. COCKRELL. That has all been read, and the amendments were agreed upon and offered the next morning at the instance of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which was a settlement of the whole matter. Those amendments were to be considered as agreed to. If the record does not show it—

Mr. PLATT. The amendments on page 54 were agreed to?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. And that was—

Mr. COCKRELL. Part and parcel of the same thing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the amendment on page 58 will be declared adopted.

Mr. COCKRELL. And on page 59.

Mr. CALL. I wish to express my dissent to that at once. The amendment on page 58, beginning in line 14, is as follows:

And provided further, That it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States, within ten days after the filing of said petition, to give notice to said Wichitas and affiliated bands through the agents, delegates, attorneys, or other representatives of said bands that said bands are made defendants in said suit, of the purpose of said suit, that they are required to make answer to said petition, and that Congress has, in accordance with article 6 of said agreement adopted this method of determining their compensation, if any. And the answer of the Wichitas and affiliated bands shall state the facts on which they rely for compensation, and may be verified by their agents, delegates, attorneys, or other representatives upon their information and belief as to the existence of such facts, and no other statement or verification shall be necessary: And provided also, That said Wichitas and affiliated bands shall file their answer in said suit within sixty days after they shall receive from the Attorney-General of the United States the notice herein provided for unless further time is granted by the court; and in the event of failure to answer they may be barred from all claim in the premises aforesaid.

A statement was made the other day by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] showing that in the preceding portion of this agreement the Government had agreed positively by treaty that Congress would take final action in determining this matter. Now we refer it to a court, with a provision that the Indians shall be barred absolutely and forever if they fail to answer in accordance with that agreement.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to suggest that the amendment which is being discussed by the Senator from Florida was discussed fully and settled three or four days ago. It certainly is not open for discussion now in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CALL. It was not settled with my knowledge or approval.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That may be, but the Senate settled it.

Mr. CALL. I say it did not meet with my approval.

Mr. COCKRELL. I discover that on page 73, in consequence of the amendment proposed by the—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that the amendments on page 58 should be first settled. The Senator from Arkansas states that they were disposed of several days ago.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no question about that. That was the distinct understanding, and I made the statement when I reported certain agreements.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then those amendments do not require any action at this time.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 73, line 17, the total, $1,273,440, should be disagreed to; so as to leave the amount as fixed by the House, $1,184,850.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be considered as reconsidered, and the amount will be left as it was fixed by the House, in the absence of objection. The amendment on page 47 will now be taken up.

Mr. PLATT. In regard to what the Senator from Florida has just said, I wish to state that he proposed to offer an amendment providing that the judgment should not be binding on Congress but only advisory, and the Chair then said that the Chair would recognize the Senator from Florida for the purpose of having the individual amendment considered after the committee amendments had been disposed of.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. But that is not in order now, for the committee amendments have not yet been disposed of.

Mr. PLATT. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The individual amendments will be taken up hereafter. The amendment on page 47 will now be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 47 the committee report to strike out the paragraph beginning in line 4, in the following words:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the Stockbridge Indians, per capita, one-half of the trust fund now to their credit in the United States Treasury, and heretofore appropriated, when the allotment to their lands shall have been completed.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I suggested to the committee heretofore the propriety of withdrawing the amendment, and I gave some reasons for that opinion. The amendment was laid aside waiting an expression from the Department of the Interior. I believe my colleague has a letter on the subject from the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. VILAS. I hope that the amendment is not going to be insisted upon. I have received a communication with respect to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator has not heard what occurred. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, thinks the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. VILAS. I understand that the idea of the Senator from Connecticut grows out of the resolution which he introduced, which was passed without attention being called to it on the 30th day of January, with a view of suspending further proceedings under the allotment which was directed to be made by an act of Congress.

Let me remark that this is simply to renew before Congress a controversy which raged, one may say, for some years over this subject, which was considered with great care in the Fifty-second Congress, and finally resulted in the passage of the act of March 3, 1893, devoted solely and entirely to the subject of that controversy, and which, I think, ought to be considered as forever putting it at rest. That act of Congress commands the Secretary of the Interior to proceed to enroll the members of that tribe according to certain principles, and then declares in specific terms that—all members—

Of the tribe—

who entered into possession of lands under the allotments of 1856 and of 1871, and who by themselves or by their lawful heirs have resided on said lands continuously since, are hereby declared to be owners of such lands in fee simple in severalty, and the Government shall issue patents to them therefor.

Mr. PLATT. But this provision goes further than that. If it referred only to those parties to whom lands had been allotted previous to the passage of the act, I should not have the same objection to it that I have now. Will the Senator let me make a statement?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly. I shall be very glad to hear the Senator's statement before I draw attention to the matter.

Mr. PLATT. I would be very willing if the Senator would allow the amendment to be disagreed to, so that the matter might go into conference, and then if he can satisfy the committee that it is all right of course it can be settled in conference. But I apprehend very great injustice is going to be done to some Indians if this provision of the House should be allowed to stand. It is true in 1893 (and I must make any statement about the matter brief) an act was passed providing for a new enrollment of the Stockbridge and Munsee Indians, taking in some Indians claiming rights who up to that time had been excluded. It was said in the report that there were but few of them, but the enrollments have gone on under that act until more persons have been enrolled under the new enrollment than were under the enrollment before the act was passed. So the few for the benefit of whom it was supposed the act was passed number more than the original Indians.

Great complaint is made by those Indians that the enrollments have not been fair. They say that the enrollments are illegal. They say, first, there has been an enrollment of all persons who were members of the tribe at the time of the treaty of 1856, without regard to the question whether they did not subsequently separate themselves from the tribe. That would be against the act. They say that many persons have been enrolled who entered upon allotments under the treaties of 1856 and 1871, irrespective of the requirement that they should have resided continuously thereon since; that under this line persons have been enrolled and placed in position to receive a new allotment of land in cases where they have sold out and abandoned their allotments; that in some cases persons have been unlawfully enrolled who separated from the tribe and became citizens of the United States and were never received back into the tribe in pursuance of article 6 of the treaty of 1856; that persons have been enrolled who were never at any time members of such tribe; also persons who were not recognized under any treaty; also persons who claimed to be descendants of a member of the tribe at one time and who became outcasts for crime and were properly dropped from the tribal roll, and had not resided within the tribe for thirty years or more.

Now, the Indians make those charges. I have here a petition of the Munsee and Stockbridge Indians protesting against this enrollment, saying that it embraces persons who ought not to be enrolled. It is signed by the chairman and secretary of the meeting held for that purpose and with thirty or forty names protesting that the enrollments are not right.

I did introduce a resolution asking the Secretary of the Interior to communicate to Congress the facts in regard to the enrollment.

I am not aware that he has made any reply. I did add to the resolution a provision that he should suspend further action. I know he can not be controlled by that action of the Senate.

If what is claimed here is true, that there have been persons illegally enrolled (and without knowing accurately about all the facts I am inclined to think that is the case), then the provision inserted by the House gives them their share of the tribal funds. I do not think that ought to be done. I am perfectly willing, without entering into a long discussion about it here, that the matter shall be settled in conference.

Mr. VILAS. I do not wish to protract the discussion, but I do not recognize the force of the suggestion by the Senator from Connecticut that because there are a greater number of people entitled to share in that long-delayed justice than we supposed therefore all the justice should be denied to them which Congress has embodied in an act of Congress for the purpose.

Mr. PLATT. If the enrollment has been fair the Senator is quite right. If it has been unfair and illegal, as the large number which have been enrolled would seem on the face to indicate, then they are not entitled to it.

Mr. VILAS. How are we to decide whether the enrollment was well made in accordance with the specific directions of the act of Congress or not? Neither the Senate nor Congress itself is equipped with the means of making that inquiry. It is one of those executive acts which must necessarily be intrusted to the Secretary of the Interior.

I do not object at all to any direction for renewed scrutiny. No one ought to be enrolled not authorized and entitled by the act of Congress to be enrolled. I can not presume that the Secretary of the Interior in the execution of the act has enrolled persons not entitled by law to that place. Neither am I willing to accept, as against the probabilities that he has strictly and carefully executed the law, the complaints of some of those interested people who for so many years strove, and strove successfully, against the award of an act of justice so plain that every Secretary of the Interior, every Commissioner of the Indian Office, and I was about to add every Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate has recognized it, although it took some years before it ripened into a decree. I am willing that the paragraph shall be amended, if the Senator from Connecticut desires, so as to declare that the amounts awarded shall be paid only to such persons as under that act are legally entitled.

Mr. PLATT. "Only to such persons as the Secretary of the Interior shall find are legally entitled under the act of 1893."

Mr. VILAS. "As the Secretary of the Interior shall find under the act of Congress are lawfully entitled to participate."

Mr. PLATT. I suppose I had better accept that.

Mr. VILAS. That will put it in conference, but it does not put the whole question of disbursement into conference. It only puts into conference the specific thing which the Senator addressed his objection to, in respect to which I have no complaint if there be any real fault.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WHITE in the chair). The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 5, after the word "to," insert "such of;" in the same line, after the word "capita," insert "as he shall find entitled under the act of March 3, 1893, to be enrolled and to participate in the distribution;" so as to read:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay to such of the Stockbridge Indians, per capita, as he shall find entitled under the act of March 3, 1893, to be enrolled and to participate in the distribution, one-half of the trust fund now to their credit in the United States Treasury, and heretofore appropriated, when the allotment to their lands have been completed.

Mr. VILAS. In connection with this matter I will ask to have printed in the RECORD, without now reading it, a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, addressed to me, approving this amendment and desiring its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection it will be so ordered.

The paper referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 21, 1895.

SIR: In response to your informal request for an expression of my opinion as to the payment to the Stockbridge Indians, per capita, of one-half of the trust funds now to their credit in the United States Treasury, when the allotment of their lands shall have been completed, I would submit the following:

The provision for this payment was incorporated in the Indian appropriation bill as it passed the House of Representatives. As reported to the Senate by the Committee on Appropriations this provision was stricken out.

In my opinion these Indians are fully capable of managing their own business, and may be safely trusted to expend this money, if it be given them, advantageously. In support of this opinion, and as furnishing the latest information in the possession of the Department as to their status and condition, I quote the following from a special report of the agent in charge, dated November 30, 1894:

"STOCKBRIDGES AND MUNSEES.

"These Indians occupy a reservation consisting of about 11,000 acres, and numbered on the last roll 506 persons. These Indians are civilized, speak only the English language, and have entirely lost their Indian habits and traditions, and are as capable of managing their own affairs as the same number of white men. I would recommend that their lands be allotted to them, patents in fee simple be given, their fund of $75,000 be given them in a lump sum per capita, and that they be made complete citizens and thrown entirely upon their own resources. As long as they are under the control of the Government they will be an annoyance to the Department and a constant source of trouble to the agent, the Department, and to Congress.

"Each head of family has selected his land and they are awaiting the arrival of a special agent to confirm their selections and give them certificates. Their land is well timbered, and when cleared and cultivated will produce good crops. By selling their surplus timber as they clear the land and using the $75,000 divided among them they should at once become prosperous and well-to-do citizens.

"I would also state that out of the 503 of these Indians enrolled not over 300 reside on the reservation. The balance live in the State of New York and in various portions of Wisconsin, and will never remove to the reservation, as they are too comfortably situated to ever move into the woods to occupy and claim a few acres of land that has but a small value at most. These Indians have 500 acres under fence, own 25 horses, 1 mule, 30 head of cattle, 25 hogs, and 500 fowls, but next year the number of houses and acres cultivated will be much greater on account of some of the newly enrolled members of the tribe coming on to the reservation and opening up farms.

"Very respectfully,

"THOS. H. SAVAGE,
"United States Indian Agent."

In this connection, however, I would call your attention to a resolution submitted by Senator PLATT on January 30, 1895, Miscellaneous Document No. 30, Fifty-third Congress, third session, as follows:

"Whereas complaint is made of the result of the carrying out by the Secretary of the Interior of the act of Congress entitled 'An act for the relief of the Stockbridge and Munsee Indians in the State of Wisconsin,' approved March 3, 1893: Therefore

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby instructed to report to the Senate of the United States the names of all persons enrolled by him in pursuance of said act, and his reason therefor; all allotments made by him and their extent, and all patents issued, if any, giving names and dates and amounts of land, and a full account of all his actions and proceedings under said act since the 3d day of March, 1893; and that all further proceedings under said act be suspended until said report is made and until further action of Congress."

I also inclose herewith copy of a communication of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, of this date, upon this subject.

This Department has no objection to the provision in the bill as it passed the House of Representatives, but is inclined to the opinion that such legislation would be of benefit to the Indians, provided the work of making allotments to them is to be continued and completed as contemplated by the act of March 3, 1893.

Very respectfully,

HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

HON. WILLIAM F. VILAS,
United States Senate.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to have printed also the petition of the Indians. It is very short.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

The petition referred to is as follows:

To the honorable Senate of the United States:

We, the undersigned, members of the Stockbridge and Munsee tribe of Indians, do hereby petition your honorable body, that the issuing of patents as provided by an act of Congress, dated March 3, 1893, be suspended until further investigation can be had, for the following reasons, etc.: That a large number of persons have been enrolled under said act of March 3, 1893, who are not properly or legally entitled to said enrollment; further, if said enrollment is continued a large portion of our lands will fall into the hands of persons who are neither of Stockbridge nor Munsee descent. And your petitioners would ever pray.

JAMESON QUINNEY, Chairman,
BENJAMIN YACCAM, Secretary,
And others.

JANUARY 2, A. D. 1895.

Mr. VILAS. I suppose the order will be, then, that the amendment of the committee is disagreed to, and the amendment proposed by me is agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. MORGAN obtained the floor.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Alabama to yield to me. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has an amendment which he desires to offer at this time.

Mr. PLATT. I have an amendment which I should like to propose.

Mr. MORGAN. I rose to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognized the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk, but before it is read I desire to make some observations upon it.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator withhold his amendment for a moment? It is going to give rise to a good deal of discussion, and I wish he would allow one or two little amendments which will occasion no discussion to be incorporated in the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. If it is understood that, after these formal matters have been disposed of, I can have the floor, I shall have no objection to that course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Alabama after the other amendments have been disposed of.

Mr. PLATT. I desire, on page 72, after line 15, to have inserted the amendment which I send to the desk. I will say in regard to it that it has received the approval of the Committee on Indian Affairs, but was reported to the Senate too late to reach the committee which had the bill in charge. It has been shown to the chairman of that committee, and I think there is no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment already adopted on page 72, line 15, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to examine the claim of the Sac and Fox Indians of Mississippi, now residing in the State of Iowa, as set forth in their memorial presented to Congress (Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 43, Fifty-third Congress, third session), for the payment of annuities and other sums from the tribal funds of said Sac and Fox Indians of Mississippi and any and all claims of that portion of the tribe residing in Iowa, and to ascertain whether, under any treaties or acts of Congress, any amount is justly due them as a portion of said tribe from those of said tribe now in Oklahoma by reason of any unequal distribution of tribal annuities, land funds, or funds from other sources, and if so, how much, giving full opportunity to all parties in interest to be heard, and to report his conclusions to Congress at the next assembling thereof.

Mr. PLATT. The claim is merely submitted to the Secretary of the Interior, and he is authorized to examine disputed claims between two different bands of the same tribe of Indians. There is nothing final about it. He is to report to Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I offer an amendment to perfect the text of the Senate amendment which has been adopted on page 60, line 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 60, after line 5, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That such judgments shall not be binding on Congress, but only advisory and of persuasive force.

Mr. CALL. That is my own amendment, Mr. President, and not an amendment of the committee.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. We have inserted at considerable length in this bill a provision authorizing certain suits to be brought in the Court of Claims, and appeals are provided for to the Supreme Court of the United States. Now the Senator from Florida moves to add an amendment that the judgment, when so rendered by those courts, shall have no force.

Mr. MANDERSON. Hardly that. I want to suggest to the Senator that the amendment, as I understood it—perhaps my ear did not catch it aright—is that the judgment is to have persuasive force. Exactly where the persuasion is to cease and the force to begin I should like to know as a matter of instruction.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I simply call the attention of the Senate to the nature of the proposition, and do not think it necessary to argue it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President—

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow the amendment to be reported again before he speaks in favor of it?

Mr. CALL. I will.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary read the amendment proposed by Mr. CALL.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the agreement with the Indians provides in absolute terms that the action of Congress shall be final upon this subject. There is a provision inserted in this bill absolutely barring those Indians if they fail to appear in that suit within sixty days, and making the judgment of the court absolutely binding upon them in the face of the treaty provision that the legislative power of Congress shall determine this question and their action shall be final upon it. I do not see that the Senator from Nebraska needs any other information than that we can not transfer the legislative power of this Government to any court, and that, in the presence of our own treaty provisions with these Indians, we have no right to transfer to a judicial tribunal the sovereign legislative duty which Congress has agreed to perform.

These Indians have been recognized as having rights. They were the original occupants. The United States has offered them 50 cents an acre for their land, which they have refused. While it may be proper to have an investigation of those cases and that the facts may be submitted to the Congress of the United States, it is not proper, in my judgment, that that action shall be final and conclusive in the face of the direct and absolute agreement of this Government that it shall not be, but that the action of Congress shall be final.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, it seems to me that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] is entirely right in principle. It may not be framed exactly as other Senators would frame it, but the obvious intent and purpose of the amendment should meet with the approval of the Senate.

Senators are aware that judgments of the Court of Claims in what are known as the Bowman Act cases are all submitted to Congress; they are not treated as having any binding force; they are only treated as having persuasive force, and the Senate accepts or rejects them at its pleasure. There is another class of claims, exceedingly meritorious, the French spoliation claims. By solemn act of Congress those claims have been sent to the Court of Claims and they have been carefully adjudicated. General opinions and specific opinions have been rendered by the Court of Claims and numerous judgments have been rendered in the French spoliation cases. The judgments of the Court of Claims in both those classes of cases, the Bowman Act or Southern claims and the French spoliation cases, mainly Northern and Eastern claims, come to Congress; the claimants knock at the door of the Appropriations Committees of the two Houses and they meet with no favorable response.

Session after session and Congress after Congress these claims—which we are bound to presume are just and honest if that presumption is to arise in the judgments to be rendered in these Indian cases—come here and are submitted to the will and the judgment, if it be a judgment, of Congress, and they are refused payment.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida means nothing more than this, that before they are paid the judgments of the Court of Claims in this case shall be submitted to Congress. I should express the proposition differently if I were to draw it; so would the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. COCKRELL]; so would the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]; but, after all, is not this the only safe thing to do with this proposed extraordinary lawsuit?

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CHANDLER. Always, Mr. President.

Mr. FAULKNER. I would ask the Senator from New Hampshire, as no appropriation is made for any judgment that would be rendered, would not the matter ultimately have to come to Congress for determination?

Mr. CHANDLER. That question does not do justice to the usual discrimination and intelligence of the Senator from West Virginia. If he had studied this bill with the care he gives to matters connected with the District of Columbia or the Territories of the United States, he would have seen that the proceeds of those lands when they are sold come into the Treasury, that this judgment is to be paid from those proceeds, and there is no need of a new appropriation of public money by Congress. If I am wrong in that respect, the Senator from Florida will correct me; and, if I am not wrong, then the Senator from West Virginia was mal à propos in his interrogatory.

Mr. President, here is a most extraordinary statement; here is an arbitrary sum of $1.25 an acre written in this bill as the amount of money which the United States is to pay the Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians for those lands. Now, I ask who fixed that $1.25 an acre? Was it fixed by any agreement? No. There have been various negotiations made with the tribe, but no sum has been agreed upon. Was it fixed by the Secretary of the Interior? Not by the Secretary of the Interior. Was it fixed by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs? Not at all. How this sum of $1.25 an acre came to be inserted in this bill in the House of Representatives, and why it is approved by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs and the Senate Committee on Appropriations, either or both of them, we have absolutely no knowledge whatever; but here it is; somebody has named $1.25 an acre for the lands, estimated to be $700,000.

Do we give it to the Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians? By no means. We promise it to them; but instead of giving it to them, we put it in the Treasury of the United States, and then we set the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians to fighting for it. We say to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, "Make a claim to these lands," which we have acknowledged practically belong to the Wichita tribe, and we send these Indians, the Wichitas and Choctaws and Chickasaws, who are supposed to be at peace with themselves up to this time, into the Court of Claims to fight over the proceeds of those lands. We invite that lawsuit; we create that lawsuit by an act of Congress, and the $1.25 an acre, which is to make this large sum of money, fixed by no competent authority, fixed upon no considerations which are submitted to the Senate, is to be fought for in a grand lawsuit in the Court of Claims between the Choctaws and the Chickasaws on one side and the Wichitas and affiliated bands of Indians on the other.

Mr. President, there is neither sense nor reason in the construction of a piece of machinery of this kind and putting it into an appropriation bill which is to be passed upon during the last ten days of the session of Congress.

But if this provision is here, if it is to be adopted by Congress, and this lawsuit is to go forward to judgment, then I say by all means let the judgment when it is rendered be brought into Congress and be considered by Congress before it becomes effective, and let it not be given any more force and effect than we give today to the judgments for millions of dollars for Bowman Act claims and to judgments for millions of dollars in the French spoliation claims.

I suggest to the Senator from Florida to modify his amendment, and, instead of using the rhetorical expression which has occasioned some criticism of Senators, to use some language to indicate that the judgment when it shall be rendered is to be submitted to Congress for its consideration. In that form I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. CALL. I have not the slightest objection to amending the language of the amendment in any respect Senators may desire or think proper, but Congress has the final right, as well as power, to settle this matter by its action. The amendment, however, I think, is worded quite as accurately as it can be. A judgment is either of binding force or it is persuasive, one of the two. No judgment of any court can open the Treasury of the United States. If we were to pass, as the Senator from Nebraska seems to think we can do, an act requiring that payment should be made of whatever decree or judgment the Supreme Court shall render without an appropriation to be made from the Treasury of the United States, it would not be according to our laws and according to the division of power contained in the organic law. Therefore, I insist that this amendment is in exactly correct terms. It should be of persuasive force, and advisory, as every decision of a competent tribunal should be.

When by solemn treaty the Congress of the United States has guaranteed to these Indians that Congress shall adjudicate, settle, and determine their right, for an amendment to be brought here referring this whole question to the decision of a court and barring these ignorant Indians, who are relying upon the faith of Congress, if in sixty days they shall fail to comply with the provisions of that act, I insist that it is a violation of the treaty obligation we have assumed and an act of great injustice to those Indians; and that, while we may refer this question for the purpose of ascertaining the facts in regard to it, we have no right, in the face of our positive obligations to the contrary, to avoid the duty we have assumed on the part of Congress to inform itself finally and act upon this subject, and transfer it to another and a different department of the Government.

I am indifferent as to the fate of this amendment. I can see in it the opportunity to defraud these Indians; I can see in it an opportunity for advantages to be taken of them, and therefore I insist that these ignorant people should not be bound by the processes of judicial procedure of which they have no knowledge.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, the facts in the case are simple and plain. The United States has agreed to open certain lands in the Indian Territory to which the Wichitas lay claim. The Choctaws and Chickasaws also prefer a claim to those lands. We provide by this bill that the settlers going upon the land shall pay a dollar and a quarter an acre beyond the ordinary office fees for the land; that this money shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States; that the claimants to those lands shall go into court and present their claims, to be determined by the court, and that whatever judgment is rendered by the Court of Claims may be appealed by either party who is dissatisfied to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Questions have been frequently referred to the Court of Claims under the Bowman Act for examination of the facts and a report made to Congress, but there never was an appeal allowed from an ascertainment of facts; but when a judgment is provided for, and an appeal permitted to the Supreme Court of the United States, it seems to me to be the veriest folly to talk about such a judgment not having the force and effect of a judgment when rendered by that high tribunal.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas overlooks the exact language of the agreement and of the statute he proposes to enact. Here is article 5 of the agreement, on page 52, and I call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], who is familiar with these matters, to this language, where, in addition to the allotments which are provided for—

It is further agreed that the question as to what sum of money, if any, shall be paid to said Indians for such surplus lands shall be submitted to the Congress of the United States, the decision of Congress thereon to be final and binding upon said Indians.

Then, on page 54, this bill says:

That the said Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians be allowed as compensation for the cession of the lands described in article 1 of the foregoing agreement the sum of $1.25 cents per acre for so much of said land as will not be required for allotment to the Indians.

Mr. President, so far there is a perfect compliance with the contract with the Indians, that the Congress of the United States shall decide what the Indians shall have, that that decision shall be final and binding upon the Indians, and there is the decision of Congress that they shall have $1.25 per acre for their land. Then what follows? After thus keeping faith with the Indians the bill proceeds to break faith with them by the use of the following provision:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be paid except as hereinafter provided.

Then the bill goes on to determine, not that this $1.25 an acre shall go to these Indians by the judgment of Congress, but that the Choctaws and the Chickasaws shall be invited to make claims to the land and to the proceeds of the land; and, so far as Congress can see, every dollar of the $1.25 an acre which has thus been solemnly adjudicated as belonging to the Wichitas may be taken away from them by a judgment of the Court of Claims. And when the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] insists that a judgment which shall do that thing shall first be submitted to Congress for its consideration the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] says the case is so plain that there need be no discussion of the subject. I say it is not plain, unless it is plain that the plighted faith to the Wichita Indians in these contracts is being broken by the Congress of the United States by this agreement, and, instead of Congress deciding what money the Indians shall have and giving it to them, Congress goes through the form of deciding what they shall have, and gives it to them with one hand and takes it away with the other, by providing that they shall only have the money provided it is left to the adjudication by the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court of the United States of this lawsuit, which no one seems to know anything about.

Nobody has undertaken to tell us what the rights of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations are, but they are invited to make a plunge into a lawsuit upon this sum of money solemnly guaranteed to the Wichita Indians.

I say, without fear of successful contradiction, that this bill, instead of being a bill which complies with either the letter or the spirit of the contract with these Indians, is a direct and positive breach of the good faith of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

The amendment was rejected.

RECONSIDERATION OF CONFERENCE REPORTS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, yesterday two conference reports were concurred in which were submitted to the Senate, one by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] and one by myself; one being on the bill for the relief of Evalyn N. Van Vliet, and the other granting a pension to Annie M. Greene. It has been discovered that the wording of the reports was defective. I now move to reconsider the votes whereby the two conference reports were adopted, and ask permission to submit other reports in their stead.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the votes by which the conference reports referred to were concurred in by the Senate will be reconsidered. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EVALYN N. VAN VLIET.

Mr. GALLINGER. I now submit the conference reports in those two cases, which I ask may be read and acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first conference report submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 684) for the relief of Evalyn N. Van Vliet, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment and agree to an amendment, as follows:

Strike out the word "thirty," in line 4, and insert the word "twenty-five" in lieu thereof; and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN M. PALMER,
J. H. GALLINGER,
J. R. HAWLEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

A. N. MARTIN,
GEO. B. FIELDER,
G. D. MEIKLEJOHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

ANNIE M. GREENE.

Mr. GALLINGER. I now ask that the other conference report may be read and acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 305) granting a pension to Annie M. Greene, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment and agree to an amendment, as follows:

Strike out the word "twelve" and insert "ten" in lieu thereof in line 7; and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN M. PALMER,
J. H. GALLINGER,
W. A. FEFFER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

A. N. MARTIN,
M. J. McETTRICK,
L. D. APSLEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the report.

The report was concurred in.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GORMAN. I submit the report of the conferees upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. 8988) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

Mr. CHANDLER. Unless it is the intention of the Senator from Maryland to ask for action on the report at this time, to which I shall certainly object, I simply ask that it may be printed in the RECORD and go over until to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. A conference report is a privileged question to the extent of submitting it to the Senate and having it read.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the report will be read.

Mr. GORMAN. Let it be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report, and was interrupted by—

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand from the Senator from Maryland that the report is a long one and that it is his purpose to have it printed so that Senators may examine it. He does not expect any action to-day. Therefore I withdraw my request to have it read.

Mr. GORMAN. Several Senators desire to look at the report. It is an important bill. I have no objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island. I submitted the report this afternoon merely that it might be printed in the RECORD and also in document form; and I shall call it up to-morrow morning.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland now, in order that the Senate may understand it, what became of the amendments in regard to the waterworks, the dam across the Potomac at Great Falls, and also the proposition as to the schools.

Mr. GORMAN. In respect to the dam at the Great Falls, I will state that the bill as it came from the other House proposed to appropriate $125,000 for raising the dam at the Great Falls. The Senate struck out that appropriation, but we have now concurred in the bill as it came from the House in that respect, with an addition that the dam, together with the balance of the improvements as to the water supply, shall be under the proper officer, leaving General Casey as consulting engineer. The appropriation of $125,000 to raise the dam remains, as do practically all the other provisions, with some changes in the provision which the Senate passed in relation to the abandoned tunnel.

Mr. HARRIS. May I ask the Senator if the raising of the dam is made to depend upon any investigation or action of Colonel Elliot and General Casey?

Mr. GORMAN. No; the appropriation is made directly for it, and it is to be consummated without any further examination so far as the dam is concerned. But in relation to the abandoned tunnel between Georgetown and the reservoir at the Soldiers' Home, that examination is to be made, and we have provided also, by enlarging the provision, that in the event the Commissioners determine that the tunnel can not be utilized, they are to report a feasible plan for an additional pipe from Georgetown to the city of Washington.

Mr. HARRIS. I think that action eminently proper and wise.

Mr. GORMAN. I shall be glad to have consent that the conference report be printed, and I will explain it more in detail to-morrow when I call it up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8988) "making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 9, 10, 11, 16, 20, 22, 25, 28, 30, 39, 47, 51, 55, 59, 60, 61, 71, 79, 80, 81, 86, 92, 101, 102, 103, 107, 108, 125, 134, 135, and 138.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, 12, 13, 14, 15, 18, 19, 21, 37, 38, 43, 44, 45, 48, 52, 57, 59, 63, 64, 66, 67, 68, 69, 73, 82, 83, 84, 85, 93, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 105, 106, 109, 110, 112, 117, 118, 120, 124, 126, 127, 129, and 133, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$49,533;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$67,332;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "that," in line 1 of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the word "hereafter;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$12,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the words "10,000, or so much thereof" and insert in lieu thereof the words "so much;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$14,000;" and in line 14, page 10 of the bill, strike out the word "Ninth" and insert the word "Tenth;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$142,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 32: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$11,300;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$53,900;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 34: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$18,460;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$36,980;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$31,240;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$10,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 3 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out "thirty-seven thousand three hundred and eighty-two" and insert in lieu thereof "thirty thousand;" and in lines 4 and 5 strike out "sixty-four thousand three hundred and eighty-two" and insert in lieu thereof "fifty-seven thousand;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out "seventy-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$9,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$6,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 50: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$6,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$35,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in the amended paragraph insert "$146,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$19,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 65: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For raising the height of the dam at Great Falls, together with the cost of such other work as may be found necessary in connection therewith, including the cost of strengthening the conduit, and for damages on account of flooding of land and other damages, $125,000, for which amount and purposes the available balance of the appropriation for increasing the water supply of the city of Washington shall be applicable, subject to all the provisions and restrictions of the act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes, approved July 15, 1882, and of the act approved July 5, 1884, making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, as to apportionment and settlement between the United States and the District of Columbia, and the refunding thereof. And in the execution of this work Gen. Thomas L. Casey shall be associated with the proper officer in charge of the Washington Aqueduct as consulting engineer.

"For testing the tunnel conduit to determine the amount of its leakage, $25,000, to be taken from the appropriation for increasing the water supply of Washington, D. C., to be immediately available.

"There shall be prepared, upon careful investigation by the proper officer of the Government having the charge of the Washington Aqueduct and the water supply to the city of Washington, a full and detailed report, which shall be submitted to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1895, upon the feasibility and propriety of completing the tunnel conduit as now projected; the completion of the new reservoir, including its dam or any modifications to the same deemed necessary; and upon the results as to the supply of water to the city when said dam, the raising of the dam at the Great Falls, the conduit, and reservoir are completed. And if such officer and consulting engineer shall conclude that it is impracticable, or too expensive, to repair such tunnel conduit, then they shall report some plan for bringing increased water supply from the reservoir in Georgetown to Washington by pipes or otherwise.

"Each separate item of the report shall be accompanied by a detailed estimate of the cost of the work required and the necessary costs, not to exceed $10,000, connected with the inquiry and reports, shall be defrayed from the appropriation for increasing the water supply of Washington, D. C.: Provided, That in the preparation of this report Gen. Thomas L. Casey, United States Army, shall be associated with the proper officer of the Government in charge of the Aqueduct as consulting engineer, and his signature shall be appended to said report in said capacity, and said report shall also be accompanied with the judgment of the Chief of Engineers, and made to the Secretary of War, who shall transmit the same to Congress with his views thereon."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 70: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 70, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$9,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 72: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 72, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$4,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 73: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$12,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$12,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 75: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 75, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$9,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 76: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 76, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$12,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 77: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For one new four-room building, Sixth Division A, Conduit road, $3,000: Provided, That this sum shall not be available until a suitable site for said building shall have been donated therefor;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 85: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 85, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$480;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 87: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$480;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 89: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 89, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$480;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 90: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert the following: "Five hundred and twenty-eight thousand seven hundred dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 94: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 94, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in the amended paragraph insert "$24,545;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 104: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 104, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$11,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 106: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$7,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 111: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 8, page 29 of the bill, after the word "may," insert the words "on and after the passage of this act;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 113: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 113, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "shall," insert the words "in the discretion of the Commissioners;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 119: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 119, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 121: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 121, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 50 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "Columbia," insert the following: "two copies each to the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 122: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 122, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 123: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 123, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$40,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 130: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 130, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$8,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 131: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 131, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$16,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 132: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 132, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$51,025;" and the Senate agree to the same.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8479) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President—

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator from Colorado will allow me for just one instant, I will state that there is an amendment, more formal than otherwise, which I think can be disposed of in one second, that I should like to suggest. I have a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, inclosing one from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who suggests that in the appropriation for collecting and transportation of pupils to and from Indian schools, on page 81, at the end of line 4, the following words be inserted:

Of which amount the sum of $8,000 shall be immediately available.

I presume there will be no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 4, page 81, insert:

Of which amount the sum of $8,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I desire to call up the amendment which was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, appropriating $10,000 for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the bill removing the Ute Indians, which was signed by the President Saturday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Amend by inserting as follows:

To pay the necessary expenses of securing the consent to the removal by the Southern Ute Indians and the necessary expenses of removing said Indians, in accordance with the provisions of the law recently passed for their removal, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At what point in the bill is the amendment to be inserted?

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is to come in at the end of the bill, I take it.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado how the consent of the Indians is secured.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will state that it is the custom of the Department to send somebody out to properly take a poll of the Indians for that purpose, which has to be appropriated for. It is the most unimportant item.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that the amendment be inserted on page 47, right after the San Carlos amendment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of line 10 on page 10.

Mr. MORGAN. I think under an agreement with the Senate I have the right to the floor on the amendment I offered. I yielded to certain matters which would not lead to debate. If the amendment the Senator from South Dakota proposes to offer will lead to debate—

Mr. KYLE. I will allow the Senator from Alabama to take the floor provided he will yield to me for a moment for the consideration of the amendment I desire to offer.

Mr. MORGAN. How much time will it take?

Mr. KYLE. It will take only a few moments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair had recognized the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. MORGAN. I had a right to the floor under the agreement with the Senate, and I yielded for the purpose of perfecting the bill. I yielded to such matters as would not provoke debate for the purpose of having the bill perfected.

Mr. PETTIGREW. What is the amendment?

Mr. MORGAN. It is an amendment I desire to discuss. I offered my amendment before anybody did, and I am here representing a committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the Chair found other Senators occupying the floor, and when they had concluded the Chair recognized the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE]. If the Senator from Alabama was entitled to the floor the Chair did not know it.

Mr. MORGAN. I am clearly entitled to the floor under the consent of the Senate, and I yielded it with that understanding.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. MORGAN. How long will it take?

Mr. KYLE. It will take but fifteen or twenty minutes, I think.

Mr. MORGAN. I am willing to yield fifteen minutes if I can give the bill any progress by doing it.

Mr. KYLE. I will yield to the Senator from Alabama, on condition that I shall have the floor when the consideration of his amendment is concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is unable to make any bargain with the Senator from South Dakota. If the Senator from South Dakota yields the floor the Chair will recognize the Senator from Alabama. The Chair understands the Senator from South Dakota to yield, and the Chair recognizes the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BERRY. I should like to have the amendment of the Senator from Alabama read. If it is the same as the bill which the Senator offered, I do not ask to have it read.

Mr. MORGAN. It is the same with one or two verbal amendments, but nothing to change the character of the bill.

Mr. BERRY. Very well; I do not ask to have it read.

Mr. MILLS. I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the Committee on Indian Affairs directed me to bring in the amendment, which has been reported in two forms. It was reported as an amendment to the pending bill, and also as an independent measure now on the Calendar. The committee have examined it very carefully and very closely and under the pressure of a great necessity to provide for the preservation of life and property and liberty among the Five Civilized Tribes. What might very well be termed a vendetta has been going on in those tribes for months and years, and it has been aggravated very much in recent times. The committee have felt that it was necessary to invite the attention of the Senate to the matter for the purpose of executing the laws of the United States for the safety of the people who are in the Five Civilized Tribes. More than 120,000 people are there exposed to every imaginable danger of lawlessness without the protection of the law in any particular.

The attention of the Congress of the United States was very sharply drawn to this subject at its last session, and a commission was organized for the purpose of making an investigation of the actual condition of the people of the Five Civilized Tribes, or the Indian Territory I will call it, for that is the legal name of it. The President was authorized to appoint a commission of eminent men to go into that Territory to examine and report upon the actual condition of affairs there.

Those Senators who feel an interest in this measure and would like to know what its provisions are can ascertain by getting the bill which was reported back from the Committee on Indian Affairs and is now pending upon the Calendar. The amendment I offer is with very few changes, and slight ones indeed, a copy of that bill. I will state further in respect to the body of the amendment that I am not the author of it. It was copied really in the Interior Department, and is recommended by that Department, out of two statutes which are now upon the book. One is a part of the statute organizing the Territory of Oklahoma, and the other is the statute passed the year before creating a district court of the United States in the Indian Territory. The language of the amendment in all of its important provisions is therefore such as has been agreed to in both of those statutes, and I suppose there will be no occasion for any criticism upon the language of the amendment or the arrangement of the different sections or the different subjects to which it applies.

All the provisions of the amendment are contained in the law as it now stands except that we create two judges instead of one; three judicial districts instead of one, and we also create clerks for the different courts, assign the places where the courts are to be held, create attorneys and marshals for the different courts, three attorneys and three marshals, the deputies and clerks for the different courts, and deputy clerks for the places at which the clerks do not reside but where courts are held. The main purpose of the amendment is to confer upon the courts of the United States in that Territory plenary jurisdiction over criminal and civil matters, and to abolish the distinction that now exists in regard to persons who may become litigants before the courts either as parties plaintiff or parties defendant.

The object of the amendment is gradually to get rid of the Indian courts in those six or seven tribes. The Indians at what is called the Quapaw Agency, a half dozen or more little bands of Indians or fragments of Indian tribes, have no laws at all. They have no legislature, they have no judges, they have no sheriffs or constables. They are simply a law unto themselves. Being a very good and quiet people, the necessity has not arisen in that part of the country perhaps as it has in others for enforcing the laws of the United States through the agency of district courts. Nevertheless, they are included in the amendment. They were included in the Indian Territory when it was set apart at the time Oklahoma was created into a Territory, and they were also included in the jurisdictional limits of the judge of the district court of the United States which we established in the Indian Territory with circumscribed powers.

It would be impossible for any one within due limits to undertake to make in detail a statement or to draw an apt portrayal of the actual condition of affairs in that country. A man can scarcely speak of the matter at all, in terms of the most exact truth, without exposing himself to the criticism of being a romancer and overstating the actual condition of terror that reigns in that country.

We all know in this body, and we are glad to remember, too, the ability of Mr. Dawes, the Senator from Massachusetts who was recently here, whose place is now occupied by another gentleman, and who declined a reelection. Mr. Dawes was for many years the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs in this body. He was also a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and had charge of the appropriation bills for the benefit of the Indians. I do not suppose that in American history a man could be found whose devotion to those people has been so conspicuous, so just, so gentle, so kindly, and so enlightened as that of Mr. Dawes. We know that he would make no representation to the Senate or to the Government of the United States that in the slightest degree was not true.

He went down with the other commissioners, Mr. Kidd and Mr. McKennon, under the orders of the Secretary of the Interior or the President, and he returned and made a report to the Secretary of the Interior, from which I will read a short extract, a sort of summing up of a part of the situation in that part of the country to which this bill now particularly applies. Speaking, first, of the demand of the Cherokees particularly, and other tribes also, for the removal of a very large class of white persons from that country called intruders, he says:

The impossibility of enforcing these executory provisions has arisen from a neglect on both sides to enforce them. This neglect is largely the result of outside considerations for which neither is responsible and of the influence of forces which neither can control. These executory conditions are not only impossible of execution, but have ceased to be applicable or desirable. It has been demonstrated that isolation is an impossibility, and that, if possible, it could never result in the elevation or civilization of the Indians. It has been made clear that under its operations, imperfectly as it has been carried out, its effect has been to retard rather than to promote civilization, to impair rather than strengthen the observance of law and order and regard for human life and human rights or the protection or promotion of a virtuous life. To such a degree has this sad deterioration become evident that to-day a most deplorable and dangerous condition of affairs exists in the Territory, causing widespread alarm and demanding most serious consideration.

All the functions of the so-called governments of these Five Tribes have become powerless to protect the life or property rights of the citizen.

That is a broad remark. He says:

All the functions of the so-called governments of these Five Tribes have become powerless to protect the life or property rights of the citizen. The courts of justice have become helpless and paralyzed. Violence, robbery, and murder are almost of daily occurrence, and no effective measures of restraint or punishment are put forth to suppress crime. Railroad trains are stopped and their passengers robbed within a few miles of populous towns and the plunder carried off with impunity in the very presence of those in authority. A reign of terror exists, and barbarous outrages, almost impossible of belief, are enacted, and the perpetrators hardly find it necessary to shun daily intercourse with their victims. We are now informed that, within the territory of one of these tribes, there were 53 murders during the month of September and the first twenty-four days of October last and not a single person brought to trial.

In every respect the present condition of affairs demonstrates that the permission to govern themselves, under the Constitution of the United States, which was originally embraced in the treaty, has proved a failure. So, likewise, has the provision that requires the United States to exclude white citizens from the Territory. The course of procedure by the governments of the Five Tribes has largely contributed to this result, and they are quite as much responsible as the United States for the fact that there are 250,000 white people residing in the Territory. These citizens of the United States have been induced to go there in various ways and by various methods by the Indian governments themselves. These governments consented to the construction of a number of railways through the Territory, and thereby consented that they bring into the Territory all that is necessary in the building and operation of such railroads—the necessary depots, stations, and the inevitable towns which their traffic was sure to build up, and the large building which white men alone could develop and which these railroads were sure to stimulate and make profitable.

Besides these, they have, by their laws, invited men from the border States to become their employees in the Territory, receiving into their treasuries a monthly tax for the privilege of such employment. They have also provided by law for the intermarriage of white persons with their citizens and adopted them into their tribes. By operation of these laws large numbers of white people have become adopted citizens, participating in the benefits of citizenship. A single instance of such marriage has enabled one white man under the laws to appropriate to his exclusive use 50,000 acres of valuable land. They have, by their legislation, induced citizens of the United States to come in from all sides and under leases and other agreements with private citizens, sanctioned by their own laws, farmed out to them large ranges of their domain, as well as inexhaustible coal deposits within their respective borders, and other material interests which civilized white men alone could turn to profit. In some sections of the Territory the production of cotton has proved so feasible and profitable that white men have been permitted to come in by thousands and cultivate it and build trading marts and populous towns for the successful operation of this branch of trade alone.

I need not pursue that very valuable statement or report any further for the purpose of getting before the mind of the Senate a condition of affairs there which, according to the description of this eminent man, is paralleled nowhere else in the world except in Turkish Armenia. There is not another place that any man can name now in the civilized world where there is such utter disregard of human life, such destruction of all human rights, such contempt for government and for law as there is amongst the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. President, I have had the honor of being on this floor for eighteen years, and during almost the entire time I have been upon the Committee on Indian Affairs. I made various visits, at great personal trouble, to those tribes, in company with Mr. Dawes, the former chairman of that committee. So far as I am concerned, so far as every member of that committee is concerned, and particularly in respect to the chairman and his able management of Indian affairs, nothing has been omitted that justice and mercy could indicate for the purpose of trying to get those people into a condition where they would let each other alone, where their savage instinct for blood would be quelled in the midst of our happy and pleasant civilization.

My remarks are not true in regard to the people who occupy the Indian Territory at large. These 250,000 people—he has the numbers a little wrong but I will put them before the Senate in correct form presently—this very large mass of people there comprise one Indian and two white men. The Indians in the entire Indian Territory form about one-third of the population. What laws have they there? In the Cherokee Nation they have a written constitution. They have an organized government, very well organized indeed, with all the paraphernalia of a State government. They have a legislature consisting of two bodies. They meet together at stated times. They pass laws. They are approved by their chief or governor. They are signed and promulgated.

In the Choctaw and Chickasaw countries, treating those tribes as being a unit, as they really are, except in their separate legislative capacity, they also have a written constitution and they have all the formalities of civil government. They have courts and judges, sheriffs and constables, justices of the peace, and many of the institutions of the higher civilization.

Now, go to the Creeks. They have a few statements or propositions which they call a constitution. Some of their laws are printed and some are not. Some of their laws are mere tribal enactments, which are promulgated in the way the Creek tribe formerly promulgated them, by sending out magistrates through the different towns to communicate to the people in common councils what the law was, as the ruler, the king, and his council had determined at the center of government.

The Seminoles have no written laws. Their laws are merely tribal traditions. They are very severe in their character, very few, very simple; but they are binding upon the people to the last degree of obedience. The penalties for their disobedience are extremely severe.

I have mentioned that the various fragmentary tribes in the Quapaw Agency have no laws at all and no legislature. They have simply a common council, where they meet together and adjust by a process of arbitration amongst themselves matters relating to contracts and debts, and also in respect to crimes. They have not any written laws. They have no code that any man could prove in a court except perhaps it might be the law of descent. In that respect they hold on to the old Indian law, which carries the line of descent through the female branch of the family, from the mother instead of the father.

Now, that is the situation in respect to the law. We can understand very well that in a population of, say, 250,000 people, two-thirds of whom are white men, with the women and children, such a system of jurisprudence as that, even administered in good faith and by competent men, would be a failure necessarily. It gives license to crime. It gives immunity to all manner of trespass. There is indeed nothing connected with the administration of justice in that country which meets the demands of our civilization.

So plainly is this a fact, that we have devised two courts, one in Arkansas and one in Texas, for the purpose of trying the Indian who commits a crime against a white man or the white man who commits a crime against an Indian, or in reference to him or his property. We take them out from the jurisdiction of the Indian Territory entirely and carry them to Arkansas and Texas for trial.

Mr. VEST. And to Kansas.

Mr. MORGAN. And also to Kansas.

Now, what was the reason that forced the Government of the United States to take these people from the interior of that Territory and carry them sometimes a distance of 200 miles with their witnesses, or the witnesses against them, at public expense for the purpose of trying a certain class of crimes punishable by hard labor or by death? What was the occasion for it? Well, there were some reasons for that course which may have been in existence at the time we resorted to it and may have been somewhat persuasive if not substantial for a course of that kind. But at the time that system was adopted very few white men comparatively were in the Territory, and it was a matter of impossibility, as was then supposed, to get good, honest, and fair juries for the trial of men for their lives and upon penitentiary accusations.

So we went off to the neighboring States, to Kansas, to Texas, to Arkansas, and attached the Indian Territory in certain boundaries which were marked to these various outside courts in order that offenders against the laws of the United States might be taken to these places and tried before juries of the different States assembled in the district courts of the United States.

Mr. Dawes in the report refers to a process which has been going on for several years amongst all those Indian tribes by which the white population has been continually invited into the Indian country in great numbers, particularly the farming population. There is another population that has gone in there, traders and speculators, and still another, criminals against public justice in all parts of the United States, who have made a rendezvous of the Indian Territory because the extradition laws that obtain there, if there are any at all, are entirely ineffectual. But the main body of the population that has been drawn into the Indian country amongst the white classes has been assembled there by the employment on the part of the Indians of those persons to go upon their places as farmers, upon some contract or understanding with the possessors of the farms, the Indian government charging to the Indian landlord a license tax (I believe $10 a year is the tax usually imposed there) for the privilege of hiring a white man to come into the Territory and work upon his farm.

In this way there has been, of course, a very large importation of white men into that country and for very good reasons. They were not intruders; they were not refugees from justice. They were men who went there under a lawful contract which the Government of the United States recognized through its agents as being a proper contract. When they got there with their families they settled down upon the different holdings where the Indians were residing, and after they had been there for a year and made some little improvement, putting up a cabin, or opening a truck patch, or something of that kind, planting a little orchard, perhaps, they wanted to stay another and another, and they have become fixtures in that country. They are really permanent occupants of that country. When the Indians come to us with complaints about intruders, they do not include that class of people. They include only the men who go there otherwise than under engagements of employment from them or engagements with the railroad companies or the companies that are there cutting timber or mining coal.

Thus, Mr. President, the Indian policy of playing landlord instead of going upon his farm and working it has really drawn into that country a mass of white people who are absolutely uncontrollable. Who would think of undertaking to go into the Indian Territory with an army or with policemen or marshals and expel all of those white men from that country? You can not conceive of such a thing being possible. As fast as you get them beyond the border—there being no law against their going into the Territory—they flock back again. The fact is that it is a moral and physical impossibility to free that country of the presence of the white people. We can not select between those who are intruders and those who are not, and at the bidding of the Indians say, I will pick this man to stay and that man to go. The Indian government or the Indian people can not make a selection of that kind. That they must all go or they must all stay is the result of the situation.

Under such circumstances how is justice to be administered among the men who are innocently, legally, and properly in the Indian Territory? What instrumentalities of government and what right, too, have our people, under the Constitution of the United States, in that country? They have not gone there to expose themselves to Indian judges, for we have never permitted the Indian courts to take any jurisdiction or cognizance of them. They went there for the purpose of serving their own interests under contracts and agreements with the Indians, which were considered to be entirely legitimate, to which neither the Indians nor the Government ever objected.

If we should consider only the necessities of the better part of the white people who are in that Territory we would not hesitate, of course, finding them in any part of the United States, and saying that the Constitution and the laws of the United States should attend them in this Territory, for it is a Territory of the United States, and that we should there exercise our right and our duty as prescribed in the Constitution of the country to make all laws necessary for the disposal and government and control of the territory of the United States. That does not mean territory the title of which is in the Government of the United States by any means. It means territory that is included within our political boundaries. It means that portion of the domain of the United States over which the Constitution prevails.

It makes no difference what may be the nature of the title of the Indian to his land, no man in this country can have such a title to a tract of land, no corporation, no body of citizenship, no tribe of Indians can have such a title to a tract of land as to oust the eminent domain of the United States even in respect of the actual allodium, the actual title. I need not remind Senators that that has been decided in the Supreme Court of the United States in the railroad cases, where the Indians made the question and brought it to the Supreme Court of the United States whether Congress had the right to grant the right of condemnation to any more than the two roads that were to cross each other in the Cherokee country, as prescribed in the treaty of 1866. That question came up and was settled.

So, as to the very inherent right of the Government itself in the land, it has been decided that we possess it as a sovereignty. We can go and condemn the Indian lands to public uses of the United States just as well as my land in Alabama can be condemned to the public uses of that State. Their property, I care not how sacred we may call the title, is subjected to all the public control that mine is.

Yet I am a citizen of a sovereign State of this country, and these men are mere occupants of territory.

Now, we have a still further control over every body of men who are assembled in the United States within our limits, whether upon our lands or upon the lands of somebody else, whether upon the lands of the Government or lands in private ownership, whether in a city, a county, or a State, more particularly where there is no intervention of State sovereignty to prohibit or to restrain our powers. When we find a set of men or a community in a territory in the occupancy of a region of country which we have deeded to them, it makes no difference how solemn and sacred may be the character of the deed, our political power over that community remains in the Government of the United States.

The Supreme Court of the United States also decided upon that in the Georgia case. They said that these are not sovereignties at all; they are mere dependent tribal governments, and that the laws of the United States enacted in pursuance of the Constitution that do not disturb some actually vested right prevail to the exclusion of all other laws that may oppose them. That is a very important point. It shows that the right of civil government in the hands of the Government of the United States extends through all of its borders, and that it can be interrupted only to the extent of some personal vested right in some individual or by some constitutional provision that restrains the operation and powers of the Federal Government within the States.

The provision empowering the Congress of the United States to regulate the disposal of the Territories of the United States has reference not merely to the public lands contained within the territorial limits, but also all matters relating to human government. It covers the whole subject. That has been frequently decided. In fact, we scarcely pass a law in regard to any Indian tribe at all that does not include that provision. We hold tribes to their reservations where we make grants of land to them, from which they may take estates in severalty, leaving another part as communal land. We say to these people, "You shall not sell your land; you shall not mortgage it for twenty years." We say to them, "You shall keep upon the reservation; you shall not go abroad from that reservation without a license from some officer of the Government, the agent, or someone else; you shall not buy any intoxicating drinks; no man shall go among you to trade with you, to traffic with you about the earnings of your labor, unless he has a license from the Government of the United States. And yet you will own the land. You are locked up upon the lands that you own by the powers of the Government of the United States; and you are required to remain there because there is no right that stands against the power of the Government of the United States to require you to do that thing."

So when government was given to the Congress of the United States by these provisions of the Constitution it means plenary government. It does not mean government with the consent of the Indians; it does not mean a power that the Congress of the United States can abdicate at its pleasure. It does not mean a power that the Congress of the United States can transfer into an Indian legislature. It means power to be exercised here, absolutely and completely exercised in this Chamber and in the other House, and through the assistance of the President.

Mr. President, I grant you that we have a great many provisions upon our statute book which have resulted from the necessities of the situation, in which we have not come down to the exercise of our actual power, but have made agreements with these Indian tribes, beginning with the first treaty that was made in New England and coming down to the present time, suited to the circumstances and conditions that were then present, never, however, yielding the sovereign power of the white people of this country into the hands of the Indian.

The sovereignty which was established over this country by the men who first planted their feet upon the shores of Massachusetts was a sovereignty which has ripened from time to time into such higher degrees of authority as it was able to take to itself; and it has never been upset; it has never been admitted away; it has never been surrendered, and can not be surrendered under the Constitution of the United States, because Congress can not abdicate its power to govern, according to the full measure of its jurisdiction, all people in the United States, wherever the Constitution extends, who are subject to the authority of this Government.

We commenced making treaties with them; colonial establishments in the United States, using the name of the British Crown, made treaties with them. But even those treaties were not with sovereign, separate, and independent powers; they were not made by the Parliament of Great Britain; they were made by the colonies. I do not know of any British colony in the world which has a right to make a treaty with a sovereign power, nor do I remember in the history of Great Britain and of her colonies any instance of that kind. Perhaps there may be some here who are wiser than I am in history—and there are many, I know—who can cite me to an instance in which this has been done.

The colonies of Great Britain in the United States, the fourteen original colonies as they were, including Canada, made their own treaties with the respective Indian tribes, and sometimes there was serious complaint by one colony that a treaty had been made by another to its disadvantage; but enough appears in the history of this country to show that these treaties were not made with independent and sovereign powers, but that they were made in the nature of contracts or agreements for the purpose of tiding over and getting rid of circumstances which surrounded the people at the time and which made these agreements necessary.

Look back over your own book of treaties with the Indians. You have two volumes of them here, a large number of treaties made with a great number of different tribes and on different occasions. Although they were formerly brought before the Senate of the United States for ratification by a vote of two-thirds, they are not treaties which are promulgated by an exchange of ratifications. The terms of all these Indian treaties were and are that they shall take effect when they were ratified by a vote of the Senate, which, under our Constitution, means a two-thirds vote, but with no exchange of ratifications, no formalities.

I refer to this, Mr. President, for the purpose of showing the wisdom of that very provident act—I think it was of 1867, if I have the date right; we all remember the act, whether I quote it correctly by date or not—in which the Congress of the United States determined by an act of law that there should hereafter be no more treaties made with Indian tribes. That merely took jurisdiction away from the Senate of the United States to ratify and confirm one of these Indian agreements; that was all. We took it away from the Senate and transferred it into the hands of Congress, and that is the whole effect of it. We have gone on and made a great many agreements since that time, and perhaps more than before, but they come here to this body and find their way into bills, such as we have here to-day, which ratify and confirm these agreements. There is one of them ratified in this very bill we are now discussing, not by a vote of the Senate under the treaty-making power, but by the legislative power.

Now, we ask ourselves the question, so far as we are concerned, have those treaties which have been heretofore ratified been a part of the supreme law of the land in the same sense that a treaty ratified between the United States and Great Britain or France is a part of the supreme law of the land after ratifications have been exchanged and the treaty promulgated? Surely not. They stand upon an entirely different basis. When Congress passed the act it did not take away from the Senate of the United States a part of its constitutional power to ratify a treaty; it merely determined that these agreements, reaching back to the first one which was made in that form, depended for their sanction solely upon acts of Congress, and not upon acts of the Executive making a treaty through his agents with the Indian tribes.

We must stand in this generation of men and justify our conduct upon the Constitution of the United States, and whenever it is necessary for the preservation of life, liberty, and law that we should act in respect to these various Indian agreements, even in contravention of the guardianship which we have assumed over the Indians, the responsibilities which attend it and the benign spirit of justice and mercy which has always followed it, stand here and justify us in taking ground, all the ground that is necessary, for the purpose of preserving the lives of these people in the Indian country.

We have the power, and we can not abdicate it; we can not throw it away; there is no authority to do it. We must exercise it, or else we must take the responsibility and the blame of allowing crime to go unpunished, because we want to pay some unnecessary deference to a condition of law, as it is called, in those countries which estops and forbids us from doing justice to our own people, to our own civilization, and to our own country.

I maintain that there is no such impediment at all. All the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States which define in any respect whatsoever the nature of the government of an Indian tribe show that they never had the capacity to make a treaty with us; that they never were possessed of any sovereign or independent status that we should even recognize without destroying our own authority as a people, without permitting them to set up an imperium in imperio, where they would be absolutely independent of us.

That is exactly the pretense which is being encouraged here day by day by our weak course in dealing with these subjects. I call it "a weak course," because it is a course which pays deference to a sentiment and an opinion, instead of to truth, to justice, to right, and to correct dealing. We yield to sentiment merely, when we ought to exercise in all justice and in all mercy and with all proper strength the strong right arm of the law.

I have not by any means exhausted the subject, Mr. President. I have merely touched upon the margin, but I have gone over this to show that in the event some one should find, or think that he could find, any treaties which we have formulated and signed with the Five Tribes and with this fragmentary Quapaw Agency or bunch of Indians—I will call them that, for that is the only way to describe them—if he thinks that he can find some engagement of ours which shuts us out from the exercise of our sovereign powers as a Government in that Territory, I think when he comes to consider the nature of the engagements thus made and the tribes with which they were made, he will realize two propositions. The first is settled by the Supreme Court of the United States, that we can repeal any treaty by an act of Congress as to every purpose of it and every effect of it which does not confer a vested right, which is protected by other provisions of the Constitution; and the next would be that these engagements with the Indians are not in themselves anything more than temporary agreements for the purpose of providing as well as we could for them and ourselves, dealing with a people who were savages, progressing into civilization, but who, at the time we were dealing with them did not have a proper conception of what was their duty to the civilization of this age and to the great Government under which we live.

We have a character of court there which we have established by law, which I will merely advert to. Senators will all remember about those courts. They are called Indian courts. They exist in almost every tribe in the United States. An agent appointed by the Government of the United States will assemble to his assistance two or three chiefs or headmen in a particular agency where he may be, and they will sit in judgment in their own way and pass sentences, to be approved only by the agent, not reaching to life, not reaching to capital punishment, but they pass sentences upon Indians for a great many minor offenses, the definition of which is taken from the Indian traditions and Indian laws. We take their laws and their traditions in these little piepoudre courts, and we administer them through an agent, associating with him two or three Indians, whom he himself selects. They execute these laws among the Indians. They might be called the first outbudding of justice; and yet to the extent of the penalties they impose upon the Indians, it is just as much and effectually a law as if it was enacted by the Congress of the United States or through the power of any State government. That is one class of Indian courts we have in that country, which exist almost everywhere.

That is not the class of courts which exists among the Five Civilized Tribes. That class of courts does exist amongst the Indians of the Quapaw Agency, and there are quite a considerable number of Indians there, some eight or nine tribes. They are the richest Indians in the world. They have more property per capita, I suppose, than any people in the world. I think that as an entire community they may be considered as the wealthiest people in the world; and yet they have not a law, no legislature, no judges, or anything of the kind. They associate sometimes with the agent and sometimes by themselves in the trial of questions of right and agreement between two members of their own tribe. When they come to administer the law we pay respect to it; we do not interfere with it; they enforce it, and therefore they enforce it under our authority. That system prevails now in that part of this country to which I propose to bring the laws of the United States and the judges of the United States.

Then we will go—and I have remarked before that I shall not go over that ground in detail—to the lowest grade of Indians, the Seminoles, who have no written law. They have a code of laws, but it is not written, unless, perhaps, a few items of it may be written down for the purpose of more convenient promulgation. They have, for all, some very enlightened men in the Seminole country; they are rather a strong body of Indians, a very intelligent people, too, and very warlike in their disposition.

We then go to the Creeks, who have a little higher range of information, not civilization. They have the laws which I have described, a few written statutes, a few written original or elementary propositions, and they have their judges and their courts.

We then go to the Chickasaws and Choctaws, and we find a still better development, and perhaps in the Cherokee country yet a better development than there is among the Chickasaws and Choctaws by their system of tribal government, and particularly in the judicial department. They have been in operation, through the aid of the white people, protected by the Government of the United States, not interfered with by the intruders, as they are called, since 1836 or 1837, down to the present time; and, instead of having built up permanently and established a government there that is capable of taking care of human life and property, they are degenerating from time to time, from day to day, a degeneracy not caused by the evil influence of white men upon them, but it is because they have found that a great many of them can live by speculation, by land grabbing, by their wits, by playing landlord and having white men hired to work for them, and they can go off on the tippie, and indulge in gambling, and in all those sports of which the Indian is so fond. They are being demoralized by their very opportunities and their wealth, until we have had to take hold of them, as I observed before, by creating tribunals entirely outside of the country to deal with them in their crimes committed against white people or crimes committed by white people against them.

After emigrating from Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, Georgia, and Tennessee to the country west of the Mississippi River, these Five Tribes, of which I am speaking now particularly, established the governments about which I have been talking. When the civil war came on they participated in that civil war, taking sides in it as they chose, according to their convictions. The nations were divided against themselves upon that question, and no one of the nations went wholly or bodily either in favor of the Confederate or the Union cause.

After that war was over there came a reconstruction amongst them. That reconstruction involved two questions. The first was what the Indians would be willing to do, what they would agree to do in respect of the renewal of their loyalty to the Government of the United States, and the second was, what they would do with the colored population amongst them, whom they had largely and chiefly owned as slaves, for the Creeks, the Cherokees, the Choctaws, the Chickasaws, and the Seminoles were all slave-owning tribes. They did not have any compunction at all about the putting of the negro into bondage. The negro question was treated in these various treaties separately; that is to say, it was put into such shape as suited the Government of the United States, and the Indians were willing to agree to it, in respect of their becoming citizens of the tribe of which they had formerly been slaves, and also in respect of their political rights and place in the different Territories and the different tribal lands which they might occupy. Negroes abounded in the Creek country more than they did in any other in proportion to the number of the population. In the treaty of 1866 between the Creek Indians and the Government of the United States is article 10, which provides:

The Creeks agree to such legislation as Congress and the President of the United States may deem necessary for the better administration of justice and the protection of the rights of person and property within the Indian Territory: Provided, however, (That) said legislation shall not in any manner interfere with or annul their present tribal organizations, rights, laws, privileges, and customs. The Creeks also agree that a general council, consisting of delegates elected by each nation or tribe lawfully resident within the Indian Territory, may be annually convened in said Territory, which council shall be organized in such manner and possess such powers as are hereinafter described.

I have read the latter part of that tenth article for the purpose of calling the attention of the Senate to a common consent among all of these Five Tribes to a Territorial government. The general council which is spoken of here had never existed, had never even been in contemplation, so far as we have any historical information on the subject, prior to the time of the making of these treaties. They were all made in and about the same time, the same year, and perhaps in almost the same month.

Mr. GRAY. What is their consent with reference to the administration of justice there?

Mr. MORGAN. This is the provision:

The Creeks agree to such legislation as Congress and the President of the United States may deem necessary for the better administration of justice and the protection of the rights of person and property within the Indian Territory.

That covers, of course, the whole case. We put in a proviso, to which I will call attention in a moment. I wish, however, before I reach that proviso as to the proper construction of article 10, to call attention to the fact that in the reconstruction of these Indian tribes—for that is exactly what it was; it was as much a reconstruction among them as it was amongst the Southern States which had seceded from the Union—those conditions were imposed by the Government of the United States equally upon all of the Five Tribes. They all consented to them.

A general council was to be called, to which each tribe should select its proper delegates to go there and make laws for the whole of the Five Tribes. They agreed to that and the Government of the United States was to pay the expenses of the delegates, who were to get $4 a day. They were to be elected and sent there, and on one or two occasions they were elected and they were sent there, but the work was disagreeable to them. It wounded their tribal pride, and they abandoned it, and they said, for a pretext, that the Government of the United States had not made the appropriations for carrying the law into effect, when the fact was that they were to go there, transact their business, and do their work, and the Government of the United States was to provide the funds necessary to carry it out. There may have been something a little slack in our administration of this law, and I am very sorry for it, because these Indians, instead of getting closer together and drawing more nearly to the bonds of statehood, have dissevered from each other, and have become now really belligerent tribes as against each other.

Recognizing that fact—and I want to call the attention of the Senate to it—when we came to pass the Indian court bill, which is now upon our statute books, we provided in the jurisdiction of that court that the Indian of one tribe might sue the Indian of another tribe in that court. What does that mean? It does not mean that we had surrendered the jurisdiction of determining suits between Indians—not by any means. In the very act from which this bill in large part is copied we affirm the principle that we had the right to authorize an Indian of one tribe to sue an Indian of another tribe in that court. Therefore it can not be said that, upon that interpretation of it, we have yielded up in these treaties, or elsewhere, the right to try an Indian for an offense committed upon an Indian, or a white man either, or the right to entertain a suit on the part of an Indian against an Indian of another tribe.

I now come to that proviso, and I will consider that as presenting the strongest feature of the case against my argument. I will read it:

Provided, however, That said legislation shall not in any manner interfere with or annul their present tribal organizations, rights, laws, privileges, and customs.

Then it goes on to provide as to this general council. Now, admitting the full efficacy of that treaty engagement with a foreign power and irrevocable—put it in the strongest form you can—and then see how much of a barrier it is to our legislating for these Creek Indians.

That said legislation shall not in any manner interfere with or annul their present tribal organizations—

The bill does not propose to do that—rights—

No rights are taken away.

laws—

No laws are interfered with.

privileges—

No privileges are broken down.

customs.

No custom is disregarded; but entirely consistent with all of these the judicial arm of the nation is extended there, and it may be that the judges in controversies between these Indians will feel themselves bound in the administration of the law between them as to disputed matters of right or criminality to regard their customs and privileges as they have existed there as controlling in the administration of justice precisely as the piepoudre Indian courts, to which I have referred, recognized the customs of the Indians in administering penalties. All over that country, in every reservation, and amongst every tribe everywhere that is the principle that is recognized, and in the jurisprudence of the United States which touches upon the Indian is not absent anywhere; his rights, his duties, his privileges, and customs are all regarded by the courts, unless we take occasion to repeal or change these rights, privileges, and traditional usages.

Mr. President, that is all that bars us out from the Creek country. Does any Senator here find, when a murder is committed in that country or any other form of outrages or abuse of law and justice is committed there, that the Government of the United States has no right to enter, with its Constitution there already, with its laws enacted under the Constitution, and with its judicial system—because we can appoint as many inferior judges as we choose—and take up the subject of the redress of those wrongs and the punishment of the culprits and the protection of society in consequence of it? How can such a provision as that in a treaty, admitting that it was made by lawful authority and approaches the dignity of a vested right, shut out the Congress of the United States from going there and taking hold of this subject and regulating it? I can not see.

Now, in regard to the Choctaws and Chickasaws, there is a stronger provision in their favor. But it does not shut us out. Article 7 of the treaty made the same year provides:

The Choctaws and Chickasaws agree to such legislation as Congress and the President of the United States may deem necessary for the better administration of justice and the protection of the rights of person and property within the Indian Territory: Provided, however, Such legislation shall not in anywise interfere with or annul their present tribal organization, or their respective legislatures or judiciaries, or the rights, laws, privileges, or customs of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations respectively.

If we should construe that article into an absolute bar against our going with our judicial system amongst the Choctaws and Chickasaws, whose people are very anxious that we shall go, the question will arise, Shall we in consequence of that proviso as a qualification of the positive engagement we have made, find ourselves disarmed of the power, constitutional and otherwise, to go there and exercise the functions of a Government which administers justice according to law? We can not abdicate the right to do it. The ratification of that treaty, which was by the Senate of the United States, never gave to it such an effect of law as to give to those people a vested political right of that sort. What is it but a political right? Nothing. Unless they were politically in a condition to receive that right as a sovereign power and to hold us to the engagement, they have nothing more in the world upon us than a moral claim, which I am entirely free and have been for years to indulge, admit, and execute. When I find that those courts are totally inefficient, that their judges are corrupt, that their powers are not respected, that murder and rapine sit at the very doors of the courts of justice in that country, I do not feel that I am under any constitutional or treaty obligation to forbear the powers that are possessed by the Congress of the United States to redress those grievances of the people, and to protect them in their lives, their property, and their liberty.

But I contend that that is not at all a proper construction of the article. Even giving to the words the broadest possible force of which they are capable, for there is no community in the United States not protected by the sanction of a written, permanent constitution of the sovereign character that belongs to the States of the American Union, there is and there can be no institution of government or people or tribal organization here which can stand against the necessities of civilization and justice in this country. We can not possibly admit in this country that any body of men can stay outside of all government except their own tribal organization, with no representation anywhere and no communication with anybody. We can not admit now that they can do that or that we can encourage and sustain them in it, unless we are prepared to give up the whole subject of government into their hands.

I wish to read two or three extracts from the Creek laws to show the animus of those people and to describe to the Senate what they think of the powers they possess and the manner in which they want to use them in opposition and hostility to the Government of the United States. Here is the act approved August, 1872:

That no citizen of this nation shall exercise the power of petitioning any foreign power upon any question, when such petition shall be in its nature subversive of the laws and constitution of this nation; and any citizen who shall be found guilty of violating the above law shall receive fifty lashes upon the bare back.

No Indian in that country is allowed to come here with a petition or a suggestion that he does not get justice, nor is it allowed that any foreign power—they class us as a foreign power—shall be invited or petitioned to do anything at all for the relief of a person in that country. Here is another provision of the act approved August, 1872:

That no citizen of this nation shall exercise the right of attending any meeting or council called by an alien or aliens, when such meeting is intended to produce lawlessness, or is subversive of the constitution and laws of this nation; and any citizen found guilty of violating the above law shall receive fifty lashes.

The law goes on with various other provisions of that kind. The Cherokees had a provision in their law that no man should be permitted to ship timber out of the Cherokee Nation. I know a man who had, perhaps, eight or ten thousand dollars, a large amount of money, involved in the logging business out there. He went around among the occupants of the land and bought logs from them, walnut and cherry, etc., and shipped them down the Arkansas River. The officials seized the logs and confiscated them and put the money into the treasury or their pockets, whichever they pleased. Then they tried him and punished him heavily, all because he was carrying his logs outside of the Cherokee country into a foreign land—down to Fort Smith in Arkansas—for sale. There are cases of that kind.

Now I will read an extract from the latest census report of the United States. I read it to show something of the manner in which justice is administered out there by some of the courts, and there are a great many instances of that kind. We have evidence of a number of instances in which justice has been administered in this way. I will pick out one. There are a number of instances.

Albert Rennie, United States commissioner, of this city, who, for a time, was stationed at Wewoka, the capital of the Seminole nation, relates an inhuman and barbarous incident connected with an execution at Wewoka. It is the custom to execute those convicted of a capital crime by shooting. The executioners were two members of the national light horse, detailed for the purpose. In the instance referred to the victim was led to the rock upon which these judicial killings take place.

The two light horsemen, executioners, were too drunk to hit a barn, and their shots wounded the human target. They left the ground at once, and the negro brought the rough box coffin to the side of the wounded man, who protested against the proceedings as vigorously as his strength would permit. Assisted by two other negroes the body was put in the box and an effort made to nail the lid, but the victim pushed and kicked it so that the task was only accomplished by two of the men sitting on the lid while the other drove the nails with the utmost nonchalance. The interment was then made.

There is a Senator on this floor who has a photograph, taken by one of those story-telling kodaks, of a man who was shot in the same way. He was condemned to death, and the sheriff gave the job of shooting that man to his worst mortal enemy. He took his gun and deliberately shot the condemned man on the wrong side of his body. Instead of shooting him through the heart, he shot him on the other side, so as to wound him. When the poor creature had been shot, though not yet dead, they laid him upon the ground, sat upon his chest, put their fingers around his throat, and choked him to death. There is the kodak picture telling the story. A Senator on this floor has it. That might do as an example of the barbarous manner in which they execute the decrees of what they call their courts. Any man is convicted against whom the judge and his friends combine, and any man is acquitted who will put up money enough to make his escape or who has power enough in the community to threaten these men with being waylaid and shot.

There is not only no justice in that country, but there is scarcely amockery or pretense of justice. I have papers lying before me now which, if it is requisite, I will read to show that at the time when we commenced distributing the money amongst the Cherokee Indians, for instance, for the land strip we bought of them, the most horrible and brutal robberies and murders were carried on throughout the Territory. There was scarcely a single store in the Cherokee Nation which was not robbed. A great many of the very best citizens in the country were met upon the highway and robbed. On the day of the distribution of the money, at a place within 3 miles of the telegraph and the capital of the Cherokee Nation, an Indian came riding down the road. He found a couple of commercial drummers in a wagon of some kind. He shot one and arrested them both, and robbed them. Going on down the road he found a very respectable young man with his mother in a wagon. His mother was a woman very much beloved in the country. In his effort to shoot the young man the Indian killed the old lady in the wagon. The young man took up his gun, and killed the Indian and his horse.

Such things go on there in the presence of the courts and judges, who have not the will or the power, either, to administer justice. Such a mockery of justice exposes human life to greater danger than if there were no courts in the Territory. Then men would not rely upon the courts. They would rely upon the power of self-defense, and these murderers and marauders who go about there and attack everybody, day and night, railroad trains and everything else, might become afraid to do such things in the event that they knew men would go armed for them and would not rely upon the courts for their protection.

In an effort to relieve this situation we established two courts, one at Fort Smith and the other at Paris, and also a court of limited jurisdiction in the Territory. Whoever speaks of those courts, and the testimony abounds in every investigation ever made in that country, says it is an enormous cruelty upon the people. The marshals go out with their deputies, having a hundred deputies at their command to send to different parts of the country. They will pick up this man or that man or the other man to take down to court. There may be a large number of witnesses to go. The marshal makes a slow and circuitous movement through the country with his caravan, picking up prisoners and witnesses, camping at that place and the other, and after a while he wheels into Fort Smith with a brigade of people following him. When he comes to make up his accounts he has so much for catching a man, so much for the night's entertainment in camp, so much travel per mile. He makes his money by thus going around among the people and collecting prisoners and witnesses and carrying them to court from various distances, anywhere from 10 to 200 miles. I am informed that one of them sent a bill for his personal fees in a single year which amounted to $25,000.

The expenses of the courts down there have simply been enormous. There is no occasion for carrying those people outside of the Indian Territory to get juries no better than they can find inside and judges who are no better. There is no reason for removing justice from the door of the culprit because you want to take him into a strange land and punish him. If justice is worth anything it is because it seats itself where it is within easy reach of the appeal of the innocent and where the guilty will feel that there is present in the community a power and an instrumentality that is not to be set aside.

Justice does not protect people by running off from them a hundred or two hundred miles to hold its court in some other country or some other place. The United States Government can not protect the people in that kind of a way, no matter what the expense may be or even what the economy might be, if there were any economy about it. It would be a failure of justice, because the influence and effect of justice is not felt among the people. Under such circumstances the whole advantage of our judicial system is lost.

I obtained from the Department of Justice a statement of the expenses of those two courts. The expense of the district court in western Arkansas for the fiscal year 1894 was $189,870.14, in the Indian Territory $186,008.66, in eastern Texas $195,558.40, making $571,437.20. That amount is bestowed upon the trial of a comparatively small number of cases. The convictions in one court were 80, in another perhaps a little over a hundred, but all together the convictions, most of them, I think, for retailing whisky and offenses of that kind, would not amount perhaps to more than three or four hundred out of a population which Mr. Dawes states is 250,000. The census returns show differently. I will put before the Senate the correct statement from the census of 1890. It shows that the total population of all races in the Five Civilized Tribes was 178,097. I am reminded by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Jones] that the number has increased considerably since that time. Another gentleman informs me that it has almost doubled. So perhaps Mr. Dawes's figures giving them a population of 250,000 are correct.

Now, I wish to call attention to another matter. In the Cherokee country there were in 1890 56,309 people, but the per cent of Indians was 39.10. In the Seminole country there were 2,739, and the per cent of Indians was 64.29. But in the computation of the Indians they do not confine themselves to full bloods. They take all who belong to the tribe, all the citizens of the tribe, and there are a great many white men who are counted Indians because they are citizens of the tribe. But taking it upon the figures of the census of 1890 the majority of white people in that country over Indians was 69,704. For the sake of taking care of 39 per cent of the population of the Cherokees, 9 per cent of the population of the Chickasaws, and 25 per cent of the population of the Choctaws, shall we go to all that expense and have this elaborate system of judicial procedure by which men are taken up and carried out of the Territory for trial?

There is not a paper, I think, in the whole Five Civilized Tribes, and there are a great many newspapers there, which does not advocate the abandonment of those outside courts and the creation of the court that is proposed in the amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs which I have had the honor to present and to try to defend. I do not know that I could justify myself in detaining the Senate by a more protracted statement of the necessities of this legislation than that which I have made. There is one point, however, in regard to the Cherokee country and its condition to which I wish to call attention.

The Cherokee Indians have presented the strongest objections that have been made here upon the question of the obligation we are under to protect them in their treaty rights. I wish now to show another engagement which we made with those people and the engagement which they insist is stronger than the one we made with the Chickasaws and Choctaws. It is really not so strong in its language, and taken with its surrounding circumstances it is not so strong in its import. What does it mean? I invite the attention of Senators, who have any doubt or difficulty at all about this case, to article 26.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to suggest, in relation to the amendment which he proposes to the appropriation bill and to which he invites the attention of the members of the Senate, whether there should not be some member of the majority of the Committee on Appropriations on the floor to be convinced by the Senator that the amendment ought to go on the bill?

Mr. MORGAN. I presume they are entirely convinced anyway.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understood the amendment has not yet received the approbation of the Committee on Appropriations, and it seems to me they ought to hear the remarks of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. It has not received the disapprobation of that committee by any means.

I wish to read article 26. I shall be very glad if Senators will give me their attention for just a moment.

The United States guarantee to the people of the Cherokee Nation the quiet and peaceable possession of their country and protection against domestic feuds and insurrections, and against hostilities of other tribes.

If there is any one guarantee needed in that country at this time it is for the protection of one Indian against another, for the Territory is in a condition of feud, and vendetta prevails there. There have been a great number of Indians killed there recently in personal feuds among themselves. I am not exaggerating when I say hundreds of Indians have been killed there recently in feuds among themselves without any apparent responsibility to the law or any dread of it at all. They have no respect for their own courts, and up to this time we have not given any court of the United States power to interfere where one Indian attacks another. But there is our promise to them in the treaty that we will protect them against feud.

What is a feud? Not a political turmoil. It is a personal controversy; it is that which breeds vendetta—private malice and private anger, sometimes running into families and getting up combinations of that kind, one family against another. But the prevalence of this lawlessness and destruction of human life is so great we can well call it a feud, and many, yes, a great number, of those people, are looking to-day with extreme anxiety for the people of the United States to come there and suppress those feuds and establish laws in that land.

Now, having stated these points, I will ask the Secretary to read the amendment, in order that the Senate may get in its possession the precise programme that is presented. Then I may submit a few remarks upon the provisions of the amendment.

THE VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama will be read.

THE SECRETARY. Insert the following:

That the territory known as the Indian Territory, now within the jurisdiction of the United States court in said Territory, is hereby divided into three judicial districts, to be known as the northern, central, and southern districts.

The northern district shall consist of all the Creek country, all of the Seminole country, all of the Cherokee country, of the country occupied by the Indian tribes in the Quapaw Indian Agency, and the town site of the Miami Townsite Company, and the places of holding courts in said district shall be at Miami, Vinita, Claremore, Tahlequah, Muskogee, and Okmulgee.

The central district shall consist of all the Choctaw country, and the places of holding courts in said district shall be at South McAlester, Atoka, Antlers, and Cameron.

The southern district shall consist of all the Chickasaw country, and the places of holding courts in said district shall be at Ardmore, Purcell, Pauls Valley, Ryan, and Chickasha.

SEC. — That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, two additional judges of the United States court in said Indian Territory, who shall hold their respective offices for the term of six years from the date of their appointment, unless sooner removed as provided by law, one of whom shall be the judge of the northern district and the other shall be the judge of the southern district, and the judge of the United States court now in office shall, from and after said appointments, be the judge of the central district, and shall hold his office for the term for which he was appointed, anything in this act to the contrary, and during the period of their service said judges shall reside in the judicial district for which they are appointed; and said judges of the northern and southern districts shall each take the oath of office required by law to be taken by the judges of the district courts of the United States. Said judges shall each be paid a salary of $5,000 per annum, the same to be paid from the Treasury of the United States in like manner as the salaries of the judges of the United States district courts. If said judges are appointed at a time when Congress is not in session, they shall hold office until the next final adjournment of Congress, unless they are confirmed by the Senate, and when so confirmed their terms of office shall then date from the date of such confirmation.

The judges shall have, within the judicial districts for which they are appointed, all such authority, both in term time and vacation, as to all matters and causes, both criminal and civil, pending or that may be brought in said districts, and shall have the same superintending control over commissioners' courts therein, and the same authority in the judicial districts, to issue writs of habeas corpus and prohibition, injunction, mandamus, certiorari, and other remedial and final process, as is by law vested in the judge of the United States court in the Indian Territory, or in the circuit and district courts of the United States; and the district courts created by the provisions of this act shall be courts of criminal and special jurisdiction conferred by act of Congress and of common law and equity jurisdiction. The judges of each of said districts are authorized and empowered to hold courts in any other district, and they are required to sit in the courts of either of said districts when it is necessary to provide for the trial of any cause or causes when the judges of such districts, or either of them, is for any reason disqualified from holding the court or from trying any cause pending therein. And in case of sickness or the inability for any cause of one of said judges at any time to perform his duties, another of said judges may perform his duties in term time or in vacation.

Until the appointment and qualification of said judges of the northern and southern districts, respectively, the judge of the United States court in the Indian Territory shall continue to perform all the duties and exercise all the authority that is now, or hereafter may be, conferred upon him as such judge, except as herein provided.

At least two terms of court shall be held each year at each place of holding court in each district, at such regular times as the judge thereof shall fix and determine.

There shall be appointed by the President an attorney and marshal for each of said districts, who shall continue in office for four years, and until their successors shall be duly appointed and qualified, and they shall discharge the like duties as other United States attorneys and marshals. Each of said marshals shall appoint one or more deputies, who shall have the same powers, perform the like duties, and be removable in like manner as other deputy United States marshals; and said marshals shall give bond with two or more sureties, to be approved by the judge of the district, in the sum of $10,000, conditioned as by law required in regard to the bonds of other United States marshals. And the attorney and the marshal in the Indian Territory shall be the attorney and marshal for said central district after this act goes into effect.

Each of the attorneys appointed in said Territory shall receive a salary of $3,000 per annum; and each of the marshals shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum; and each of his deputies, not exceeding four in number, unless a greater number be specially authorized by order of the district judge, entered of record, shall receive a salary of $1,500 per annum, and his reasonable and necessary expenses of travel and subsistence while on duty, to be approved by the judge of the district for which he is appointed: Provided, That, in case of emergency, either of said judges may authorize the appointment of as many deputy marshals as he may deem necessary for the enforcement of law and the suppression of crime, and such deputies shall receive the same pay and expenses of travel, for the time they may serve as regular deputy marshals.

SEC. — That the clerks of the courts of each of said districts shall be appointed by the judge thereof, and he shall reside and keep his office at one of the places of holding court in his district. He shall perform the same duties and be subject to the same liabilities as clerks of other like courts; and, before entering upon his duties, he shall give bond in the sum of $5,000, with two or more sureties, to be approved by the judge of the district, conditioned that he will faithfully discharge his duties as required by law. Each of said clerks shall appoint a deputy clerk for each court in his district at which he himself does not reside. Said deputy clerk shall keep his office and reside at the place appointed for holding the court for which he is appointed, and shall keep the records of said court: Provided, That the appointment of such deputy shall be approved by the judge of the district, and may be annulled by said judge for cause, which shall be stated on the records of the court, and the clerk shall be responsible for the official acts and negligence of his deputies. Each of the clerks in said Territory shall receive a salary of $2,400 per annum, and each of the deputy clerks shall receive a salary of $1,200 per annum.

SEC. — That each of said courts shall have the powers conferred by law upon United States circuit courts to appoint commissioners within the district in which he presides, who, at the time of their appointment, shall be an attorney of some court of the United States, or of some State, and shall be competent and of good standing, and shall be known as United States commissioners; but not exceeding six commissioners shall be appointed for any district hereinbefore constituted: Provided, That the present commissioners shall be included in that number and shall hold office under their existing appointments, subject to removal by the judge of the district where said commissioners reside, for causes prescribed by law. The judge of each district may fix the place where, or the time when, each commissioner shall hold his regular terms of court.

The order appointing such commissioners shall be in writing and shall be spread upon the records of one of the courts of the district for which they are appointed; and such order shall designate by notes and bounds the portion of the district for which he is appointed. They shall have all the powers of commissioners of the circuit courts of the United States. They shall be ex officio notaries public and ex officio justices of the peace within and for the portion of the district for which they are appointed, and shall have the power as such to solemnize marriages.

The provisions of chapter 45 of Mansfield's Digest of the General Laws of Arkansas, entitled "Criminal Law," except as to the crimes and misdemeanors mentioned in the proviso of this section, and chapter 46 of said laws of Arkansas, contained in said digest, entitled "Criminal Procedure," and chapter 91 of said general laws, regulating the jurisdiction and procedure before justices of the peace in civil cases, be, and they are hereby, extended to and put in force in the Indian Territory; and the jurisdiction to enforce said provisions is hereby conferred upon the United States district courts therein: Provided, That in all cases where the laws of the United States and the said criminal laws of Arkansas have provided for the punishment of the same offenses, the laws of the United States shall govern as to said offenses, except for the crime of larceny, the punishment for which shall be that prescribed by the laws of the State of Arkansas. And all laws now in force in said Indian Territory in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

The jurisdiction of such commissioners as justices of the peace in civil cases shall, in all those classes of cases where jurisdiction is by this act conferred upon the United States courts in the Indian Territory, be exclusive, where the amount or value of the demand or of the property or thing in controversy does not exceed $100.

That said commissioners, acting as justices of the peace in criminal cases, shall have jurisdiction to hold preliminary examinations, and discharge, hold to bail, or commit in cases of offenses which, under the laws applicable to the Territory, amount to felonies.

Appeals may be taken to the district courts in said Indian Territory from the final judgment of said commissioners, acting as justices of the peace, in all cases; and such appeals shall be taken in the manner that appeals may be taken from the final judgments of the justices of the peace under the provisions of said chapter 91 in civil cases, and chapter 46 in criminal cases of the laws of Arkansas: Provided, That no appeal shall be allowed in civil cases where the amount of the judgment, exclusive of costs, does not exceed $30. Each of said commissioners in said Territory shall receive a salary of $1,000 per annum, and all fees collected by him shall be paid over to the clerk of the district.

SEC. — That each of said courts may appoint a constable for each of said commissioners' districts, so designated by the court, which appointments shall be in writing and spread upon the records of one of the courts of the district, and the constable so appointed shall perform all the duties required of constables by the laws of the State of Arkansas, chapter 24 of Mansfield's Digest. Each of said constables shall receive a salary of $200 per annum. Each of said commissioners and constables shall keep a careful account of all fees, fines, and costs collected by him, and shall settle with and pay the same to the clerk of the district at the end of every quarter, who shall pay the same into the Treasury of the United States. Said commissioners and constables, before entering upon the discharge of their duties, shall execute to the United States, for the security of the public, a good and sufficient bond in the sum of $2,000, to be approved by the judge appointing him, conditioned that he will faithfully discharge the duties of his office and account for all moneys coming into his hands; and he shall take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and to faithfully perform the duties required of him, which bond and oath shall be filed with the clerk in the district for which the appointment is made.

SEC. — That jurors for each term for each of said courts in each district shall be selected and summoned in the manner provided by the statute laws of the State of Arkansas, now in force in said Territory: Provided, however, That Indian citizens, both by blood and marriage, shall be eligible to serve upon both petit and grand juries the same as the citizens of the United States.

SEC. — That all prosecutions for crimes or offenses committed in said Territory, except as herein provided, shall be had within the district in which said offense shall have been committed, and in the court nearest or most convenient to the locality where it is committed, to be determined by the judge on motion to transfer the trial of the case from one court to another. All civil suits shall be brought in the district in which the defendant or defendants reside, or may be found, but if there are two or more defendants residing in different districts the action may be brought in any district in which either of the defendants reside or may be found, and in the court nearest to his residence. All cases shall be tried in the court to which the process is returnable, unless a change of venue is allowed, in which case the court shall change the venue to the nearest place of holding court, without regard to the district in which said court is held, and any civil cause may be removed to another district for trial if the court shall so order, on the application of either party.

SEC. — That any person, whether an Indian or otherwise, who shall in said Territory manufacture, sell, give away, or in any manner or by any means furnish to any one, either for himself or another, any vinous, malt, or fermented liquors, or any other intoxicating drinks of any kind whatsoever, whether medicated or not, or who shall carry, or in any manner have carried, into said Territory any such liquors or drinks, or who shall be interested in such manufacture, sale, giving away, furnishing to anyone, or carrying into said Territory any of such liquors or drinks, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by fine not exceeding $500, and by imprisonment for not less than one month nor more than five years.

SEC. — That the United States courts in the Indian Territory herein created shall have and exercise jurisdiction as follows:

They shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of all offenses committed in said Territory. They shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all civil cases where the amount or value of the demand or property or thing in controversy exceeds the amount of $100, and appellate jurisdiction of all cases tried before said commissioners, acting as justices of the peace, where the amount of the judgment exceeds $30, and original jurisdiction of causes transferred into said courts from the Indian courts.

Any cause pending in any Indian court at the date of the approval of this act shall, on the motion of any party thereto, be transferred into the United States court of the district where the cause of action originated, or in which any defendant resides, for trial as an original cause; and, for the period of two years from the approval of this act, said Indian courts shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine all causes now pending therein that shall not be so transferred, after which date their jurisdiction shall cease, and the papers and a transcript of the record in all causes pending in said Indian courts which are not decided shall then be transferred into such United States courts for trial: Provided, That the jurisdiction of the Indian courts relating to the administration and settlement of the estates of deceased persons, and to guardians, and the accounting executors, administrators, and guardians, and their appointment and qualification or removal shall continue, except as the same shall be changed by law. Administrators and executors of decedents, and guardians and trustees, shall be held liable to suits in the United States courts upon demands, obligations, and liabilities that may exist against the estates they represent.

All laws heretofore enacted, conferring jurisdiction upon the United States courts held in Arkansas and Texas, outside of the limits of the Indian Territory, as herein defined, as to causes of action arising or offenses committed in said Indian Territory, except as herein provided, are hereby repealed, and such jurisdiction as is now conferred by law upon said courts are hereby given to the courts created by this act in said Territory: Provided, That in all criminal cases where said courts outside of the Indian Territory have, when this act takes effect, acquired jurisdiction of the persons of the defendants by arrest, they shall retain jurisdiction to try and finally dispose of such cases, and shall retain jurisdiction to try all civil cases pending therein at the date of this act; but all other criminal cases in which the offense is charged to have been committed in the Indian Territory shall be transferred to the courts herein created, together with all original papers belonging to the same, and a copy of all proceedings of record therein. All cases, civil and criminal, now pending in the United States court in the Indian Territory shall be tried and disposed of by the courts in the districts where the same are now pending, unless the venue therein be changed.

SEC. — That it shall be the duty of the marshals appointed under this act to provide, under the direction and with the approval of the judge of the district, suitable buildings and rooms for holding the district courts of their respective districts. They shall also procure suitable offices for the clerks and marshals. Any contract for these purposes shall be approved by the judge only after personal inspection of the premises leased, and any contract for a period longer than six months shall be reported to the Attorney-General for his approval. Said marshals shall also provide suitable prisons at the places of holding district courts for the confinement and safekeeping of all prisoners committed by order of said district courts and the commissioners appointed under this act, and all other prisoners in legal custody.

SEC. — That the judges of said district courts, together with the judges of the United States district court for the western district of Arkansas, shall constitute a United States circuit court of appeals, to be presided over by the judge of the United States district court for the western district of Arkansas, as chief justice of said court, and said court shall have such jurisdiction and powers in said Indian Territory, and such general superintending control over the courts thereof as is conferred upon the supreme court of Arkansas over the courts thereof by the laws of said State, as provided by chapter 40 of Mansfield's Digest of the Laws of Arkansas, and the provisions of said chapter, so far as they relate to the jurisdiction and powers of said supreme court of Arkansas as to appeals and writs of error and as to the trial and decision of causes, so far as they are applicable, shall be, and they are hereby, extended over and put in force in the Indian Territory, and appeals and writs of error from said district courts to said appellate court, in criminal cases, shall be prosecuted under the provisions of chapter 46 of said Mansfield's Digest, by this act put in force in the Indian Territory. But no one of said judges shall sit in said appellate court in the determination of any cause in which an appeal is prosecuted from the decision of any court over which he presided. In case of said presiding judge being absent, the senior judge of said district courts shall preside over said appellate court, and in such case two of said judges shall constitute a quorum.

Writs of error and appeals from the final decision of said appellate court shall be allowed, and may be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, in the same manner and under the same regulations as from the circuit courts of appeal of the United States. Said appellate court shall appoint its own clerk, who shall hold his office at the pleasure of said court, and who shall receive a salary of $1,200 per annum. Said appellate court shall be held at South McAlester, in the Choctaw Nation, and it shall hold two terms in each year, at such times and for such periods as may be fixed by the court.

SEC. — That there shall be allowed to said attorneys, marshals, and clerks of the court of appeals and district courts the same fees as are allowed to like officers in chapter 16, title judiciary, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and as are allowed in chapter 63 of the Laws of Arkansas, in all cases where such fees or taxed costs are paid by individuals or corporations, and they shall each keep careful account of all such fees collected by him, and account to the clerk of the court of appeals for all of the same in excess of their respective salaries, making settlement therefor with said clerk at the end of each quarter of the fiscal year. And the said clerk of the court of appeals shall at the end of each quarter pay the moneys or fees so received by him to the assistant treasurer of the United States in St. Louis, Mo.

SEC. — That the laws heretofore enacted by the several legislatures of the Indian tribes within the territory included in this act, so far as the same are not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, or with the laws of Congress that are specially applicable to any of said tribes of Indians, shall remain in force, except so far as the same are in conflict with the provisions of this act, and shall be recognised by the United States courts as valid enactments.

SEC. — That within thirty days after the passage of this act the President of the United States will, by his public proclamation, inform the inhabitants of the territory included in this act of its provision, and in said proclamation there shall be given a copy of the Laws of Arkansas that are hereby made applicable to said territory.

And for carrying into effect the provisions of this act, the sum of — dollars is hereby appropriated out of moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. — That none of the provisions of any other acts, or of any of the laws of the United States, or of the State of Arkansas, heretofore put in force in said Indian Territory, except so far as they come in conflict with the provisions of this act, are intended to be repealed, or in any manner affected by this act, but all such acts and laws are to remain in full force and effect in said Territory.

SEC. — That this act shall take effect from and after its passage so far as to authorize the appointment and qualification of the judges and other officers required by its several provisions, but in all other respects it shall take effect on and after ninety days from its passage.

Mr. MORGAN. If a point of order is to be made upon the amendment, of course it ought to be disposed of in limine. I wish to say that there are verbal amendments to the amendment which Senators have suggested and which I myself think ought to go into the text; and that will be the next question whenever the question of order is passed upon. I do not wish to delay the Senate. I wish to get along as fast as we can possibly do so. I do not feel that really I have as much time as I ought to have to present this question to the Senate, because I am so anxious that the pending bill shall get through as well as the other appropriation bills. Therefore I shall not detain the Senate at the present time any further upon it.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President—

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from Arkansas allow me?

Mr. BERRY. For what purpose?

Mr. CALL. I wish to ask unanimous consent that the bill shall be proceeded with under the five-minute rule, one speech to a Senator upon each amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not think that would be just to gentlemen who may wish to discuss the pending amendment.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to have an executive session this evening. There is some important business that ought to be transacted in executive session.

Mr. CALL. I hope Senators do not propose to address the Senate at length on the amendment.

Mr. MILLS. I ask the Senator from Arkansas if he will yield to me and take the floor in the morning, so that we may have an executive session now?

Mr. BERRY. I was going to state that if, as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] says, a point of order has been made against the amendment, while I am very anxious to make some remarks upon it, I am equally anxious that the appropriation bill shall be disposed of, and if the point of order is sustained I do not care to take the time of the Senate in discussing the amendment. I regret that this most important matter, one of the most important matters that can possibly affect the country, at least that section of the country, is not presented in such a way that it can be discussed in all its bearings.

On the 5th of December I introduced a bill to create a Territorial government, to provide courts, to provide for a legislature, to have a governor appointed in the Indian Territory; and that I believe is the only remedy for the existing evil. If this subject is to be legislated on now I should like to have a vote of the Senate upon the proposition as to whether it would not be better to organize a Territorial government there at once and provide for all the conditions that exist. Such a measure would go far beyond that which is proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

I do not disagree with the Senator from Alabama as to the question of power nor as to the conditions there. I think Congress has the undoubted and unquestioned power to deal with the situation there, and I believe it is the duty of Congress to deal with it in such a way that it will effectually suppress the lawlessness that exists there and insure to each Indian in that Territory his just rights within the Territory.

Among the violations of United States laws there the train robberies are not all the evil. In my opinion there are others almost as great; but the evil which I believe demands the action of Congress as much as any other is the fact that that vast territory, which belongs to the tribe for the benefit of every Indian, has been seized upon by a few individuals and converted to their own use.

The commission of which the Senator from Alabama has spoken, headed by ex-Senator Dawes, state in their report, which I hold in my hand, that in one nation 61 citizens have appropriated to their own use more than 1,000,000 acres of land, being more than one-third of all the lands which belong to the tribe, consisting of some 14,000 people. I say that is an evil which ought to be corrected; and if we had the time, and this matter came before the Senate in a regular way, I should desire to offer the bill introduced by me as a substitute for the bill proposed by the Senator from Alabama to be inserted as an amendment to the pending appropriation bill.

I repeat, the conditions which exist there are such that they ought to be dealt with in a way that will correct all the evils. But, as I have said, I do not care to go into that if the point of order is sustained. If it be overruled, then various questions will arise upon that amendment, and there are numerous amendments to the amendment which I shall desire to discuss; but until the question is settled as to whether or not we are to consider the entire subject upon this bill I shall not further detain the Senate.

Mr. MILLS. I renew the point of order I made when the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] took the floor, which is that the amendment is general legislation on an appropriation bill and is in violation of Rule XVI of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the question, Is the proposed amendment in order? [Putting the question.] The "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. MORGAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. PETTIGREW (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. ROACH (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], who is necessarily absent from the Senate. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUR].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LINDSAY. I am paired with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. If he were here, I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS. Is the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] recorded as voting?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont is not recorded.

Mr. HARRIS. I am paired with that Senator, and withhold my vote. If he were present I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Blackburn,	Frye,	Morgan,	Vest,
Blanchard,	Jones of Ark.	Platt,	Walsh,
Brice,	Kyle,	Quay,	Wolcott.

Callom,	Hill,	Pettigrew,	Wilson of Iowa.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PLATT. Can we not get through with the bill to-night?

Mr. MILLS. We must have some executive sessions. There is much important executive business to be transacted.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Texas listen to me for a moment?

Mr. MILLS. I will.

Mr. PLATT. Can we not get through with the Indian appropriation bill in a few minutes?

Mr. GEORGE. Let us get through with the bill to-night.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is compelled to state that upon the call of the yeas and nays no quorum has voted. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Dixon,	Lindsay,	Platt,
Allison,	Dubois,	Lodge,	Power,
Bate,	Faulkner,	McLaurin,	Quay,
Berry,	Frye,	McMillan,	Roach,
Blackburn,	Gallinger,	Manderson,	Squire,
Blanchard,	George,	Mantle,	Teller,
Burrows,	Gibson,	Martin,	Turpie,
Call,	Gorman,	Mills,	Vest,
Camden,	Harris,	Mitchell of Oreg.	Vilas,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Morgan,	Walsh,
Clark,	Huntou,	Pasco,	Washburn,
Cockrell,	Jones of Ark.	Peffer,	Wilson of Wash.
Coke,	Kyle,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask unanimous consent that I may withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays, and let the decision of the Chair on the question stand as the judgment of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. What is the request? We could not hear it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that he be permitted to withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays, and that the decision of the Chair on the viva voce vote of the Senate, that the amendment of the Senator from Alabama is not in order, stand as the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. MILLS. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent that further debate on this bill may be continued under the five-minute rule, and that we agree to take the final vote upon the bill to-day.

Mr. KYLE. I shall have to object to that.

Mr. CALL. Then I will say at 6 o'clock this evening.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will first submit the request of the Senator from Florida to the Senate. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President—

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senate to allow me, by unanimous consent, to say a single word.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CALL. If this bill is not finished to-day or early to-morrow the appropriation bills will not be concluded at this session. I ask that the vote may be taken at 2 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall object to the request of the Senator from Florida, in the first place, for the reason that there are a large number of amendments to this bill which I desire to offer. I have made no opposition to the consideration of the bill for the purpose of delay, but this is the most important appropriation bill which comes before Congress, so far as my people are concerned. There are nearly 30,000 Indians in my State, and there are many amendments to be still considered which interest the people of my State which can not be disposed of under the five-minute rule. Further than that—

Mr. MILLS. What has become of my motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business, Mr. President?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have made no objection to the disposition of the appropriation bills, but I understand—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair must state that debate is not in order, objection being interposed. The Chair entertains the motion of the Senator from Texas to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I hope the Senate will give unanimous consent to me to make a very brief statement of not more than a minute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. MILLS. What is the request?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That he be permitted to make a statement.

Mr. PETTIGREW. That I be permitted to finish my sentence. I shall only take a moment.

I wish to state further, it is well understood in this Chamber that at 3 o'clock to-morrow an effort is to be made to get up the railroad pooling bill and to sit it out, to hold a session to-morrow evening and on Sunday. So long as such a notion is entertained, I want to say emphatically that when the legitimate consideration of this bill is disposed of, for my part I shall proceed to interpose delay in every way possible, and I want it distinctly understood that the railroad pooling bill, if I am able to prevent it, will not become a law at this session of Congress, much less will it be considered on Sunday.

Mr. MILLS. I object to further debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection to further debate.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Texas to allow me to make a request for unanimous consent that the vote may be taken upon the pending appropriation bill to-morrow before the Senate adjourns.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Chair state the request?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent that the vote may be taken upon the pending bill to-morrow—at what hour?

Mr. CALL. I will say at 4 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. PETTIGREW and others. I object.

Mr. GORMAN. If I may be permitted, I ask that we may have a unanimous-consent agreement that the vote on the pending appropriation bill shall be taken before the Senate adjourns to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. HARRIS. Why not fix the hour at, say, 3 o'clock?

Mr. FRYE. You can not do that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not hear the Senator.

Mr. CHANDLER. To the request that the bill be finished to-morrow I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 23, 1895, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 22, 1895.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DEATH OF THE LATE MINISTER TO MEXICO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following concurrent resolution of the Senate:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the Congress of the United States learned with high gratification of the special honors paid to the memory of the deceased by the Government of Mexico upon the occasion of the death of the Hon. Isaac P. Gray, late minister of the United States near the Republic of Mexico.

Resolved. That in token of the appreciation of the same, the Secretary of State be requested to forward to the Mexican Government an enrolled copy of this resolution.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of this resolution, and move concurrence.

Mr. REED. Would it not be desirable to have this matter referred to some committee first, to see if it is in accordance with the precedents? I think it would have more weight. I merely suggest this to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BYNUM. I do not see why it should have any more weight if reported upon by a committee.

Mr. REED. I would suggest to the gentleman that the Committee on Foreign Affairs might consider it with the right to report at any time. I merely wish to see if it is in accordance with the custom in such matters.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, I would prefer to have action now. If the gentleman desires to object—

Mr. HITT. There would probably be some difficulty at this stage of the session in getting a meeting of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. DINGLEY. Let it be again reported.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana if it has been the custom, in case of the death of a minister of the United States at a foreign court, to pass such resolutions as this?

Mr. BYNUM. This is simply a resolution of thanks to the Government of Mexico for its courteous action in reference to the death of our late minister there.

Mr. DINGLEY. But has it been the custom? Has this been done before?

Mr. BYNUM. I am not able to say. This is a Senate resolution, and I presume is in the usual form.

Mr. DINGLEY. Because if it has been the custom there could be no objection.

Mr. REED. It is one of those things that ought not to be done without some consideration, although a matter of very little importance in itself.

Mr. BYNUM. I do not know whether it has been the custom or not.

Mr. DINGLEY. There is no objection, of course, unless this is the establishment of a practice with reference to the death of a foreign minister, in which event some consideration should be given to the matter.

Mr. BYNUM. I think it eminently proper that it should be done under the circumstances, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana for the present consideration of this concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered, and agreed to.

REIMBURSEMENT OF CITY OF MENASHA, WIS.

Mr. WELLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8331) to reimburse the city of Menasha, Wis., for moneys expended, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $2,745.48 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of reimbursing the city of Menasha, Wis., for moneys expended by said city in the construction of a retaining wall along the bank of the Government canal in block 44, and at the head of Main street, in said city of Menasha, the construction of which wall was made necessary through the washing away of a portion of what is known as Water street, in said city, as also the foundations of the drawbridge crossing said canal, which said washing away was caused by the passage of boats through said Government canal.

SEC. 2. That the moneys so appropriated shall be immediately available for the purpose aforesaid, and shall be paid over to said city through its proper officers immediately upon the enactment and approval of this measure.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SAYERS. Let us have some explanation of this bill. It seems to be somewhat unusual.

Mr. WELLS. Mr. Speaker, the report of the Committee on Claims is unanimous in favor of this proposition, and is very short. It covers the ground pretty well; and before asking to have the report read I will take a moment to make a brief statement.

Early in the fifties what was known as the Fox and Wisconsin improvement was inaugurated in our State. Subsequently the General Government obtained possession of the canal which had been commenced, and all the works on the Fox and Wisconsin rivers now belong to the Government. In building the canal through the city of Menasha they failed to build a retaining wall along what is known as Water street in the city. It was soon found that the operation of the canal washed this street to such an extent that it was necessary for the city to go to the expense, in order to preserve the street from total destruction, to build what is known as a retaining wall along the canal. Last fall the city of Menasha had their laborers at work on this wall, and I wired to the Secretary of War in their behalf, and borrowed stone from the Government with which to carry on the work during the fall.

The report of the committee carries with it the affidavits of the older citizens of the city of Menasha, who have been there since the creation of the village and the settlement of that country, who set forth all the facts which I have now stated, to wit, that the retaining wall is necessary to preserve the street and the drawbridge across the Government canal. The city engineer has reported that this money was expended in the construction of this wall and was absolutely necessary. There is no question as to the equity of the case.

Mr. SAYERS. Has the gentleman anything from the War Department in reference to this?

Mr. WELLS. There has been a report by the Chief of Engineers, to which reference is made by the committee. The committee, after an examination of this report and all of the facts in the case, subsequently unanimously reported this bill.

Mr. SAYERS. What is the report of the Chief of Engineers?

Mr. WELLS. Well, it is the ordinary report in such cases, showing the work done and the necessity for it. It is a short report, merely setting forth the facts, as I have done.

Mr. SAYERS. Did the Chief of Engineers state that this injury now claimed was the result of negligence on the part of engineers of the Government in not properly constructing the canal in the first instance?

Mr. WELLS. The Chief of Engineers is not in the habit of making such suggestions, as against brother officers of prior date.

Mr. SAYERS. I suppose he would state the truth, if he knew it to be the fact?

Mr. WELLS. I presume he accepted that as a fact, upon the basis of the sworn statement made by gentlemen who know all about the fact. Indeed one of them, Mr. Reed, postmaster of the city of Menasha, testifies that he helped to build the canal, and knows all the circumstances.

Mr. LOUD. This opens up too great a question, I think, for this Congress to dispose of by unanimous consent. If this bill were to pass the district of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. STOCKDALE] would have a claim on Congress in the matter of the improvement of the Mississippi River; and this is really a great question. I hope this Congress will not establish the precedent without due consideration in Committee of the Whole, after a full discussion. Upon these grounds I shall have to object.

Mr. WELLS. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. DALZELL. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I wish, if possible, to get the general deficiency bill through to-day, and I call for the regular order, so that we can be impartial to everybody.

Mr. DALZELL. I hope the gentleman will allow me to present this bill. It is a bridge bill.

Mr. SAYERS (to Mr. BRECKINRIDGE). Let them have one recognition on that side.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will withdraw the demand for the regular order long enough for one recognition on the other side.

BRIDGE OVER THE MONONGAHELA RIVER.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 8880.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read at length. It authorizes the Pittsburg, Monongahela and Wheeling Railroad Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, or its successors or assigns, to construct and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto across the Monongahela River at a point in the county of Allegheny, Pa., opposite, or as nearly opposite as may be, Monongahela City, in said State.

Mr. SAYERS. I understand the bill is in the usual form.

Mr. DALZELL. It is in the regular form.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. DALZELL. There are two amendments to the bill, one for the insertion of the word "company" after the word "railroad," and the other an amendment to the title.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 9, section 7, after the word "railroad," insert the word "company."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The committee recommended that the title of the bill be amended so as to read:

A bill (H. R. 8880) to authorize the Pittsburg, Monongahela and Wheeling Railroad Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River.

The amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DALZELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PICKLER, who is confined to his room by sickness, asks to be excused from yesterday's and to-day's session of the House. Had he been present yesterday he would have voted "aye" in favor of the Hawaiian cable.

The SPEAKER. Without objection this leave of absence will be granted.

There was no objection.

VISITORS TO MILITARY AND NAVAL ACADEMIES.

The SPEAKER announced as Visitors to the Military Academy Mr. WHEELER of Alabama, Mr. WASHINGTON, and Mr. MILLIKEN.

The SPEAKER also announced as Visitors to the Naval Academy Mr. SAYERS, Mr. TATE, and Mr. HULL.

REGISTERS AND RECEIVERS OF LAND OFFICES.

Mr. DOCKERY, from the Joint Commission to Inquire into the Status of Laws Organizing the Executive Departments, submitted a report concerning the duties of registers and receivers of land offices; which was ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.

BONDS OF OFFICERS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. DOCKERY, from the same commission, submitted a report with reference to bonds of officers of the United States; which was ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.

SOLICITOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. DOCKERY, from the same commission, also submitted a report recommending the abolition of the office of Solicitor of Internal Revenue, and for other purposes. The report was ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 5711) to authorize the adoption of children in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 5218) to amend the Articles for the Government of the Navy;

A bill (H. R. 5224) for the relief of James Stewart; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 237) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to donate to the Oregon State Soldiers' Home, at Roseburg, Oreg., certain cannon, etc.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 2377) to amend "An act to amend section 4400 of Title LII of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the regulation of steam vessels," approved August 7, 1882; and also to amend section 4414, Title LII, of the Revised Statutes, "Regulation of steam vessels," asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. RANSOM, Mr. VEST, and Mr. FRYE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 8237) for relief of William W. Buckley, late first lieutenant One hundred and ninety-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteers; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8092) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1969) granting a pension to Harrison C. Hobart, brevet brigadier-general of volunteers.

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 6323) to amend the Articles for the Government of the Navy relative to punishment on conviction by court-martial; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 4507) for the relief of Witherby & Gaffney; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution (S. R. 138) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to deliver unserviceable or condemned cannon to the mayor of Burlington, Vt., to be used in decorating Battery Park; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. 305) granting a pension to Annie M. Greene; and

A bill (S. 684) for the relief of Mrs. Evalyn N. Van Vliet.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The following reports of committees were handed in at the Clerk's desk, referred to their appropriate Calendars, and otherwise disposed of as indicated below:

TERMS OF UNITED STATES CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS AT CUMBERLAND, MD.

Mr. BOATNER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8842) to amend an act to provide for terms of the United States circuit and district courts at Cumberland, Md., approved March 21, 1892, and for other purposes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REGULATIONS FOR PREVENTING COLLISIONS AT SEA.

Mr. FITHIAN, from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2783) to postpone the enforcement of the act of August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea;" which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

YAQUINA BAY, OREGON.

Mr. HERMANN, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8938) providing for the payment of a board of engineers to consider and report on a new project for deeper water on the bar of Yaquina Bay, in Oregon; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BARK JOHAN LUDWIG.

Mr. ROBBINS, from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8922) to provide American register for the bark Johan Ludwig; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARINE HOSPITAL, SAVANNAH, GA.

Mr. MCKAIG, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8281) to establish a marine hospital at Savannah, Ga.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 3476) to provide for the examination and classification of certain mineral lands in the States of Montana and Idaho;

A bill (H. R. 6750) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Yellowstone River, in the county of Dawson, State of Montana;

A bill (H. R. 8499) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River in the county of Dakota, in the State of Nebraska, and the city of Sioux City, in the county of Woodbury, in the State of Iowa;

A bill (H. R. 5711) to authorize the adoption of children in the District of Columbia; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 277) in reference to the Free Zone along the northern frontier of Mexico and adjacent to the United States.

FRIDAY EVENING SESSION.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I wish to be recognized to make a request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded. What is the gentleman's request?

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask that that portion of the rule governing Friday night sessions limiting them to 10.30 p. m. be vacated or changed so as to extend, if necessary, until 12 o'clock to-night. Let me say in that connection that there are a large number of Senate bills that have not been acted upon. We would like very much if the House would agree that this evening we may sit, if necessary, until 12 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the rule governing the night sessions be so modified as to permit the House to remain in session, if necessary, until 12 o'clock before adjourning, in place of 10.30. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES. I object, Mr. Speaker.

REPORTS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] asks that gentlemen having reports to file may be permitted to hand them in at the Clerk's desk. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. TARSNEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8892) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill, as follows:

NAVAL ACADEMY.

To pay the accounts for heating and lighting for the fiscal year 1894, which are set forth in House Executive Document No. 255 of this session, $1,218.95.

Mr. GOLDZIER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 15, page 20, add:

"Provided, That every Representative or Delegate in Congress whose district or Territory is not now represented at the Naval Academy for any cause by a cadet shall be permitted and authorized to recommend a candidate for appointment as a cadet at the Naval Academy of the United States, said recommendation to be made on or before the 4th day of March, 1895, subject to the qualifications now prescribed by law. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to increase the number of cadets at said Naval Academy as now provided by law."

Mr. GOLDZIER. I ask for a vote.

Mr. DINGLEY. I reserve the point of order upon that.
Mr. GROSVENOR. What is the purpose of this provision?
Who offers this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GOLDZIER].

Mr. GROSVENOR. The outgoing gentlemen propose to reverse the law and make the appointments for the next two or three years.

Mr. GOLDZIER. I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The outgoing gentlemen propose to make the appointments for the next three or four years.

Mr. GOLDZIER. The outgoing gentlemen propose to have the appointments made to which they are entitled in their terms.

Mr. GROSVENOR. They have never been entitled to anything of the sort. If so, there is no necessity for this amendment.

Mr. GOLDZIER. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to cure a defect in the bill which was recently passed by the House, in which the House authorized these appointments to be made; but the Secretary of the Navy construes that law as meaning only a certain class of appointments, when the members of the House who voted for the bill were of the opinion that it included all vacancies. This amendment carries no appropriation whatsoever and does not change existing law, but simply gives additional time for the appointment that the sitting member has the right to make.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is this before the Chairman on a point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine reserves the point of order.

Mr. DINGLEY. I reserved the point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why not make the point of order?

Mr. DINGLEY. You can make the point of order now.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The existing law provides that immediately after the 4th of March the existing vacancies, or vacancies to exist, shall be noted to the then member of Congress, and thereupon, prior to the 1st day of July, he shall make a nomination.

This is a clear, distinct, and unequivocal change of existing law. It is very easy to see what the purpose is. It provides that prior to the 4th of March the outgoing Congress shall fill the vacancies for the four years to come thereafter. Now, this appointment has no operation and no effect until the annual examination on the 15th day of May or on the 15th day of September, and at that time there is in every Congressional district a member of Congress who ought to have the appointment.

I am not discussing the merits of the question. I make the point of order that it changes existing law. If it does not do so, then there will be no necessity for offering this amendment. It is enough to say that the House inadvertently passed this sort of a measure in the form of law, or a bill, which repealed the existing law and changed the statute; and it has fallen to the ground. It is now proposed, on this appropriation bill, to do in this indirect way what failed to be done in a direct way in the legislation to which I have referred.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to yield to me.

Mr. GROSVENOR. For what purpose?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I want to make a little explanation in connection with this amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very well.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. So far as I understand, this amendment would cover the case of the district which I have the honor to represent, although I did not know it was to be presented. I made a nomination last year, under the law, of a young man as a cadet at Annapolis. He failed to pass the examination. As I supposed, I had, under the law, the right to make another nomination. The Department declined to make the appointment, saying that the law or rules of the Department do not authorize it.

The effect of that ruling of the Department, or of law, is that during the six years I have been a member of this Congress, while there has been but one opportunity for the appointment of a naval cadet, I am entirely shut out. Now, I understand that the effect of this amendment will be merely to cover cases of that kind and that it will not change existing law.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If it does not change existing law, what do we want it for? This amendment, if it were adopted, would have no effect on me, so that it is not a selfish position that I am taking in this matter. There is a vacancy in the Naval Academy at this time from my Congressional district, but if I live I shall have the privilege of filling it under the existing law, and I am not ready to fill it with the precipitancy contemplated by this amendment. It is very true that a member of Congress may sometimes fail to make these appointments. I made a recommendation almost two years ago, but I have thus far failed to secure an applicant that could be admitted to the Academy; but that does not affect the question here.

When the Congressional district which I now represent was created, on the last days of February two years ago, my predecessor, or a gentleman who represented one of the counties of my present district, nominated a cadet from one of my counties to the Academy at West Point, and I therefore lost that appointment. But that was the operation of the law. I submit that there can be no question but what a provision which undertakes to give to an ex-member of Congress an appointment—because that is exactly what this does—changes the existing law. As the law now stands the nomination is to come from a man who is a member of Congress at the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit the Chair to call his attention to the fact that the amendment as offered provides that the recommendations shall be made on or before the 5th day of March?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I understand that, but the recommendation is to be made to fill a vacancy that has not occurred; it is to fill the place of a cadet who will not vacate the place at the Academy until the June examination.

Mr. GOLDZIER. That is done at the present time.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is done, but it is done by a man who is a member of Congress and who will be a member of Congress at the time of the June examination; not otherwise.

Mr. GOLDZIER. No, sir; in the case of the West Point Academy the appointments are made now and the cadets report for examination in March, after our terms here expire.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is true that the law provides that appointments to the Academy at West Point shall be further along; there is a longer interval. I admit that, but the notice is not sent out until the vacancy is about to happen. Mr. Chairman, this amendment clearly changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. For the information of the Chair, will the gentleman from Ohio state whether the recommendations or appointment of these cadets is regulated by statute or by a mere ruling of the Department.

Mr. GROSVENOR. By the statute, as I understand it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. The limitation of the time when an appointment can be made by a member is a mere ruling of the Secretary.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then, if it is made by a mere ruling of the Department, this legislation is unnecessary and ought not to be brought in here.

Mr. GOLDZIER. It is not unnecessary because it is directory.

The CHAIRMAN. The suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio goes to the merits of the question and not to the point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why, Mr. Chairman, there are scores of members of the Fifty-fourth Congress who have already held their examinations and made their preparations for the filling of these vacancies, and now it is proposed that gentlemen who have had the good fortune to have been elected to stay at home shall come in and undertake to do the work which legitimately belongs to members of the next Congress. This bill can not pass with that provision in it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question, for I do not know that I have quite "caught on" to the merits of this point of order. If I understand it, the law as it now exists without this amendment will keep the sitting member from making the nomination to the Academy for the May or June examination. Am I correct about that?

Mr. GOLDZIER. Not the law, but the construction of it that the Secretary of the Navy makes.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Let us see about that. The law is as it is construed to be by the officers charged with its execution—

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. That is not necessarily so.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Necessarily so, as I understand it, and the very object of this provision is, by legislative enactment, to change that law. The Secretary's construction of the law may not be a wise one. I can not tell whether it is or not. I do not know whether appointments will fall in or fall out by virtue of the adoption or nonadoption of the proposed amendment. But upon its very face, if it is not a change of law as it is construed to be by the officer charged with its enforcement, then there is no use for it. The case is something like that of the destruction of the library at Alexandria away back, many hundred years ago. That library was destroyed, notwithstanding its great literary and historical value, upon the theory that all that was good was contained in the Koran, and if there was anything in that library which was not in the Koran it ought to be destroyed.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order made against this proposition is that it changes existing law. The Chair has not been referred to any statute which fixes and regulates—

Mr. GROSVENOR. The Chair has not stated the entire point. I hope the Chair will not rule upon a partial presentation of the question.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the other point?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The other point is that the amendment is new legislation. The proposition is clearly obnoxious to the rule upon the one ground or the other.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Does the gentleman from Ohio know of any part of this bill that is not new legislation?

Mr. GOLDZIER. The fact that a measure is new legislation does not make it out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The understanding of the Chair (his attention not having been called directly to any statute on the subject) is that there is no statute conferring upon members of Congress the power to appoint cadets; that they merely have, under a rule of the Department, the right to make recommendations of appointments to the head of the Department, and that the time when these recommendations shall be made is fixed purely by departmental regulation.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The Chair is mistaken. I can show the statute which fixes the date.

The CHAIRMAN. The date when the recommendation shall be made?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the statute which the Chair asked for.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am informed that the statute fixes the date.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the statute which the Chair desired to examine.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The Chair ought not to rule on a question of so much importance without referring to the statute when the statute is within reach.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked the gentleman from Ohio to furnish the statute. If one exists, the Chair has no knowledge of it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I can not be making my argument and at the same time sending for the Revised Statutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will withhold his ruling on this question until he can refer to the statute which the gentleman from Ohio says he can furnish.

Mr. GROSVENOR. We had the same fight last year on a point of order with reference to this question, and the point was sustained.

Mr. BYNUM. I think I can state correctly the law and the regulations of the Department with reference to this matter. The statute gives to every Representative the right to make a recommendation to the Secretary of the Navy for the appointment of a cadet; the Secretary makes the appointment. The law directs that the Secretary of the Navy shall notify Representatives after the 5th of March, and that the Representative shall recommend for the appointment before the 1st day of July. I think the Chair will find that such is the provision in the statute. At the present time a great many vacancies exist because the candidates recommended and appointed between the 5th of March and the 1st of July last year failed to secure admission, having failed in their examinations.

The examinations were held, some in June and some in September, and as a number of the nominees failed vacancies still exist. The only question is, when a cadet fails to pass the examination has the member a right to make another appointment before the 5th of March following? The Department holds that the Representative can make only one recommendation during the year, and that between the months designated. I think the Chair will find that to be the whole point. I insist that this proposition is not a change of law. The moment a candidate fails to pass for any reason, the member ought to have the right under the law to make another recommendation. The law does not preclude him from doing so; it only gives the Secretary the paramount right to fill the vacancy. The Department, however, holds that this can not be done except at the time specified.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless there be objection, this matter will be temporarily passed over until the Chair can have opportunity to examine the statute.

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, upon the former question I cite the Chair to section 1514, Revised Statutes.

The CHAIRMAN subsequently said: The Chair is now ready to rule upon the question of order on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GOLDZIER]. The Clerk will read section 1514 of the Revised Statutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 1514. The Secretary of the Navy shall, as soon after the 5th of March in each year as possible, notify, in writing, each Member and Delegate of the House of Representatives of any vacancy that may exist in his district. The nomination of a candidate to fill said vacancy shall be made upon the recommendation of the Member or Delegate, if such recommendation is made by the 1st day of July of that year; but if it is not made by that time the Secretary of the Navy shall fill the vacancy. The candidate allowed for the District of Columbia and all the candidates appointed at large shall be selected by the President.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the point of order is well taken. The amendment proposes to change the existing law, under which the recommendation for appointment can only be made by the Representative prior to the 1st of July of any year.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 32, after line 23, insert the following:

"To pay William E. Brandt, late a qualified surgeon in the Pension Office, for expenses incurred while detailed as a special examiner of the Pension Office during the fiscal year 1890, $153."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

To pay Charles E. Monroe for professional services rendered in the chemical examination of and testing the quality of various rubber bands submitted as samples with bids to supply the Department of the Interior bureaus and offices with stationery for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1894, $125.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out that paragraph under the head of "Interior Department."

This is one of the most astonishing things I have ever heard or seen in an appropriation bill in this House. They propose here $125 to pay an expert to test rubber bands furnished to the Department. Certainly there should be some satisfactory explanation from the committee as to the qualifications necessary in this man who has this remarkable duty to perform, whether he is a Sandow, a Goliath, a David, or if he has peculiar qualifications that are not ordinarily possessed by other men which fit him for this purpose. Will the chairman of the committee explain to a waiting and anxious House and country this remarkable appropriation?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I send to the desk a statement of Mr. George W. Evans, chief of the disbursing division of the Department of the Interior, which explains this matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Explain this item in reference to George E. Munroe.

Mr. EVANS. Professor Munroe is a professor in the Columbian College of Washington, and he was called upon by the Secretary of the Interior to make a chemical examination of a large number of rubber bands submitted to the Department and upon which the Department had received bids and estimates. There were a great number of bidders and a large number of samples of bands submitted for examination. The Secretary agreed to pay Professor Munroe $125 for this service.

The CHAIRMAN. Had he no fund out of which he could pay it?

Mr. EVANS. He had. The Secretary ordered that it should be paid out of the contingent fund, but the question was submitted to the Comptroller, and the Comptroller ruled that we could not pay for such services out of the contingent fund. There being no other fund out of which it could be paid, the Comptroller said we would have to go to Congress for it.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I submit that that does not explain anything, except that they have agreed to pay so much for some kind of a service rendered. It does not show what the man did, or what he is required to do. I would ask if the committee has any evidence as to the number of days or months or hours this man has been engaged in this remarkable labor, and how much he has suffered in his physical development and energy during this phenomenal test?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. This is simply an appropriation in the interest of honest contractors against adulterated goods. It is an attempt on the part of the Secretary of the Interior to obtain knowledge, that must be that of an expert, by which he can determine whether the articles furnished are worth the amount proposed to be expended for them or not. If the House desires honest contractors and honest goods they will vote for the appropriation. If the House prefers to give dishonest contractors a chance to palm off dishonest goods upon the public, and against honesty, they will strike it out.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Can the gentleman state the value of the rubber bands reported upon?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The statement was not given. I ask a vote.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I submit that this item should be stricken out.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOWERS of California) there were—ayes 6, noes 38.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ELLIS of Oregon. I offer an amendment to this paragraph. The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 5, page 33, insert:

"In order to pay John H. Cradlebaugh, of Hood River, Oreg., for publishing in 1892, pursuant to instructions from the local land office at Vancouver, Wash., eleven notices of intention of final homestead proof to be made by Indians, $55, or so much thereof as the Secretary of the Interior may ascertain to be due and certify for payment."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The gentleman from Oregon submitted this to me, and I do not know but that it ought to be adopted. I have no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the unpublished work of the Eleventh Census shall be completed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, to whom the records and other property of the Census Office shall be transferred; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to employ, from the date specified in this act, from the force of the Census Office then employed, a chief of division, at a salary of $2,000 per annum; three special agents, and such other employees, not to exceed 50, as he may deem necessary for closing up and completing the work of the Eleventh Census, such employees to be paid according to the classification set forth in an act to provide for the taking of the Eleventh and subsequent censuses, approved March 1, 1880; and the Secretary of the Interior is further authorized to rent necessary rooms in the city of Washington to carry out the provisions of this act, at a cost not exceeding the rate of $6,000 per annum; and he is also authorized to continue the services of the Commissioner of Labor in charge of the completion of the Eleventh Census, in accordance with an act to extend the time for completing the work of the Eleventh Census, and for other purposes, approved October 3, 1893.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order in regard to this paragraph until some explanation can be made by the gentleman in charge of this bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Do you mean the entire paragraph or the latter clause of it?

Mr. HEPBURN. The entire paragraph. I want to know if the gentleman will state, or can state, to the committee within what time we may reasonably expect the completion of this census report. It has been now nearly five years since the work was begun.

My understanding is that none of the bound volumes of the report have yet been completed, except what is known as the Compendium of the Census. Now, if this delay is to continue it looks to me as if the value of the work is practically lost. It is no use for the Government to go on making expenditures for a work of this kind if it is not to be laid before the people within such time as will make it of any value to them. Five years practically have elapsed already, and I hope the gentleman, if he has the information, will give us some idea in a brief statement, as to when we may expect some returns from the enormous expenditures already made.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. As I understand from Mr. Carroll Wright, the head of the department, the work will be entirely done, so far as the census tables are concerned, by the 1st of March. The material is nearly all in the hands of the Printer at this time, and will be gotten out as rapidly as it can be printed. The appropriations for it have already been made, and there is no additional appropriation covered by this bill except one to which I will refer presently.

Mr. HEPBURN. The work, I believe, contemplates a series of 26 volumes, does it not?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I am not quite certain as to that. I think 26 volumes was the number originally suggested, but there may be one or two about which there is some question.

Mr. HEPBURN. And but two are already in print?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I think so, although I should not like to say positively that that is the exact number. The work is progressing, I will state to the gentleman, as rapidly as possible, and, as I have said, it is already in the hands of the Printer. The appropriations of the last session were ample to continue and complete the work, and no appropriation is in this bill except for the one item to which I have referred, and which I will explain in a moment. The entire work is being done as rapidly as possible, and I think there will be no material delay in completing it.

Now, there is one matter, and that is, what shall we do with the original returns? The gentleman understands that there is a vast mass of original returns. The recommendation of the bill and of the Department is that, instead of printing or binding them, the way to do is simply to arrange and tie them up, so that anybody who desires to examine them can go and examine the particular things that he wants by merely having them shown to him and untying the bundle. That will require about $10,000. That will wind up all the expense of the Census Bureau.

Mr. HEPBURN. And it is for the care of these original documents that this sum is asked?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. It is not only for the care of them, but the preparation of them in such form as that any person who may desire to obtain information from the originals may have an opportunity to examine them.

Mr. HEPBURN. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For miscellaneous expenditures, including telegraphing, fuel, lights, foreign postage, labor, repairs of building and care of grounds, and other necessities, directly ordered by the Attorney-General, to supply deficiencies on account of fiscal years, as follows:

For 1893, $1,100.

For 1894, $26.83.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After line 12, page 37, insert:

"For payment of expenses of five district judges in Oklahoma Territory when holding court outside of the counties where they reside, $1,500."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I reserve the point of order upon that amendment.

Mr. FLYNN. I am frank to admit that there has been no provision in the law whereby the expenses of the district judges in Oklahoma Territory are authorized to be paid when they are outside of their districts. The Attorney-General transmitted to the committee a letter recommending an appropriation to cover this expense, and stated in connection with it that the one district judge in the Indian Territory was allowed $600 a year.

There are five judges in Oklahoma, and this would make the appropriation $3,000 if it were on the same basis; but I have, however, reduced that to one-half of what the recommendation of the Attorney-General would seem to indicate was necessary. One of the judges, in a statement transmitted to the Attorney-General, and by him to the committee, states that while the salary is $3,000 a year, his necessary traveling expenses to hold court in his district are $1,000. If the judges are to be paid by law $3,000, Congress ought to arrange the matter so that it would not take a large part of their salary to pay their expenses to comply with the law.

This is fair, and I trust that the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] will not insist upon his point of order. I was before the committee, and the objection there was that there was no existing law authorizing this appropriation. I can readily understand that; but there are a great many matters in this bill which are not authorized by existing law, and if there was ever a just expenditure appropriated for by Congress it is this. It is not in the interest of any particular individual. The judges are all appointees of the present Administration, with the exception of one. I trust the gentleman will not insist upon the point of order, because this amount has been reduced to one-half of what the Attorney-General requested to be appropriated.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, there is no question of politics about this. I do not know who the judges are, but the committee examined the matter and did not allow it, and, therefore, by authority of the committee, I must raise the point of order. Certainly there is no law permitting this expense to be paid.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky insist upon the point of order?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order will be sustained.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Payment to Winston & Winston: To pay the accounts of Winston & Winston for $250, and of Alexander M. Winston for $115 for services as attorneys rendered in defending certain Indians, under orders of the judge of the United States court for the district of Washington; in all, $365.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 38, after line 2, insert the following:

"To pay Allen R. English, of Arizona, for services as attorney rendered in defending five certain Indians charged with murder, under orders of the judge of the United States court in Arizona, $1,000."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I reserve the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] does not desire to be heard, I wish to address the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to say in regard to this paragraph of the bill that, while the amount is a small one, yet we are setting a precedent here that is dangerous.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. What is the motion that the gentleman makes?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. My motion is to strike out the paragraph in the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Against that motion, of course, I do not raise any point of order.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I was saying that while the amount is a small one, it is setting a precedent that this House ought not to set. The facts in the case are simply these: Winston & Winston were appointed by the judge to defend some pauper Indians. Now, there is not a lawyer on the floor of this House who does not know that the law provides expressly that any citizen who declares himself to be a pauper shall be entitled to free counsel in the courts of the country with no charge whatever to the Government. That is a provision of the United States statutes.

Here are two pauper Indians, who came and declared in the presence of the court that they had not counsel, and were not able to pay for counsel, and Winston & Winston, as provided in this clause, are to be paid this amount of money for defending them. These were pauper Indians. Every lawyer on this floor knows that in every court in this country, from one side to the other, and one end to the other, charity practice has to be done every day without compensation.

Mr. BRETZ. Not at all.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Never.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Paupers are defended without compensation; and the only point in this case upon which you can hang a claim is that these pauper Indians were not citizens of the United States.

Mr. STORER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The law says "citizens of the United States." Now, Winston & Winston claim that they ought to be paid for defending these Indians because these pauper Indians were not citizens. Why, it is as evident as that two and two make four that the law was intended to include the wards of the Government as well as citizens of the Government. I do not care anything about the amount of money. It is not that.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Winston & Winston do.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Winston & Winston may. But I want to put this House on notice that if you pay this bill you will open the floodgates for appropriations of this character from the Indian Territory. Every pauper Indian, and every Indian who has no conscience, will go before the court and declare he is a pauper, and the United States will have to defend his suit without cost to him; and they will come back and get this precedent of the action taken by the House, and we will have to pay the bills.

Mr. STORER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. STORER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that in his State counsel are supplied for indigent persons and are not paid?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. They are not paid. That is the law, and that is the law of the United States.

Mr. STORER. I understood the gentleman to say that that was the law of every State.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I did not state that.

Mr. STORER. I will state to the gentleman that in the State of Ohio indigent prisoners are supplied with counsel, but at the expense of the county.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The Revised Statutes provide that an indigent person shall be defended without cost to him.

Mr. STORER. Who is to pay?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Nobody is to pay. That is one of the things which a lawyer has to do some time in his lifetime, and it is a very small matter to give his services to pauper defendants.

Mr. STORER. The gentleman made the point especially as to the Indian Territory. How large a bar is there in the Indian Territory, and how large an amount of labor would be thrown upon that bar if they are to be called upon to defend all indigent persons and are not paid?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That I do not think is pertinent to the issue. In Georgia the judge selects the counsel to represent a pauper person without cost. The Revised Statutes of this country do the same; and I understand that Winston & Winston undertake to get this claim simply on the idea that the Indian is not a citizen of the country.

Mr. STORER. I am only desirous of saying that in Ohio the judge selects the counsel, the amount is allowed by the court, and is paid by the county.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, a word in reply to the motion, which I believe is to strike out the appropriation. I do not believe it should be stricken out. I hold in my hand Executive Document 122, in which the Attorney-General, after referring to these cases, shows it was for the defense of two Indians charged with murder, taking a week in trial and longer in preparation, and between $300 and $400 in amount, and recommended by the court. The poverty of the Indians was shown, the judge's certificate given as to the effectiveness and the necessity of the defense, and the Attorney-General recommends as follows:

These accounts were presented to the last session of Congress without result. They are again presented, at the request of the parties claimant. They are meritorious, and are therefore submitted for appropriation and payment.

That forecloses the propriety. Now, I understand the Indians were acquitted.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Do I understand my colleague on the committee to say that the simple fact that the Attorney-General recommends the appropriation forecloses the question of propriety?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yes. Now, as to the legality of the payment. These Indians are wards of the Government. Stricken with poverty, crowded necessarily by our people, charged with murder, not going into court upon their own motion, these men are assigned to defend and do defend them, and it is claimed that they were to donate their services. There is nothing in the law which requires it to be done.

I have the pauper act that the gentleman refers to, the act of July 20, 1892, and it provides that any citizen of the United States, being a poor person, on proper proof may prosecute his suit, and that the officers of the court shall perform the services for nothing. It will be observed that there is no provision in the act for a defendant who is a poor person; it is as a plaintiff that the poor person is provided for, and also as a citizen of the United States. These Indians did not come within the statute first because they were defendants and not plaintiffs, and second because they were not citizens of the United States but wards of the Government. In my judgment the Attorney-General is right in his recommendation, and these parties have a legal claim on the Government of the United States; and, when it is only $355 for the defense of two Indians, involving a week's work, to say nothing of preparation, I certainly think the claim ought to be paid.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Illinois. There is no doubt that the statute which has been referred to has no reference whatever to blanket Indians or Indians on reservations. It never was so intended; nor was the act intended to touch a question of attorneys' fees. Gentlemen who desire to have the Indian treated fairly when he is brought before the courts, in a community where it is here claimed there is a prejudice against him, certainly can not get to see him defended by inferior counsel, and you can not get the better talent of the bar to stop their other business to defend an Indian accused of murder when there is no pay attached to the service. The only way you can obtain a fair trial for the Indian in such cases is by allowing reasonable compensation for his defense.

In the case referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and especially in the case to which my amendment refers, certain Apache Indians were being tried for murder, and counsel was appointed by the court to defend them, and the Attorney-General reports that it was a necessary employment, and that these moderate fees should be allowed. I believe, too, that the committee have allowed in these cases a much less sum than was recommended by the Attorney-General; certainly they have done so in the case covered by my amendment, and I think that my friend from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON], when he understands the circumstances and surroundings of these Indians, and when he takes into account the prejudice which is alleged to exist against them in those communities—which, however, I deny—will not object to this allowance.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Is the gentleman willing to agree to an amendment providing that this money shall be taken from the Indian fund?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not care where it comes from.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. You are aware of the fact that the Indians have a fund and that they have a larger per capita amount of currency to-day than any State in the Union?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That depends entirely upon what Indians you are talking about.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I understand that.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Some of the Indians have no fund whatever. I know of no particular fund that the Apaches have out of which this allowance could be justly made. The Government is supporting these Indians at its own expense; they are charged with murder on the reservation, and attorneys are appointed by the court to defend them; and now the point of order is made that this pauper act applies to them, although the gentleman must have seen from its reading that it has no application whatever, and could not, in mercy or in justice, have any application to such cases.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to say a word in addition to what has been said by the gentleman from Illinois in support of that provision. This gentleman, Mr. Winston, was for a full term United States attorney of the district of Washington. Shortly after the expiration of his term he was appointed to defend these Indians. Their case was regarded as meritorious, but on account of many surrounding circumstances it was regarded also as a dangerous case for the Indians, and Mr. Winston rendered the country, as well as the Indians for whose defense he was appointed, valuable service, extending over more than a week, he and his son being engaged during all of that time in the defense of these men, which they conducted successfully.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to add just a word. In the first place, this is without authority of law. In the second place, it is a bad precedent. In the third place, it is not only without authority of law and a bad precedent, but there were no ascertained facts before the committee which allowed the account as to how many days or hours of service was rendered. Now, having brought the matter to the attention of the committee, I have done my duty, and I withdraw the motion to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, on consultation, I believe that I will accept an amendment fixing the amount at $750 instead of $1,000, although I believe the recommendation of the Attorney-General was $1,200.

The amendment was modified by striking out "a thousand" and inserting "seven hundred and fifty," and was then adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For defraying expenses incurred by marshals in executing orders, warrants, and processes of United States courts; for the protection of property in the hands of receivers of such courts, and for the arrest and detention until trial of persons arrested for violating such orders and resisting the execution of such warrants and processes, to be audited and allowed by the Attorney-General, $140,000, and said sum shall be available for expenses incurred during the fiscal years 1894 and 1895, $140,000.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph just read, beginning on line 11 and ending on line 21.

I want to state to the committee that this provision is very peculiar in its language, and forms a precedent which, if once set in this House, will open a flood gate of extravagance by putting into the hands of officers of the Government amounts of money to be expended without any ascertained account. Notice the language of this paragraph. It provides that this money shall be expended on warrants "to be audited and allowed by the Attorney-General." Here is an appropriation of $140,000, for what? Not a member of the Appropriations Committee knows to-day for what, and not a member of this Committee of the Whole knows for what this money is to be expended.

The chairman of the subcommittee and myself insisted on the Attorney-General saying why this was necessary and where this money was to go. It is said to be for "expenses incurred by marshals in executing orders, warrants, and processes of United States courts for the protection of property in the hands of receivers." The question was propounded to the Attorney-General how much of this money was to go for services in defense of property not in the hands of receivers, and he failed to answer. How much of it was for the protection of the Illinois Central Railroad Company? How much of it was for the protection of Armour & Co., or any private property? Those questions were asked, and they were not answered. Now, it is proposed in this bill to appropriate a lump sum of $140,000, to be placed in the control of the Attorney-General, to be expended upon vouchers to be audited when and reported to whom?

What necessity can there be for auditing an account after it has been paid? And how can a deficiency be ascertained until the account has been audited or estimated? Mr. Chairman, this provision is subject to a point of order and it ought to go out on that ground.

Mr. BOATNER. Why do you not make the point of order?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I wish to say that the committee was divided as to the propriety of paying this money—

Mr. BOATNER. The rule provides that no appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order as an amendment thereto for an expenditure not previously authorized by law—

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOATNER. Why not, then, make a point of order against the appropriation?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I raise a point of order against this paragraph under Rule XXI.

Mr. RAY. It is too late to make that point of order. The gentleman has discussed the proposition and moved to strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order comes too late. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I think an appropriation carrying $140,000 ought to be in words and figures more definite and certain than this one. I think the Committee on Appropriations ought to know what this is for; and if any of them does know I wish they would tell us. My position about this question is this: If this money is to be applied to the payment of any Government officials for the discharge of any duties that they performed under duly constituted authority, I have no objection, of course, to the appropriation; but if the employment was by private persons or private corporations, then, notwithstanding the person doing the service may have been disguised as a public officer, yet if his service was a private duty, I should not be in favor of making this payment. Any person whose property suffers injury by mob violence has recourse for damages upon the locality that was legally bound to furnish protection for the property and that has failed to perform that duty. If this appropriation is intended to compensate private corporations or private individuals for outlays made for the protection of their own property, then, in my judgment, it ought not to be allowed.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this provision speaks for itself. Not a dollar of this money after it is appropriated can be paid until the expenditure which is to be covered is shown and has received the special approval of the court whose process the officer was executing. The Committee on Appropriations in the preparation of this bill exhausted this question so far as they could, and in the published hearings will be found between four and five closely printed pages giving the questions propounded to the Attorney-General and the answers made.

The Department—

Says the Attorney-General—was officially advised that property in the hands of receivers was in jeopardy; that the laws of the United States were violated and defied, and that the ordinary forces of the marshals were wholly inadequate to enforce the orders of the court. Immediate action was imperatively demanded. Under these circumstances, and upon a representation of the facts, instructions to the marshals were given to employ sufficient force to carry out the orders of the court and to uphold the laws. It is evident that the ordinary provisions for the payment of marshals' accounts under usual circumstances were not applicable in these cases. From time to time, therefore, on the requisitions of the marshals, funds have been advanced to them to defray the necessary expenses, with specific instructions that the accounts must first receive the special approval of the court. It should perhaps be stated incidentally that these expenses covered a period of several months, commencing from the time of the "commonwealer" disturbances.

In answer to inquiry 4, the Department states that it is impossible to estimate the amounts expended, or for which the United States are liable in the protection of properties not in the possession of receivers, or the causes for such expenditures and the dates thereof, except that where properties were not in the hands of receivers the expenditures were for executing the interstate and postal laws under the orders of the United States courts, and whatever protection was granted to roads not in the hands of receivers of the courts was not granted for the benefit of the roads, but was an incidental protection which was absolutely necessary to enforce the laws of the Government in interstate and postal matters.

I might read further; but this substantially covers the ground. There is the list of the claims so far as we could get them; but these are not claims of the usual character, payable in the ordinary way. They can not be audited until they are paid; and they can not be passed until the courts specially approve them; and in addition to that they must receive the approval of the Attorney-General.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I would like to bring to the attention of the gentleman—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will move to strike out the last word, if there be no objection.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois be allowed five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I wish to bring to the attention of my colleague on the committee the fact that in this paragraph we propose to appropriate a lump sum of $140,000 for certain purposes indicated upon accounts to be audited and allowed, and the usual expression, "or so much thereof as may be necessary," is omitted. So that here is an appropriation of $140,000 to be given over to the Attorney-General to be paid on accounts that he knows nothing about, that the House knows nothing about, and that the Committee on Appropriations knew nothing about; and we have not even inserted the qualifying clause, "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the statement of that objection, if you will stop and think a minute, does not need any answer. The words, "or so much thereof as may be necessary," are merely "leather and prunella."

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If $140,000 has been ascertained as the amount to be paid, why not say so?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. It is not claimed that the precise amount has been ascertained; it can not be ascertained until the money has been paid out by the marshal and until he takes his vouchers and gets the special approval of the judge, and afterwards the approval of the Attorney-General. The words "or so much thereof as may be necessary" can be inserted by unanimous consent, if desired. But they do not change the effect of the appropriation the ten-thousandth part of a hair.

Now, what are the facts? Unfortunately—without locating the blame; it is not necessary to do so—during a portion of the last fiscal year and of this fiscal year there have been great disturbances throughout the country. This was the case at Chicago, out West, down East, and in various parts of the country; parties, without locating the blame, took possession of the gateways through which the travel and commerce of the country passed and stopped it. It was Sunday every day, in the words of the old song, throughout the length and breadth of the country.

The President, charged with the execution of the laws, through the Department of Justice ordered the expenditures provided in this paragraph to be made and how they should be made. So far as they were made to enforce the law they ought to be paid. I want further than that to call the attention of the gentleman to this fact: The President of the United States—and we appropriate a part of the deficiency in this very bill—the President of the United States found the civil arm of the Government weak and powerless to restore order, and directed the military force of the Government to proceed to the point of trouble, and at the end of the bayonet, against the protests of governors of States, he enforced the law of the United States; and I repeat, this bill contains a deficiency appropriation to pay the Army for that use of the bayonet.

Why, Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman swallow the camel and strain at the gnat? If it was wrong to use and pay the civil arm of the Government to enforce the law, much more wrong is it to pay the Army for helping to enforce the same law against the protests of governors of States.

Now, I might let the matter rest there, but there is one additional thing to which I wish to call your attention. All over this country there are humble men who work by the day and live in the sweat of their faces who, it is alleged, and in many cases I believe, did take service under the marshals, taking their lives in their own hands for the purpose of guarding the mails of the United States and its commerce carried under the interstate-commerce law. They have not been paid for that service, and they ought to be, if I am correctly informed as to these cases and I think I am. The payment has been withheld from them.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman state where the $140,000 is going? How do you know that they have not been paid already?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I know it from the fact that orders were given in the northern and southern districts of Illinois, and that this document that I hold in my hand says that between thirty and forty thousand dollars were contracted there without being able to give the details of it until the vouchers come in, and they can not come in until the money is appropriated. And I know, further, that gentlemen representing districts in the northern and southern divisions of Illinois have come in contact with men who have not been paid.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman from Illinois give some reason why the committee should not have furnished the House or should not themselves have been furnished with the details of the expenditures and the names of the parties to whom the money is to be paid? I do not mean, of course, the name of each individual, but the amount expended by the various marshals acting under the order to which he refers.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If my friend from Louisiana had listened to me it would not be necessary for me to repeat the language of this document.

Mr. BOATNER. There was so much confusion at the time I could not hear.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. It covers about four pages, but I will read again a brief extract.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOATNER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have time to discuss this question.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, well, I withdraw the pro forma amendment, and renew it.

Mr. BOATNER. Let me say this to the gentleman: I have read the answer of the Attorney-General, and it seems to be entirely insufficient or unsatisfactory, as far as accurate details are concerned, to support so large an appropriation. I agree entirely that the United States is responsible and ought to appropriate whatever is necessary for the enforcement of the laws of the United States and to protect property entitled to Federal protection. But before appropriating the money the House ought to be advised in what manner the money has been expended or the obligation incurred, the parties paid, the circumstances, the condition under which it was expended, and so on, so the House may judge for itself, and not the Attorney-General, whether it ought to be appropriated.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I understand; but if the gentleman will just allow me to read one moment I think he will be satisfied. Let me read:

Under these circumstances and upon a representation of the facts, instructions to the marshals were given to employ sufficient force to carry out the orders of the court and to uphold the laws. It is evident that the ordinary provisions for the payment of marshals' accounts under the usual circumstances were not applicable in these cases. From time to time, therefore, on the requisition of the marshals, funds have been advanced to them to defray the necessary expenses with specified instructions that the accounts must first receive the special approval of the court. It should perhaps be stated incidentally that these expenses covered a period of several months, commencing from the time of the "commonwealer" disturbances.

It will be seen from this that this expenditure forms an exception to the usual expenditures in such cases.

Mr. BOATNER. Now, why does not the Attorney-General, I ask the gentleman, proceed to give the number of persons employed by the several marshals, and the marshals who employed them, how long a time they served, and the amounts to be paid?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. And the property they protected.

Mr. BOATNER. All of which information now seems to be withheld from the House.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, Mr. Chairman, a child could ask more questions in a minute than a sage could answer in a lifetime.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It will not take a lifetime to answer a simple question like that.

Mr. BOATNER. And the gentleman is superior to a sage.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, my friend from Louisiana is larger than a child. Suppose you put it that way.

Now, the accounts for fees of marshals are only audited after they are paid, and can not be paid until the money is appropriated. The money is advanced to the marshal; he pays it out to a thousand people perhaps, and he takes their vouchers, returning them to the Department of Justice. Then for the first time it is in the power of the Department to tell the individual to whom the money has been paid.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. After the local courts have passed upon it?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yes. Now, what is the fact. These expenses were directed to be made. The marshal did not have the money, but he made the employment under the order of the Attorney-General, and now those vouchers can not be ascertained by the Attorney-General until the money is furnished to pay them, and when the marshal pays them and takes a receipt therefor, every receipt must first bear the special approval of the court.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. And unless approved it will not be paid, and the marshal becomes responsible for it?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Why, certainly. It must first have the special approval of the court, and then it must come to the Attorney-General's office and pass that office, and then, for the first time, it is in the power of the Attorney-General to tell how many people were paid.

Ah, but says the gentleman, suppose the marshal pays somebody whom he ought not to pay. Why, that question comes up in the public service everywhere. If he fails to get the approval of the Attorney-General he is not allowed for that expenditure and he must make it good, and his bond is held to make it good. There is no danger of any man improperly getting a cent and the marshal getting credit for that payment unless the courts specially approve wrongfully, and unless the Attorney-General specially approves wrongfully; and if you go to higgling about making this appropriation from that standpoint, then we will strike it all out, because you come to a point where you have got to trust somebody to make the payment.

Mr. BOATNER. With all due respect to the gentleman from Illinois, I think that his answer to the question which I propounded to him is not only not satisfactory, but is utterly fallacious. The logical deduction from what he says is that this House shall abandon its discretion in this matter to the Attorney-General, and that because the Attorney-General says $140,000 is necessary to discharge the obligations of the Government incurred in this way we ought to appropriate the amount. When I ask why details are not given which show the justification for this expenditure and the obligation of the United States, the gentleman says that the details can not be given until the money is paid. Well, then, if that be true, how does the Attorney-General arrive at the fact that the sum of $140,000 is necessary to discharge the obligation? I do not ask why the Attorney-General did not furnish vouchers. I do not ask for vouchers; but it seems to me to comport with common sense and reason that the Attorney-General could lay before this House the information which he has. If any marshal employed any number of deputies, he knows when he employed them how much he agreed to pay them and how long they served.

It is not necessary that he should produce vouchers in order to show us what expenditure it has been necessary to make. So I submit to the gentleman from Illinois, with all due respect for his experience as a member of the committee and his ability as a legislator, that unless we propose to abandon the discretion which the law imposes upon us to scrutinize these accounts and to know where the money of the United States is going to be paid before we appropriate it, we ought to have exactly the information which I have indicated by my question to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It is a mere estimate. That is all he can give.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I desire to say in answer to the gentleman that it takes two people to conduct a conversation. Sound made by the voice is no sound to him who is deaf. There must be a man who talks and a man who has an ear that hears before there can be practically any such thing as sound. When I have stated that it seems to me I have covered the ground.

Mr. BOATNER. No doubt, to your satisfaction.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, possibly so, and I trust to the satisfaction of the House. I will not again explain why it is not in the power of the Attorney-General to give a list of these men. I have twice explained it; but I will turn back to pages 24, 25, and 26, and I now want the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE], chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. Here is a bill which carries a deficiency of $25,000 for subsistence of the Army.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It has very rarely happened that there has been any deficiency from the Military Committee, I want to say.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, now, the Army went to Chicago because they were sent there. They had to be clothed and to be furnished with ammunition. They had to have rations, and the disturbance which led to this deficiency grew largely out of the enforcement of the law through calling into use the military arm of the Government. Yet my friend from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] allows that which was specially ordered by the President to pass by. Why did he not demand the number and names of the soldiers that made that deficiency—how many privates, and who commanded them? What property did they protect, and where did they go? Whose rights or person did they defend? But my friend was as silent as the graveyard there.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Why are you addressing your remarks to me?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, I am cross-eyed; I was looking at my friend from Louisiana. [Laughter.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then you must be cross-eyed. I agree with you in the proposition.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman state whether or not, in asking the committee for that deficiency appropriation, the Department did not furnish them with the necessary specifications as to how these expenses were incurred, what amount was necessary to defray the cost of transportation, defray the cost of sustenance, to pay for the ammunition, and all those items?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Why, they did not, and never do. They never do that; they come before us with an estimate.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. They make a requisition in bulk of so much.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. They will make an estimate and forward that estimate with a request that the appropriation be made; but there were no details. If we had to have the details of the expenditures of every cent to every individual with our 70,000,000 population and the 1,500,000,000 people in the world where our public service reaches on the earth, there would not be room enough in this House to hold them.

Mr. BOATNER. If the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. SAYERS. If my friend will refer to page 40 he will find an appropriation for 1895 deficiencies, $713,000, for fees of marshals. Now, the Committee on Appropriations could not possibly ascertain how many deputies the marshals would require, how many miles they would have to travel, or how many writs they would serve. We could only take the estimate of the Department of Justice that this would be the probable deficiency during the present fiscal year, and we reported $713,000. So all through this bill there is a well-defined line of difference in deficiencies. One is what may be termed "ascertained deficiencies" and the other class as "estimated deficiencies." An "ascertained" deficiency may arise during the present fiscal year or the year before or the year before that; future deficiencies can only be estimated.

Let us consider the subject under immediate consideration. The courts in Illinois (I will take that State, for instance,) having in their charge and under their control through receivership of certain railroads, etc., finding that the operation of these roads was being impeded, directed the United States marshals to incur certain expenditures; that is, by swearing in deputy marshals and taking such steps as would release these roads from interference. Usually, as in the payment of all expenses, the United States marshals make payment upon their own responsibility and then transmit their accounts. This appropriation is made in bulk, and, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois, before the marshal can pay one dollar he must do so upon the order of the court. He must show the order of the court for his voucher, and such voucher is transmitted to the Department of Justice for revision.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why do you not say so in this appropriation—that it should be audited by the Auditor of the Treasury?

Mr. SAYERS. If my friend will notice, on the top of page 40 there is no such requirement as this.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But this specially provides that it shall be audited by the Attorney-General.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Who has no authority to audit accounts.

Mr. SAYERS. These accounts, if I do not misunderstand the law, go to the Attorney-General.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. You are wrong.

Mr. SAYERS. These accounts go to the Attorney-General.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. This particular item was put in before that law, and it was to be audited by the Treasury, and not in the way of the ordinary law.

Mr. SAYERS. They are to be revised and allowed by the Attorney-General. Are not all the accounts of the marshals revised by the Attorney-General?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Not in the sense of this language.

Mr. SAYERS. Now for fees of marshals for 1895. Does not the gentleman from Kentucky know that the Department of Justice under this new act must revise every one of these accounts?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I understand the gentleman to state that the expenditure for which this appropriation is to go has already been made.

Mr. SAYERS. It has already been made.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What is the necessity for this peculiar language, to which I wish to call the gentleman's attention? After reciting that it is to defray expenses incurred by marshals in executing orders, etc., of United States courts, it provides that the appropriation shall be $140,000, and then goes on to say that "said sum shall be available for expenses incurred during the fiscal years 1894 and 1895, $140,000."

Mr. SAYERS. The two fiscal years are mentioned because my recollection is that the troubles occurred in both years.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think not.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, I think so; but I am not positive.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But does this appropriation carry $140,000 or $280,000?

Mr. SAYERS. Only $140,000.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why do you not content yourself, then, with saying $140,000 once?

Mr. SAYERS. The repetition comes from the practice of naming the amount at the end of each paragraph in order to facilitate the summing up.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But this states the sum twice at the end.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not think there can be any question that the amount is only $140,000.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. What is the gentleman's criticism?

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman from Ohio seems to think that this is an appropriation of $280,000.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Not at all. The last "$140,000," though, ought to be stricken out, as it is a mere repetition.

Mr. SAYERS. There is no more danger of $280,000 being paid out under this appropriation than there is of a million.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. But at the best the second "$140,000" is a repetition.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert after the word "dollars," in line 21, page 40, the following: "Provided, That the Attorney-General shall report to Congress the payments made under this paragraph, to whom paid, and for what purpose or service."

Mr. SAYERS. That is entirely unobjectionable.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I have no objection to that. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a single word in justice to myself on this provision of the bill. I loyally support the bill reported by the committee and which I was directed to report, but personally I was against the making of this particular appropriation. I want to put that on record, because the question may arise in some other way. I was opposed to it, first, because I am opposed to the mode in which it is proposed these claims shall be audited. All other claims are audited by the regular accounting officers of the Department according to law, but these claims are to be audited solely by the Attorney-General. I think it is a bad precedent. I have every confidence in the present Attorney-General, but there are eight Cabinet officers for all time to come. I was opposed to it also because I was not prepared to say that the response of the Attorney-General as to how this money was to be expended was sufficient. I disagree with my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]—and I content myself by simply stating the disagreement—in his statement that the Attorney-General shows where the money is to go. I think the Attorney-General leaves it absolutely in doubt.

We only know that it goes to certain districts. There are certain districts in which it is to be distributed, but to whom or for what properties or under what proceedings we are not informed. I was opposed to the appropriation upon a third ground, which went to the bottom of the matter. I think that the tendency toward the control of great corporations and of the workmen employed by them by writs of injunction and by prosecutions for contempt is in the wrong direction. I think we are going too far in conceding to courts of equity the powers which they have assumed over corporations and their employees. We are opening the door too wide to great corporations to come into a court of equity and, at the expense of the United States, invoke the processes of the court for that protection which, if they are entitled to it at all, they ought to obtain at their own expense.

I admit that it is hard to draw the line as to where the Federal courts should stop when their power is invoked for the protection of person or property under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution in relation to corporations upon whose service the mail facilities of the United States in large measure depend; and while I myself was opposed to this provision, yet as the committee heard it in the last session of Congress with great care and suspended action and then heard it again, and now, having heard it a third time, have determined to report it, I stand with the committee, and oppose the motion of my colleague [Mr. LIVINGSTON] to strike it out.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I always like gentlemen, when they oppose an appropriation for a particular purpose, to show that they have manifested their opposition to that purpose in a legitimate way, which in this case would be by the introduction of a bill limiting the powers of the Federal courts.

No such bill has been before the House. I will give the reason why I support this appropriation. I have been informed that the men who performed this service are citizens of the United States, who were summoned to perform certain duties by the United States marshals. If that be true, and if they performed the service, then each and every one of those citizens can sue the Government in the district court nearest to his home, and can obtain judgment against the Government for the services that he rendered; and then Congress will be obliged to appropriate not only the original sum, but the costs and the interest also. My object, therefore, in supporting the appropriation is to save the payment of a larger sum, which must otherwise be paid in the future. The persons to whom this appropriation, if made, will go are poor men, summoned to the performance of a public duty by the marshals.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask the Clerk to read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a paragraph which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the following from the proceedings of the House of Representatives of July 16, 1894:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives indorses the prompt and vigorous efforts of the President and his Administration to suppress lawlessness, restore order, and prevent improper interference with the enforcement of the laws of the United States and with the transportation of the mails of the United States and with interstate commerce, and pledges the President hearty support, and deems the success that has already attended his efforts cause for public and general congratulation.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make that the text for a few observations touching this appropriation; and I will confine myself solely to the merits of the main question involved; for I fear that some at least of the technical objections raised here are really directed to the main question instead of the technical ones to which they appear to attach.

A few months ago, as the RECORD just read shows and as we all remember, there was serious trouble in this country. The Executive, coming manfully to the discharge of his duty as Chief Magistrate, acted, according to the judgment of Congress, promptly and wisely. That resolution was adopted under a suspension of the rules requiring a two-thirds vote, and it practically had little opposition in either House of Congress.

That was the way Congress felt then when we were in great trouble, confronted with confusion, great and weighty questions hanging in the balance. It was a time when some novel issues were presented, considered, met, and solved. The protection of the United States mails, the protection of interstate commerce, and the enforcement of the mandates of the Federal courts were all involved. And I am glad to live in a country where the supreme Executive met his duty manfully, and where Congress, backed by every Republican vote, said "Amen" to that action.

The storm has blown over. The men who took their lives in their hands as bailiffs, possibly as a part of the posse comitatus of the country, and as deputy United States marshals, with a courage which no soldier can say was second to anything that was done on bloody battlefield, responded to the call of the law and helped to execute it. They were mostly poor men—laboring men—but men and citizens who did not shrink from their grave duty.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Executive lays upon the table of Congress the statement of a legitimate expenditure in connection with that execution of the law; he shows how, according to long and well-established usages, this money was called for and expended. The storm, I say, has passed; there is no trouble now in the great centers; no blockade of commerce, no stoppage of the mails, no rumblings, as it were, of civil war. And now we can afford, as gentlemen seem to think, to haggle and become technical in respect to paying the poor and worthy men who helped us in our hour of trouble.

For one I will say, shame upon the American Congress if it fails to step up and do its duty! The Committee on Appropriations has done its duty and has laid this provision before the Committee of the Whole. I ask that you respond, as the Committee on Appropriations has done, to the demands of duty and in behalf of good government. [Applause.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, the opposition to this clause in the appropriation bill has nothing to do with the Democratic party, and nothing to do with President Cleveland, and nothing to do with the indorsement by this House of his action in this matter. Whether Mr. Cleveland did right or wrong is not the question before this House now. That was settled when the resolution which has been read was pending; and the House indorsed his action. The question is now whether these accounts are properly presented to this Committee of the Whole. The speech of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] was simply the utterance of a sentiment—nothing more. He never touched the issue before the committee, whether the Attorney-General has authority to audit accounts or not. There is one objection to this clause. There is no law for it; and if you begin to-day to give the Attorney-General authority to audit accounts, then abolish the Auditor's office so far as the Department of Justice is concerned.

There is another objection. Some of us believed in the committee room, and we believe now, that a part of this money was spent illegally, and that if this appropriation be now made it will be expended without authority of law. We believe that these United States marshals and these bailiffs were protecting private property which the State of Illinois ought to have protected, if protected at all; which the city of Chicago should have protected, if protected at all, or which the Illinois Central Railroad Company should have protected, if protected at all. And we endeavored, by a letter addressed to the Attorney-General, to ascertain to whom this money was to be paid and for what purpose. We sought to ascertain the names of the marshals and deputy marshals, with a description of the property that was protected and the expense incurred in protecting it. We could not get answers to those questions, and we have not got them yet.

My colleague the chairman of the subcommittee is right when he suggests that this is a dangerous precedent, without authority of law, and may entail upon the Congress of the United States in days to come an amount of trouble which we shall hardly have the capacity to roll off our shoulders.

There is another objection to this provision. This appropriation is clearly and distinctly repeated. We appropriate the sum of $140,000 twice. How do you know and how do I know what construction will be put upon the language in this bill?

I will confess, Mr. Chairman, that if the amendment now pending be adopted a great deal of my objection to this proposition will vanish and I may cease my opposition to this clause of the bill. But the matter as it now stands I can not and will not vote for it.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, I think that very much of the opposition which has been made on the floor to this appropriation arises from a misapprehension or a misunderstanding of the facts. As I understand it, this appropriation is made in bulk to the Department in order to pay the expenditures of that Department in executing the laws of the country. It stands precisely on the same principle as the appropriation to the Department for the payment of witnesses or jurors. Of course, none of the officers of that Department can, in advance, give a statement of how moneys appropriated for the payment of jurors is to be expended.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. But this stands on a very different footing.

Mr. BYNUM. The very same objections might be alleged against appropriations for the payment of jurors, I repeat. The money is appropriated, it is sent by the Department to the various officers throughout the country, often before the juries are drawn, and it would be impossible before the money is expended and before the jury is paid to render an account to the Department giving the details of the expenditure. It is just the same way with the appropriation carried in this bill with reference to other appropriations made for the United States courts.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. No; the difference is this: In the appropriations for witnesses and jurors the accounts are audited. In this they are not.

Mr. BYNUM. They will be audited after the payment is made. How can they be audited in the case of jurors before the jurors are drawn, before their service has been rendered, and before payment has been made? All of these appropriations for such fees must in the very nature of things be made in advance.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. But there is this distinction, if the gentleman will permit me: In all other cases of expenditures for United States courts the expenditures are audited by the Auditors of the particular Department under which the expenses are incurred. For instance, in the cases of jurors' and marshals' fees the accounts are passed upon by the Auditors; but in this case these expenses are audited by the Attorney-General in person and allowed by him. These are expenses that are not regarded as the ordinary expenses of the Federal courts.

Mr. BYNUM. I do not know whether a change has been made by the new system in auditing these accounts—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. No; in respect to that no change has been made.

Mr. BYNUM. But that, however, makes no difference in the principle.

I know as a matter of fact that the deputy marshals, so far as Indiana is concerned—the men for whom this appropriation is asked—were appointed from the laboring classes and were laboring men. They went in obedience to the law and discharged their duties faithfully and promptly. Some were seriously injured in the discharge of their duty. The great majority of them were poor men, who were unable to do without their pay, and suffered from the fact that there was no money on hand to promptly discharge their claims.

After their discharge many were compelled, because of their circumstances and because there was no money to pay for the services they had faithfully rendered in preserving order and in aiding in the enforcement of the laws of the country—they were compelled to discount their claims against the Government. Now we are quibbling over the appropriation to pay those of them who were able to hold their claims until Congress had an opportunity to make an appropriation. I know a large number of these men personally; they are entitled to their pay. It is objected for the reason that the Department of Justice should come to Congress and render an itemized account as to what all the various deputy marshals who were necessarily employed were engaged in, where they were and what they were engaged in every hour of the day, and whose property they were guarding.

In the very nature of things it would be impossible to render such a statement. These men who performed the duty were under the control of the marshal and they were sent wherever their services were required, and to require a specific report to the House of all of the particulars of the services rendered in various parts of the country at that time would be just as impossible as to require full and complete details from every officer of the Government in every one of its Departments who has charge of expenditures in the enforcement of any of its laws. It is sufficient to know that these men were engaged in a duty which was considered to be essential, and they performed their duty well. The appropriation, therefore, ought to be made without objection and without contest on this floor.

I represent a large labor district. I represent men who were engaged in that strike; but I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that there is one of them who would countenance for a moment the refusal on the part of the Government of the United States to pay its just obligations which were incurred during that period.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Chairman, it is a favorite resort, or rather a common thing in the practice of law, for a party who holds the weaker side of an issue to shift it whenever he can. I have not heard a man on this floor, in the discussion of this question, antagonize the position taken by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM]. I doubt if there is a man here who objects to the Government paying the poor men he refers to in Indiana every dollar it owes to them. I certainly do not object to it, nor do I object to the payment of every dollar of expenditure lawfully incurred by the Government in the maintenance of law and in the protection of every right which it is the duty of the Federal Government to protect. But that is not the question at all. The question is whether we shall take the mere statement of the Attorney-General that he needs $140,000 for the purpose contemplated here as conclusive of this question, and therefore excuse him from furnishing any details to the House as to whether his estimate is correct or not. Who suggests that anybody wants an account of what these deputies did?

Mr. BYNUM. The gentleman from Georgia suggested that?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. No, I did not.

Mr. BOATNER. No, sir; the suggestion is that the Attorney-General should furnish this House a statement of the number of deputies employed, and the time that they served, and the amount of their wages. Does that involve a difficulty impossible of accomplishment? Why, sir, to say that the Attorney-General could not furnish this House with a statement that would show the way in which this money had been expended with reasonable particularity, so that we can judge whether or not it ought to be paid, is an insult to any man's understanding. That, sir, is all I contend for. I object to this House surrendering the discretion imposed upon it by the Constitution of determining how the money of the United States should be expended, and to accepting the mere statement of the Attorney-General that he had incurred an expense of $140,000 in protecting the public peace, in protecting property, and that we shall accept that, and accept his declination to give us the particulars of the expenditure of that money. I repeat, sir, that he could without difficulty have given us the details upon which he arrived at the conclusion that the sum of $140,000 is necessary.

Now, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] in his remarks a few minutes ago drew a distinction between a deficiency which is estimated and a deficiency which has occurred. If the deficiency is estimated for the future, of course the particulars can not be given, except by estimation; but where the appropriation is to cover a deficiency in public expenditure which has already occurred, there is no reason whatever why the exact figures of that deficiency should not be given to the House.

I repeat, that I do not yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM], or the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], or any other gentleman upon this floor in disposition to support proper appropriations to pay all lawful expenses of the United States, and particularly expenses lawfully incurred in the preservation of the public peace and in the protection of property; but I protest, sir, that this House should not permit the Attorney-General to treat one of its committees with the discourtesy which he has shown to this one, or to treat the House with the discourtesy which he has shown it by refusing to furnish such a statement of the expenditure of this money as will enable us to determine whether it was lawfully and rightfully expended or not.

Mr. TURPIN. Does he refuse to give the information?

Mr. BOATNER. There is his letter, which is evasive, and which does not give the information.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I think it is due to the Attorney-General to allow his letter to be put in the RECORD. I think it is hardly fair to say that the Attorney-General refused or that he was discourteous. He simply did not give us the information.

Mr. BOATNER. I want to be understood with reference to that matter as saying that the act is in itself discourteous. There is a reply to a letter addressed to him by the chairman of the committee. I repeat, that it seems to me that it was easy for him to have given these details, that it was easy for him to have ascertained how many deputies had been employed, the length of time they had served, and the amount which had been agreed to be paid to them. I do not mean that he should have given the details with absolute accuracy; but certainly he could have given the House more information than is contained in that letter. I repeat, that in my judgment the act itself was discourteous, although the letter is not. The discourtesy consisted in withholding from the House the details which it ought to have, in order to enable it to decide whether the Attorney-General wisely exercised the discretion vested in him.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I make the request that the letter of the Attorney-General be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks that the letter of the Attorney-General be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., December 15, 1894.

SIR: Your letter of December 7, 1894, transmits a request for statements to be sent to the committee showing "the various properties, with the names of the corporations owning them, in the possession of receivers appointed by the courts of the United States, and the courts in which said receivers were appointed."

In reply it may be stated that the Department has not a list of the various properties, with the names of the corporations owning them, in the hands of receivers, appointed by the United States courts, whether circuit or district, in which receivers were appointed. In this reply there is no wish to evade any item of the inquiry or to conceal any matter connected with the inquiry. The clerks of the United States courts are the only officials who can give the correct information. An effort to collect from them what is desired and tabulate their answers when received for report to Congress could hardly be accomplished till late in the present session. The clerks of the courts not being under the control of this Department, they would only report upon the order of the judge, and as such work is without compensation some delay might be expected at their hands in complying with the Department request.

The Department was officially advised that property in the hands of receivers was in jeopardy; that the laws of the United States were violated and defied, and that the ordinary forces of the marshals were wholly inadequate to enforce the orders of the court. Immediate action was imperatively demanded. Under these circumstances, and upon a representation of the facts, instructions to the marshals were given to employ sufficient force to carry out the orders of the court and to uphold the laws. It is evident that the ordinary provisions for the payment of marshals' accounts under usual circumstances were not applicable in these cases. From time to time, therefore, on the requisitions of the marshals, funds have been advanced to them to defray the necessary expenses, with specific instructions that the accounts must first receive the special approval of the court. It should perhaps be stated incidentally that these expenses covered a period of several months, commencing from the time of the "commonwealer" disturbances.

"The sums expended, respectively, in the protection of said properties, and the dates and objects of said expenditures."

Answer. The Department furnishes in Exhibits A and B the amounts which have been advanced to the marshals of the different judicial districts out of the appropriation for protecting property in the hands of receivers for the fiscal years 1894-95 and 1894, with the dates when the advances were made; but it can not apportion the advances so as to show what kind of expenses were paid off by the marshals. This can only be ascertained by a careful analysis of the accounts that have already been examined and paid and are now on file in the Treasury, or those awaiting examination by this Department and those in the marshals' hands yet unpaid, awaiting a deficiency appropriation. In making requisitions for advances for the purpose above indicated the marshals did not specify the character of the accounts in their hands, but simply asked for amounts to cover all the claims that were ready to be paid. To completely analyze all the accounts that have been rendered, which are now in the Department, and those in the hands of the marshals, would require the labor of several clerks and would consume at least a month or two in the preparation of a statement which would fully answer the inquiry.

It might be borne in mind that the special appropriation for protecting property has only been used to pay expenses incurred by reason of these disturbances, and any fees that were earned in executing orders of the court are paid from the regular appropriation provided for that purpose.

"The sums for which the United States are now liable for the protection of said properties, respectively."

Answer. The amounts for which the United States are now liable under the appropriations mentioned are set forth in Exhibit C, as reported by the marshals.

In answer to inquiry 4, the Department states that it is impossible to estimate the amounts expended, or for which the United States are liable in the protection of properties not in the possession of receivers, or the causes for such expenditures and the dates thereof, except that where properties were not in the hands of receivers the expenditures were for executing the interstate and postal laws under the orders of the United States courts, and whatever protection was granted to roads not in the hands of receivers of the courts was not granted for the benefit of the roads, but was an incidental protection which was absolutely necessary to enforce the laws of the Government in interstate and postal matters. The main object of the court, acting through the marshal and his deputies, was to enforce obedience to the laws of the United States, to do which it was necessary to see that the roads were protected so far as was needed for a proper execution of the laws. To this extent the protection was given, and no more than what was incidental to the main object of executing the laws.

In answer to inquiry 5, the Department states that it is impossible to give the names or number of "persons arrested or detained by the order of the United States courts in the protection of property in the hands of receivers of said courts, or the cause of such arrests and detentions, and the expenses thereof," for reasons indicated in reply to No. 3.

The amounts paid in the various districts, respectively, for fees of jurors and for fees of witnesses during the fiscal year 1894 are presented by Exhibits D and E.

It is impracticable to furnish the information as desired in No. 7, as the accounts of marshals for even the first quarter of the fiscal year 1895 have not all been received.

The expenses for transportation of prisoners to places of imprisonment are payable from "Fees and expenses of marshals," not from "Support of prisoners." To obtain the desired data letters would have to be sent to all the marshals asking for the information.

The cost of transportation of prisoners released from penitentiaries (payable from "Support of prisoners") is estimated to be about $24,000 a year.
Very respectfully,

Hon. W. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE,
Chairman Subcommittee on Deficiencies,
Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Attorney-General.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to say in behalf of the Attorney-General that in my intercourse with him, not only personally but officially as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I have always found him ready and willing to give all the information within his power in reference to any matter whatsoever about which he was interrogated. There can be no question as to his entire willingness at all times to furnish our committee with such information as he possessed, and he did furnish it, and that, too, in a courteous manner. The trouble is that he did not have all the information that was asked of him. He is an able, honest, and efficient official. I believe that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER] will cure every defect, and will enable this Congress to ascertain to a cent to whom this appropriation goes. The only question now is whether we shall pay those citizens of the United States who have been summoned by marshals to discharge certain duties and who have discharged those duties, many of them being poor men.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TARNSEY). The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] to strike out lines 11 and 21, inclusive, on page 40.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Has the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER] been agreed to? There has been no vote upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair when it was offered.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. There was no motion put to the committee.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I understood the chairman of the subcommittee to accept the amendment, and that it was adopted.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I desire to say that there was a motion made to strike out the paragraph, and then there was another proposition to amend the paragraph. Before the motion to amend can be declared to be adopted it must be voted upon while the other motion is pending.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. To settle all doubt, I call for a vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I ask that that amendment be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 21, on page 40, insert the following proviso:
"Provided, That the Attorney-General shall report to Congress the payments made under this paragraph, to whom paid, and for what purpose or service."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote upon that.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New Hampshire is to the original text.

Mr. BYNUM. The vote should first be taken on the motion to perfect the text.

The question was taken; and the amendment of Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire was agreed to.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, as the amendment which has just been agreed to obviates some of the objections I had to the paragraph, I withdraw my motion to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to perfect the text by striking out the words "hundred and forty thousand dollars," in lines 20 and 21. They are a repetition by a misprint.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection that amendment will be considered as agreed to. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of saying—the gentleman from Georgia having withdrawn his motion to strike out the paragraph—on the real, substantial, permanent, patent excuse or reason that the amendment of the gentleman from New Hampshire has been adopted, and as we are to pass on, as peace broods over the House, and gentlemen have got themselves into the RECORD, so that they can go, if they want to, in the sweet by and by or hereafter, so that they can "catch them coming and going," and say they were for or against the proposition—"you pays your money and takes your choice"—being in that blissful condition, I am ready that the Clerk, so far as I am concerned, shall read. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For 1892, $232.50.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. TRACEY. I would like to offer an amendment before we reach the next paragraph.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I offer an amendment on page 48, after line 8.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 48, after line 8, insert:

"To pay the claims of Charles Morgan, C. B. Payne, and the Southern Steamship Company, audited and reported to the Forty-sixth Congress; the claims of Charles Morgan and M. C. Mordecai, audited and reported to the Forty-eighth Congress, being for allowance for one month's extra pay as United States mail contractors, $17,510.83, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. While I am in favor of paying these claims, if subject to the point of order I feel it my duty to make the point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. I am opposed to paying these claims.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to hear the gentleman on the point of order. I want to know where it is.

Mr. DINGLEY. Has the amendment been read?

Mr. DOCKERY. Reserve every point of order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I make the point of order that there is no law under which they can be paid.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Why, in answer to that, Mr. Chairman, I have the law here.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is the point of order reserved? I have not heard it read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order.

Mr. DOCKERY. I make the point of order under clause 2 of Rule XXI. I want to make every point of order that may be made.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I understand that these gentlemen are catching at a straw. I will show them what it is before I get through.

I will say, in answer to the gentleman in charge of the bill, that these are all accounts allowed by the statutes of the United States, under a law which authorized the Postmaster-General to allow a month's extra pay to a railway mail contractor when he suspended his contract, and the letter that I have sent to the desk shows that the Postmaster-General allowed these contractors one month's extra pay. It shows more than that, Mr. Chairman; that these accounts have gone to the Auditor and been ascertained and certified to Congress as lawful and right and equitable.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the letter from the Auditor.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE AUDITOR OF THE TREASURY
FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., June 12, 1894.

SIR: In reply to your request contained in your indorsement on the inclosed list of claims, to be informed whether or not "these claims have been paid in whole or in part by the Confederate States, and if said claims are now justly due to parties," I have the honor to inform you that a careful examination of the Confederate records, now in the custody of this office, fails to disclose that any part of said claims was paid by the Confederate States government.

There can be no question as to the legality of these claims, based, as they are, upon the orders of the Postmaster-General, issued under authority vested in him by the terms of the contract, and in view of the fact that the Supreme Court has decided that the suspension of contracts for service in the Confederate States carries with it a month's extra pay as if the service were discontinued. (Wallace, 8, page 38.)

The claims of Charles Morgan, C. B. Payne and the Southern Steamship Company were reported to the Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh Congresses, and that of Charles Morgan to the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses, also.

The claim of M. C. Mordecai was reported to the Forty-seventh, Forty-eighth, and Forty-ninth Congresses.

The following footnotes appear in Executive Documents No. 20, second session, Forty-sixth Congress, and No. 23, first session, Forty-seventh Congress:

"First. These six items are incident to service on mail routes in Southern States, discontinued because of the rebellion, being in the nature of damages by reason of such discontinuance. The accounts for the original service are suspended in this office, waiting additional legislation.

"A doubt has arisen as to the propriety of reporting these allowances, but as they have been certified to this office since the date of the act approved June 14, 1878, they are submitted herewith."

"Second. These six claims are based on the condition in all mail contracts 'that the Postmaster-General may curtail or discontinue the service on whole or in part, he allowing one month's extra pay on the amount dispensed with.' The amount due for service performed under each contract has been paid in full, with the exception of the first, which, with all other ante bellum mail service, is waiting action by Congress."

In explanation of the doubt expressed in the first note above quoted, one of my predecessors, in a letter to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, wrote as follows: "The doubt referred to in this note related solely to the propriety of reporting claims for one month's extra pay, while the accounts for the original service were suspended in this office awaiting legislation, it in no wise affects their validity and integrity, and does not arise under any law."

The question whether or not a claim for one month's extra pay, under the provisions of the contract, in the absence of any order from the Postmaster-General authorizing its payment, and of evidence that service was performed to the date of its suspension, heretofore raised in this office, remains unsettled, but that can in no sense affect the validity of these claims, as orders were issued by the Postmaster-General authorizing the payment of one month's extra pay, and evidence of service to the date of discontinuance furnished in each case.

Very respectfully,

GEO. A. HOWARD, Auditor.

Hon. L. F. LIVINGSTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, the Auditor, Mr. Howard, quotes the fact, and gives you the law and the date of its passage.

Mr. DINGLEY. But he does not take into account an act of war, which practically suspended these contracts.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, this act was passed since the war. It was passed in 1878, and authorized the Postmaster-General to do this thing. The Postmaster-General had suspended these contracts. These accounts were submitted to the Auditor, who passed on them and sent them to Congress, and they have been in this Hall and upon the floor of this House and in the committee since the Forty-sixth, the Forty-seventh, and the Forty-eighth Congresses; and I desire, Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of the committee, to remind them that these four claimants are not at all associated with a lot of claims that Mr. Reagan got into trouble with on the floor of the House many years ago. There are only four of them; and I send this letter to the Clerk's desk and ask that it be read.

Mr. DINGLEY. How many are there behind that?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. There are no more behind that. The gentleman is getting these confused with a different sort of claims altogether.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF AUDITOR FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1895.

SIR: In reply to your letter of this date I have the honor to inform you that the four claims named are for one month's extra pay on discontinuance of service, and are all of that class of claims now pending.

Very respectfully,

WM. G. CRAWFORD,
Deputy Auditor for Post-Office Department.

Hon. W. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, there are but four of this class of claims unpaid.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to hear the gentleman from Kentucky on the point of order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I have an impression on my mind that at one time the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] who sits before me, as Chairman of the committee, had some such claim before us, and I do not know upon what ground it was decided. I am in the attitude that I believe that these claims ought to be paid; but the committee having reported against them, it is my duty to raise the question of order. I ask the gentleman from Missouri to make a statement.

Mr. DOCKERY. I remember very distinctly that when presiding over the Committee of the Whole in a former Congress I sustained a point of order that was made against a claim presented on behalf of Mr. Mordecai, though I do not now recall upon what ground. My recollection is that some time after the war an appropriation of about $375,000 was made to pay this class of antebellum claims, but that, in the administration of that appropriation, some doubts arose as to whether or not the Confederate government had not paid a part of the claims. Possibly there was a suspicion of fraud in connection with some of the claims—not these particular ones, however—and, if I remember right, a subsequent statute was enacted forbidding any further payment of those claims; but in the hurry incident to the presentation of the question a moment ago I have been unable to find the statute. I believe, however, that such a statute exists.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I think that if there was any statute of that kind the Auditor would not have overlooked it.

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, I do not assert positively that there is such a statute, but that is my recollection. I hope that this paragraph and the amendment will be allowed to go over, with the point of order pending, until the conclusion of the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I hope the gentleman will consent to that.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I will consent that this shall go over until the other parts of the bill are acted upon.

Mr. DOCKERY. With the point of order pending.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 48, line 8, insert the following:

"Senate and House of Representatives: To enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House borne on the annual and session rolls on the 1st day of February, 1895, including the Capitol police and Official Reporters of the Senate and House, for extra services during the Fifty-third Congress, a sum equal to one month's pay, at the compensation then paid them by law, the same to be made immediately available."

Mr. SAYERS. I understand that this is the ordinary resolution for an extra month's pay that has been adopted heretofore at the short sessions of Congress.

Mr. TRACEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAYERS. I will ask the gentleman to let that lie over until we get through with the bill. There are several persons who are endeavoring to get special appropriations independent of this, and I do not think that, in justice to ourselves, we should allow an extra month's pay and then permit certain gentlemen to come and get appropriations for five hundred or a thousand dollars extra. I do not make any objection to the gentleman's amendment, but I ask him to let it lie over until we can see how the matter stands.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, this is the proper place for the amendment to come in, and I have offered it after consultation with the committee.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not object to it, but I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over for the present without prejudice.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, with the understanding that no point of order is raised against the amendment I will not object.

The CHAIRMAN. No point of order has been raised.

Mr. TRACEY. At any rate, the amendment has been discussed, so that if an attempt were made now to raise the point of order it would come too late. With the understanding, then, that no point is or can be made against it, I will agree that the amendment shall go over, as suggested by the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY] may be laid aside until the committee has gone through the bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I desire to add as an amendment to the amendment of my colleague [Mr. TRACEY] the following: "and employees of the law library of Congress."

Mr. SAYERS. I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY] has already been laid aside informally.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Well, I desire to have my amendment follow his and be considered immediately after it.

Mr. DOCKERY. With the point of order pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has been made on the amendment to the amendment, but no point of order has been made on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY], and that amendment having been discussed upon its merits, of course no point of order will be entertained by the Chair when it comes up for consideration.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 48, after line 21, insert:

"To pay $2,000 to Mrs. Celeste H. McCoy, of St. Paul, Minn., widow of the Hon. W. D. McCoy, deceased, late minister and consul-general of the United States to Liberia."

Mr. SAYERS. I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a brief statement. I offer this amendment at the request of my colleague, Dr. EVERETT, who is unable to be here to-day. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read the report of the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, by whom this appropriation is recommended.

The Clerk read as follows:

The subcommittee, to whom was referred H. R. 7964, for the relief of Mrs. C. H. McCoy, widow of W. D. McCoy, beg leave to report as follows: It appears from the records of the State Department that W. D. McCoy was appointed minister to Liberia January 11, 1892; that he offered his resignation February 6, 1893; that it was received March 16, but never formally accepted; and that he died of a bilious attack resulting from the climate at Monrovia May 15, 1893.

Mr. McCoy was allowed salary from the 20th of January, 1892, to the 15th of May, 1893, at the rate of $4,000 per annum, aggregating $5,283.40; his widow has received, under section 1749, Revised Statutes, $549, being salary at that rate for fifty days' transit time from the 16th of May to the 4th of July, 1893. She now applies for one year's salary, and her petition to that effect states her to be in greatly reduced circumstances.

The precedents in this case are thoroughly set forth in the report (No. 1061) of Hon. J. B. MCCREARY in the Fifty-second Congress on H. R. 5227, for the relief of Mary A. Swift. There have been ten instances since March 3, 1879, two of them the widows of ministers to Liberia, where varying sums have been paid under similar circumstances.

Your subcommittee therefore report the bill, recommending that it be amended by striking out the word "four" and inserting the word "two" in line 5, thus giving Mrs. McCoy six months' salary in addition to the sum already received, this report according with the greater number of precedents.

Respectfully submitted.

WILLIAM EVERETT,
H. ST. G. TUCKER,
WILLIAM F. DRAPER, Subcommittee.

CHAS. E. HOOKER,
A. C. HARMER,

J. VAN VOORHIS.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, as I have said, I offer this amendment at the request of my colleague. It has been approved by a majority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and I hope that the gentleman from Minnesota, who represents the district to which Mrs. McCoy belongs, will be allowed to say a word or two in relation to this matter.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HATCH). The Chair desires to hear from the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] on the point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. There is no law authorizing the payment of money for the purpose indicated. It will be a mere gratuity and can not properly be put upon an appropriation bill. If there can be shown any law which in the remotest degree authorizes this appropriation I will admit that my point of order is unfounded.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Texas whether there is any provision of any statute authorizing the appropriation reported in this bill by the Committee on Appropriations?

To pay the widow of M. B. Wright, late a Representative in Congress from the State of Pennsylvania, $1,699.82.

Mr. SAYERS. That is subject to a point of order; any gentleman can make it if he chooses.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think it is, because it follows an unbroken precedent, and the amendment to it is of the same character. If the Committee on Appropriations can report an appropriation to pay a claim simply upon precedent, certainly the Committee of the Whole can entertain an amendment of the same character.

Mr. SAYERS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has made the point of order that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts is not in order, because there is no law authorizing the payment of the amount named. The Chair has overruled the point of order. The gentleman from Texas has appealed from the decision of the Chair; and the question now is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to be heard a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, if any gentleman can show any authority whatever in law for making this appropriation I will withdraw my appeal. But there is no law in existence which either directly or indirectly authorizes this appropriation. It is a mere gratuity.

Mr. WEADOCK. What is the amendment?

Mr. SAYERS. It proposes to pay the widow of a minister to Liberia $2,000.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If authority of law is required for all these appropriations, then four-fifths of this bill would go out.

Mr. SAYERS. Let them go out.

Mr. BOATNER. Does not the report show that this officer resigned and that his resignation was not accepted, and that this appropriation is to pay the amount of his salary between the date of his resignation and his death?

Mr. SAYERS. No, sir.

Mr. BOATNER. I so understood.

Several MEMBERS. Let the amendment be again read.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Several MEMBERS. Let the report be read.

Mr. MOSES. I object to reading the whole report again.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, while I think the point is probably well taken, I wish to say that this is a very meritorious case.

Mr. SAYERS. Let us first decide the question of order.

Mr. BYNUM. This officer, at the time of his appointment, was a resident of the district I represent. He was an educated gentleman and a creditable representative of his country and an honor to his race. He died in a foreign country at his post of duty, and his family were thus bereft and left in limited, if not distressed circumstances, and I should like to see this appropriation made. He was a most estimable colored gentleman. His body was brought home, whether at the expense of his family or the Government I do not know, but presume at the expense of the former. This appropriation would, in my judgment, meet general approval.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question being taken; there were on a division (called for by Mr. SAYERS)—ayes 104, noes 30.

Mr. SAYERS. I call for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of no quorum, or does he desire a vote by tellers?

Mr. SAYERS. I have called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered; only 20 voting therefor.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers are refused; and the decision of the Chair is sustained by the Committee of the Whole. [Applause.] The question is now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. O'NEIL].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "two" and inserting "one," which will give to this widow one-fourth of the annual salary.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. I accept that amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts as modified, it was agreed to.

Mr. TERRY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of line 21, page 48, the following: "And to pay W. Jasper Blackburn balance of salary due him as member of the Fortieth Congress from the State of Louisiana, $5,597.23."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE and Mr. SAYERS raised a point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. TERRY. I suggest that this amendment should come in after the amendment adopted on motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. O'NEIL].

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to be heard on the question?

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to argue the point, if the gentleman from Kentucky does not.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. This is a claim, as I understand, on account of salary as member of the Fortieth Congress. It comes here without any information of any sort as to why payment was not made. Unless there was some good reason to the contrary, this gentleman would have obtained his salary under the statute at that time. I therefore raise the point of order that there is no law for the payment of this salary. If there had been, it would undoubtedly have been paid at the time.

Mr. SAYERS. If the Chair will indulge me, I will furnish the authority in a few moments. I have sent for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that so far as the point of order is concerned I do not think it can be sustained. We will undertake to show that under the law this man was entitled to the money which is proposed to be appropriated by this amendment; and it does not detract from that right that Congress has heretofore not made arrangements to pay him.

Now, in regard to the claim not having been presented before, let me state that it has been sent here to the Representatives from the district wherein Mr. Blackburn resides, Congress after Congress, for from fourteen to twenty years or more. This old man, now gray-headed and in want, has been knocking at the doors of the American Congress for what is justly due him and which has been withheld from him all these years, and has not been able under any circumstances heretofore to get payment of his claim.

The Committee on Claims, to which this was referred, in their report use this language:

Your committee have carefully considered the same, and find that W. Jasper Blackburn was a member of the Fortieth Congress and as such was entitled to the sum of $10,000 salary, and that he has only received the sum of $4,402.77, and is therefore entitled to the balance, to wit, the sum of $5,597.23. It also appears in evidence before the committee that Nathaniel Boyden was a member of the same Congress, and was entitled to the same sum, and that he only received the sum of $4,347.22, and is entitled to the further sum of $5,652.78. The said Nathaniel Boyden is dead.

Your committee found the law to be clearly in favor of the payment of these sums (see resolutions, July 12, 1863, 12 Stat. L., page 624), and so far as your committee have been able to ascertain these are the only cases since the passage of this resolution where the law has not been followed.

In that connection I wish to read also a letter from the Treasury Department bearing upon this question:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 18, 1892.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 13th instant to the Secretary of the Treasury, asking for information in regard to the compensation of Hon. W. Jasper Blackburn, M. C., from Louisiana, referred to this office, it appears from the records of this Department that Mr. Blackburn received mileage for both terms of the Fortieth Congress, amounting to $1,865.60, and salary for ten months and seventeen days, viz, from April 17, 1888, to March 3, 1889, inclusive, amounting to $4,402.77. For the full period of the Congress he would have been entitled, in addition to what he received as set forth above, to salary from March 4, 1887, to April 16, 1888, or thirteen months and thirteen days, amounting to $5,597.23.

Respectfully, yours,

GEO. P. FISHER, First Auditor.

Hon. B. H. BURN,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Arkansas inform the Chair why this money was not paid heretofore?

Mr. TERRY. I am unable to inform the Chair why it was not paid, unless it be that the persons he relied upon to present it did not press the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he serve in that Congress?

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman from Arkansas will allow me, I will read from the RECORD showing the facts in this case.

Mr. BOATNER. I wish to be heard myself on this question before the Chair rules on the question of order.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, this question was up for consideration at the second session of the present Congress, upon a resolution similar to that now proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas. It was then offered by the same gentleman who offers it now. Upon a point of order suggested by me the Chairman decided that the amendment could not be considered, and it was ruled out.

The facts of the case are these: Mr. Blackburn was elected to Congress on the 17th of April, 1868, and received pay from that date until the conclusion of his term on the 4th of March following. The object of this resolution, as was the object of the one declared out of order on the occasion to which I have referred, was to provide for back pay from the 4th day of March, 1867, up to the 17th of April, 1868.

Mr. BRETZ. That is, pay before he was elected?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes; from March 4, 1867, to April 17, 1868.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Upon what theory does the claimant demand this pay?

Mr. SAYERS. For instance, I will state, if a person is elected a member of Congress his salary begins to run not from the time he is elected—

Mr. CATCHINGS. But it does.

Mr. SAYERS. I know; but the theory of the gentleman from Arkansas is that it runs from the commencement of the term; that is to say, for the entire time.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Does the gentleman from Texas mean to say that if I should die, for instance, now, and a man is elected to succeed me, that he would receive full pay for the entire term?

Mr. SAYERS. Oh, no.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I understood the gentleman to state that Mr. SAYERS. Not so. I wish the committee to understand the proposition.

Mr. BOATNER. I think the gentleman wants the committee rather to misunderstand it.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman will find that a member does not draw pay under such circumstances from the beginning of the term, but from the time his predecessor ceases to serve.

Mr. HAUGEN. How would that be in the case of this amendment?

Mr. SAYERS. There was no representation from this district.

Mr. MARSH. Why?

Mr. SAYERS. Because the State was under reconstruction.

I read now from the statement of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] himself, who now offers the amendment. He says:

The term of Congress to which this man was elected began March 4, 1867. Now, he was not elected until April 17, 1868, and from April, 1868, until the close of the term he received his pay.

The object of this amendment, it will be seen, is to give him pay for the entire term, even when he was not a member of Congress and while the State was not permitted representation.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman from Texas allow me to ask him a question right there? Is the gentleman from Texas aware that a member of the Fortieth Congress was elected from that district in 1866 and the Congress of the United States refused to recognize the validity of that election?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. BOATNER. And directed another election to be held.

Mr. SAYERS. Yes.

Mr. BOATNER. That election was held in April, 1867, pursuant to the provisions of an act of Congress.

Mr. SAYERS. April, 1868.

Mr. BOATNER. April, 1868, and the member was seated as a member of the Fortieth Congress?

Mr. SAYERS. That is my recollection.

Mr. BOATNER. He did not receive the salary allowed by the law, which then stood exactly as it stands to-day, because the accounting officers of the Treasury misconstrued the law. This House has reversed that construction and the Senate has reversed that construction by subsequently paying the full salary for the full term to every other member who was elected under similar circumstances except this old man, who now lives in Little Rock.

Mr. SAYERS. I would like to conclude.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. How was the point of order decided?

Mr. SAYERS. The point of order was decided against the amendment.

Mr. TERRY. I desire to say in regard to the point of order being decided in that way, that when I went to the Chairman afterwards, with the law on the subject, he said, "Oh, you know what I was put up there for!" [Laughter.]

Mr. CATCHINGS. Who was the Chairman who made that ruling?

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM]. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the amendment is not subject to the point of order, then, in my judgment, it is useless to propose any point of order to any amendment that can be offered to this bill, and any claim which has been or which has not been reported to this House by the Committee on Claims can be offered to this bill, and if a majority of the committee see proper to put it on it will be in order.

Mr. PAYNE. That has just been decided, has it not? It comes pretty close to it.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the decision of the Chairman, made on the occasion referred to, be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question that under the act of 1863 a member elected to fill a vacancy is entitled to salary from the beginning of the vacancy of the term; but the question in this case is whether that statute is modified by the act of 1868, which admitted Representatives from Louisiana on certain conditions. The act of 1868 provided that Representatives from Louisiana and other States should be admitted from those States upon the acceptance of the provisions of the fourteenth amendment, etc. The Chair is of the opinion that the act of 1863 is modified by the act of 1868.

That is, while the act of 1868 entitles, under ordinary circumstances, a Representative elected to draw the salary from the beginning of the vacancy, that that act is not applicable to this case. The question here is whether there was a vacancy prior to the election of Mr. Blackburn in 1868. The Chair does not desire to go outside of the act and to express an opinion upon the legality of the act, or anything of that kind. The Chair accepts the act as it finds it, and as construed by the Congress at that time. Under that construction the State was not entitled to representation until the proclamation was issued by the President in July, 1868; and on examining the record the Chair finds that this member was sworn in on the day of the proclamation by the President.

The Chair is inclined to think that the act of 1863 is modified so far as the State of Louisiana is concerned by the act of 1868, and that the term of the gentleman really began on the date this member was sworn in, and that, under the rules affecting amendments on appropriation bills, no law exists authorizing payment of salary prior to his admission. Further, there is no question but what this claim is an equitable claim to be presented to Congress. The question here as to whether, under the rules as affecting appropriation bills, there is any clear authority of law for the payment of the same, the Chair is of the opinion that that is a somewhat doubtful question; and at least the Chair gives the benefit of the doubt to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TERRY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to state the proposition of law that is involved in this matter. The pay of a member of Congress dates, not from the day of his election, nor from the day of his taking his seat, but it dates from the beginning of the Congress to which he was elected.

Mr. BROSIUS. May I inquire whether that applies to a case where a man is elected to fill a vacancy?

Mr. TERRY. There is a provision in the act of 1863 which covers it.

Mr. BRETZ. There was no vacancy at that time in this case. The State was not entitled to representation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to suggest this inquiry to the gentleman from Arkansas: Suppose one of the Territories were admitted to this Congress to-day, would the salary of the member admitted from that Territory go back to the beginning of this Congress?

Mr. TERRY. I do not know how it would be in regard to a Territory. Previous to their admission as States they are represented by Delegates, who draw pay the same as members of Congress.

Mr. HAYES. That is not an analogous case.

Mr. TERRY. I do not think that is an analogous case at all, but the rule has been as I have stated, and it has uniformly been held that way. Now, the point that they try to make against this old man's claim is that his State was not readmitted into the Union until June, 1868. That is the ground upon which the honorable Chairman of the Committee of the Whole ruled it out before; but to show how inconsistent that ruling was, this member's pay was dated back to the 16th of April, 1868, and his State was not readmitted until June, 1868. Now, in the States of South Carolina, Alabama, Tennessee, Virginia, and all the other States that passed through reconstruction their members were paid, not from the times their States were readmitted, but from the beginning of the Congress to which they were elected.

It was only a few years ago that Benjamin F. Rice, who was a Senator from the State of Arkansas, was paid back to the 4th of March, 1867, when the State of Arkansas was not admitted into the Union until June 23, 1868. There has never been a case, Mr. Chairman, that has been presented to Congress in which they have not allowed the member to be paid back to the beginning of the Congress to which he was elected, irrespective of the time when his State was admitted.

Now, sir, if there ever was a meritorious claim it is the claim of this old man. He belonged not to the household of my political faith; but when I came here, I told him that I thought his claim was just, and I would advocate it upon this floor. The old man is decrepit and poverty stricken, and here, with this amount of money due him from the great Government of the United States, we find members of the Appropriations Committee raising all kinds of technical objections to try to beat the old man out of his pay, and yet they have embraced in their appropriation bill thousands upon thousands of dollars not authorized by any existing law. "Consistency, thou art a jewel" not possessed by those honorable gentlemen of the Appropriations Committee!

I say, Mr. Chairman, that it is a shame upon the American Congress that this old man has not been paid long before this. I yield to my friend from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] to further discuss the point of order, because he has the authorities before him. I will say that on no mere technicality is it subject to the point of order, and it is not under that statement of the gentleman from Texas, for his point is not good. He was not urging any point, but just attempting to bulldoze the Chair, so as to get him to sustain his view of it.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to submit an inquiry to the gentleman from Louisiana just as he begins. The difficulty I have in this case is this: Could a vacancy exist in the representation of a State that was not entitled to be represented in Congress? In other words, I believe this gentleman, Mr. Blackburn, was elected a Representative from the State of Louisiana when that State was not entitled to representation at all under the theory adopted by the Federal Government.

Mr. TERRY. According to Lincoln's theory of this matter, the State of Louisiana, and none of the rest of them, was ever out of the Union. That was the point that Mr. Lincoln made and the theory acted upon by the dominant party all through the war.

Mr. BAILEY. The point to which I desire to call your attention is: Could any member from the State of Louisiana have been qualified as a member of this House before this man Blackburn took the oath of office?

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to address myself to the judgment of the Chair as a lawyer, and I ask the same deliberate consideration of the case from the Chair as if he were sitting as a judge of the court, because the question involves everything to the party who is the beneficiary of the amendment. Now, the only question before the Chair is the point of order. The gentleman from Texas raises the point of order that this amendment is in conflict with the second section of Rule XXI, which reads as follows:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

Then I say, Mr. Chairman, the provisions of the law existing while the Fortieth Congress was sitting, which law is unchanged to this day in letter or syllable, authorized the appropriation of that money in the appropriation bill by that Congress which is in order here to-day. I refer the gentleman to the law under which this appropriation can be made. Section 14 of the act of 1866 fixes the salaries of members of Congress. It reads as follows:

That the compensation of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress shall be $5,000 per annum, to be paid from the first day of the present Congress, and in addition thereto mileage at the rate of 20 cents per mile, to be estimated by the usual route of travel going to and returning, etc.

That, Mr. Chairman, is the law to-day, and under the uniform construction of that law by this House members elected have been considered as entitled to receive compensation for the term and not from the day of their election, unless they succeeded some one who had been elected, in which case, under a law adopted in 1863, they received compensation from the time the compensation of their predecessor ceased. I call the attention of the Chair to the resolution:

That in all cases of vacancies in either House of Congress, by death or otherwise, of any member elected or appointed thereto after the commencement of the Congress to which he shall have been elected or appointed, the person afterwards elected or appointed to fill such vacancy shall be compensated or paid from the time the compensation of his predecessor ceased.

Now, my friend from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] wants to know if this member-elect was entitled to receive compensation for the time that the State was not entitled to representation. Possibly not; but, sir, no such case is presented here. The whole theory upon which the secession of the Southern States was forcibly prevented was that they had no right to secede; that the Union was one and indissoluble; that no State could withdraw itself from it; and upon that theory the war was begun and successfully prosecuted and the ordinances of secession of the several States deemed and treated as if they were void.

Proceeding upon that theory, the President of the United States, immediately after the cessation of hostilities, took steps to reorganize the State governments in the several States. The government of Louisiana was reorganized. A governor, a legislature, and State officers were elected, and in November, 1866, the State of Louisiana exercised her constitutional right to elect a member of Congress from the Fifth district to this body. Early in 1867 the Congress of the United States suspended the effect of that reorganization and denied the right of the member thus elected to a seat in this body; not because the State was not a State in the American Union, or was not entitled to representation here, but because the steps which had been taken to obtain that representation did not meet the judgment and approval of the then Congress of the United States upon the theory that the State constitution of that and other Southern States were not republican in form. So in 1867 the reconstruction act was passed. The State of Louisiana was directed and authorized to form a State government, and in April, 1868, she elected a member to the Fortieth Congress, not to the unexpired term of that Congress.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Had a member been elected from that district to the same Congress before that time?

Mr. BOATNER. A member had been elected from that district before that time to that Congress.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then there were two persons from that district who were entitled to pay as members of that Congress, two persons entitled to $10,000 each?

Mr. BOATNER. Not at all, because Congress refused to let the other gentleman take his seat, refused to recognize the validity of his election, and therefore he is considered as if never elected.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. What right had Congress to do that?

Mr. BOATNER. It did it in the exercise of its legislative discretion, just exactly as Congress would have the right to decide that there had been no election in your district.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But upon what theory did they do it?

Mr. BOATNER. Upon the theory that the State governments which had been established in those Southern States after the war were not republican in form, and that they were not properly entitled to representation in the Congress of the United States.

Now, I want to call the attention of my friend and of those who are talking as if Louisiana and Arkansas were not in the Union to the language of the statutes which permitted those States to have representation in this body. Those statutes nowhere claimed that those States were not in the American Union. They nowhere claimed that they were not States. They nowhere claimed that they were not entitled to representation in Congress. On the contrary, they recognized the right of those States to representation by prescribing the conditions upon which they could obtain that representation.

There was no contention that Louisiana or Arkansas was not entitled to representation here. The contention was that the people of the States had not conformed to the provisions of the law in such a manner as to lawfully entitle them to have representation upon this floor. When gentlemen ask if this man is to be paid for the time which ran before his election, they must certainly be ignorant of the fact that the Representatives from the State of Arkansas, both Senators and members of this House, occupying exactly the same position as the claimant here, the members from Tennessee, the members from Virginia, the members from Florida, the members from Alabama, the members from South Carolina, and from other Southern States, who were elected under exactly the same conditions, were paid by subsequent Congresses and by the Congresses sitting immediately subsequent; reversing the action of the accounting officers of the previous Congresses in refusing to recognize the rights of those members to receive pay from the commencement of their terms instead of from the date of their election.

Mr. TUCKER. I want to say to my friend that, so far as the State of Virginia is concerned, no pay was given to the men who were elected under the circumstances to which he has made reference.

Mr. TERRY. Here is a statement taken from the record that the members from Virginia were seated here in 1870 and paid.

Mr. TUCKER. Well, that is not true. The Hon. Alexander H. H. Stuart, the Hon. Robert Y. Conrad, and the whole delegation were elected, but they were never paid.

Mr. BOATNER. Here is the official record from the Department, which says they were.

Mr. TUCKER. It is not correct. In fact, I was asked by one of those gentlemen to introduce a bill in relation to this matter.

Mr. BOATNER. Well, they may have been unfortunate, as this old gentleman was. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is asked why this claim has not been more vigorously pressed. Soon after the expiration of his term as a member of Congress he became the subject of domestic affliction, and was for a time almost unbalanced in his mind. Since that time he has pressed it to the full extent of his ability. He has had it here in the hands of his Representative. He has had it here in the hands of a claim agent. He has done all that he could do. He has persistently and continuously asked Congress to give him relief.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I submit that this amendment is to carry into effect the provisions of existing law; that is to say, we hold that the amount claimed is due this gentleman as a part of his salary as a member of the Fortieth Congress. If it is not due him, then there is no claim. But the contention is that this money is due as the balance of his salary; and that is a question, Mr. Chairman, for the House to decide, not for the Chair. The amendment contemplates the execution of the provisions of an existing law—the payment of the balance of the salary of a member of Congress. Whether that balance is due is a question of fact and of law for the House to decide. But certainly the amendment proposes to execute the provisions of law which existed at the time this man was a member and exist now.

Mr. HUDSON. Does not the amendment propose to pay this man for thirteen months prior to the time he was elected and before he was even a candidate, when he was nothing but a private citizen?

Mr. BOATNER. It does.

Mr. HUDSON. Upon what ground should a man receive salary for a time when he was a mere citizen, when he had no claim to a seat in Congress?

Mr. BOATNER. That goes into the merits of the question.

Mr. HUDSON. It is the merits of the question I am talking about.

Mr. BOATNER. But I will say to my friend that this claim is based upon the ground that the law pays a member of Congress his salary for the term. This man was elected a member of the Fortieth Congress and was entitled to receive the compensation fixed by law in accordance with the terms of the Constitution. That compensation was not paid by the day or by the month or by the year, but for the term at the rate of $5,000 per annum.

Mr. HUDSON. If the gentleman's position is true, would not a man elected a member of Congress only three months before the expiration of the term be entitled to the full salary of $5,000?

Mr. BOATNER. Under the plain provisions of law as read a few moments ago, if the election under which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HUDSON] now holds his seat should be decided by this House to have been void, if it should be held that there had been no lawful election in his district and he is not entitled to the seat, and if the question should be referred back to the people of his district to elect a new member, then, although the election might not take place until thirty days before the expiration of the term, the man elected would be entitled to the salary for the term.

Mr. HUDSON. You do not mean he would be entitled to the full salary as a matter of right, but simply as a matter of precedent.

Mr. BOATNER. As a matter of law under the statute enacted in 1863, which has now stood upon the statute book for more than thirty years. And upon exactly the same principle, if the sitting member dies, and a month afterwards his successor is elected, that successor draws the salary back to the death of his predecessor.

Now, in this case the State of Louisiana was entitled to representation, but her people had not put her in such condition that the House of Representatives would seat her representative. She was still a State of the American Union; she had never been out of it since her admission into the Union, and in 1866 she was entitled under the Constitution of the United States to representation in this body if she would conform to the other provisions of that instrument. The Congress then sitting decided that she had not so conformed, and would not seat the member she elected—required her to have another election and elect another member. The member who was first elected was not paid. Then as a matter of law and logic, and justice under the law, the member who was last elected was entitled to the salary for the full term of the existence of the Fortieth Congress.

Mr. BAILEY. Allow me a question right there. I have never investigated this matter, and I wish to ask the gentleman whether, prior to the joint resolution of 1863, it was customary if a member died to pay his successor from the beginning of the term?

Mr. BOATNER. I have not made any investigation of that question.

Mr. HAYES. In such case payment was not made from the beginning of the term, but from the date of the death of the member's predecessor.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I must insist that it does not appear that the salary in these cases is paid for the full term, but, according to the plain language of the statute, "per annum," and it must begin from the beginning of the service.

Mr. HAYES. No, that is not the construction which has been put upon the law. The Congressional term is an entirety; and if a man who is elected while the term is running has had no legal predecessor, then he is entitled to pay from the beginning of the term. If there has been a legal predecessor, the incumbent is entitled to pay from the time that the service of his predecessor ceased.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, as I understand, the joint resolution of 1863 was only necessary in order to give the successor the salary from the time his predecessor ceased to draw the salary, because, under the statement which is now made, both members could not draw the salary from the beginning of the term, and neither could have drawn it for the interim except under the statute of 1863.

Mr. BOATNER. Let me call my friend's attention to this fact, that at the time the act of 1863 was passed the act of 1866 was not in existence.

Mr. BAILEY. That is true. But the act of 1856 was.

Mr. BOATNER. But that cuts no figure in this argument at all. I rest my case and appeal to the judgment of the Chair and members of this House on this proposition, which I believe to be unassailable: That on the 4th day of November, 1866, the State of Louisiana was entitled to elect a member of this body from the Fifth district of that State; that if the member so elected was not seated, or could not be by the then Fortieth Congress because of any obstacle that Congress found sufficient to prevent it, the setting aside of that election created a vacancy in the literal terms of the act of 1863; and under the terms of that act, a vacancy having been created, the member elected at a lawful election, which Congress recognized as such, is entitled to the salary back to the commencement of the term.

I submit that the legal effect of that proposition can not be assailed. If that be so, then this member is entitled to receive the salary which the Constitution says shall be ascertained by law and paid for his services. It has not been paid in this case. The reason it was not paid was because the accounting officers of the Treasury misconstrued the law. But Congress has repeatedly decided otherwise and has shown that there was a misconstruction of the law on the part of the officers of the Department by paying members elected under the same circumstances the exact amount that we ask to be paid to this old man. And I wonder that the gentleman from Texas, I wonder that fair-minded men anywhere who want to do the right thing, and who are willing that the citizens of the United States shall have their rights under the Constitution and the law of the land, I wonder that they should rise upon this floor and by a forced construction prevent this body from doing justice to one of its citizens who stands as sadly in need of his rights as any other member of this House, or as any man in this country anywhere.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss the point of order which is now pending.

I have no response to make to the somewhat excited peroration of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY], that it is a great shame that men should stand in the way of a raid on the Treasury by raising technical objections, because I know no objection in the law except that which is technical. And my good friend from Arkansas will hereafter see that that sort of argument, on the construction of the rules of the House, while exceedingly eloquent, has no bearing whatever upon the question.

As to my friend from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER], who has expressed surprise that persons should be found on this floor ready to raise a question of order on such propositions, I can only say we are in this attitude: I am in charge of this bill, trying to have it passed according to the rules of the House and the wishes of the committee I represent.

Now, in the first place, Mr. Chairman, this is only a claim at best. Whatever it may be, right or wrong, it is only a claim, and under the rules all claims go for consideration to the Committee on Claims and not to the Committee on Appropriations. This is not a proper bill to put it on, even if it is a just claim, which is shown by the fact that the friends of the measure had it referred to another committee and let it take its chances in that committee with all other claims of every kind against the Government of the United States.

In the second place, it is res adjudicata. It has been brought before the House or the Committee of the Whole and decided to be not in order; in other words, it has been adversely decided, and while of course one Congress can not bind another, it is certainly persuasive if not conclusive. Besides, in this case it has the additional advantage that it was in the present Congress that this adverse action took place and not a preceding Congress.

Mr. BOATNER. If the gentleman from Kentucky will allow me—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. BOATNER. I desire to call his attention to the fact that in this very Congress the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole made a ruling upon a question, and within two weeks afterwards the Speaker made a contrary ruling, reversing him.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. But not on the same question.

Mr. BOATNER. On an exactly similar question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. That may be.

Mr. BOATNER. And the present occupant of the chair can not be bound by a mistake of his predecessor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. That is true. It is not an unusual thing for two tribunals, or the same tribunal trying different cases, to come to very different conclusions, although the facts and the law would seem to be identical; but the decision I refer to was of this very case, on this precise point. But under any circumstances, this party under the law is not entitled to the salary. If granted at all, it would be a mere gratuity. Now, Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Louisiana that this question should be argued as if I should say "your honor" instead of "Mr. Chairman," because on all questions of parliamentary law I make it the rule here to vote on appeal according to what I think the law to be, without regard to partisan advantage.

The gentleman was not entitled to his salary, except from the day on which he was elected or sworn in. Prior to 1856 Representatives were paid a per diem. In 1856 they were paid a salary. Finally, in 1862, a resolution was adopted providing that where a certain member had served, and died or resigned, or there was a vacancy occasioned, his successor should be paid, not from the day upon which he was elected or sworn in, but from the day on which the payment to his predecessor had ceased. That of course was based upon the hypothesis that there was a vacancy in the true sense; that is, an existing office which could be filled, and which had been filled, and he who had filled it ceased to fill it. Now, there was no vacancy here at all. Whatever may have been the status de jure, the Representatives of certain States ceased to represent those States on this floor.

It was a political question, resting with the Congress, as to when that representation should recommence. Whether States were in or out of the Union, whether they were entitled, as a matter of intangible right, under constitutional provision, to representation here or not, practically it was settled that it was a political question to be decided by the Congress of the United States, and not by the President, except as a part of the legislative force of the Government, when representation should commence. And by the acts of the legislative branch of the Government it began, as to Louisiana, in the spring of 1868.

It is not for me to decide who was right in the great controversy between the Congress of the United States and President Johnson, nor is it for us to reopen those great disputes as to whether sovereign States had always remained sovereign, as to whether representation was merely suspended, and by the very act of peace, without any proclamation, they were entitled to be represented here at once, or whether it took some enabling act for them to reestablish themselves with Representatives.

In point of law, in point of fact, the Congress of the United States admitted this gentleman upon the floor of this House as the commencement of the representation of the sovereign State of Louisiana. From that date, and only from that date, did that representation recommence. From the time that the Louisiana Representatives withdrew in accordance with and in obedience to the act of secession of Louisiana, up until that date, Louisiana in point of fact, and in point of statutory law, and in point of recognition by this body, which is the sole judge of the election and qualification of its members, was without representation. There was, therefore, no vacancy in the representation of Louisiana. There was no predecessor whose payment had ceased. There was, therefore, nothing upon which to hang this claim. There is absolutely no peg upon which it can be hung. That representation began at that election. He was paid from that time, and that is his sole claim.

Mr. BOATNER. Will my friend from Kentucky then account in some way for the reasons that induced the Forty-first and Forty-second Congresses to pay the salaries of the Senators and Members from Arkansas, Louisiana, South Carolina, and Florida under similar conditions and taking the view of the law which we now seek to impress upon the House?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I can not undertake to account for why those Congresses did anything. Personally and politically they did very few things that I would approve, and therefore I would feel exceedingly loath, at this late day, to undertake to construe the motives or acts which at the time seemed to me to be unwise.

Mr. BOATNER. I did not ask for the motive, but under what construction of law?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I can only say to my friend that it was probably upon a motive like those which have been so eloquently discussed by my friends from Louisiana and Arkansas, sympathy for some poor fellows who had gotten into a scrape, whom they wanted to pull out. Probably the reconstruction period was over. The gentlemen who had been elected belonged to a party whose domination in the South had passed away. The House was under the control of that party still, and perhaps they felt that they were paying them for the sacrifices they had undergone, for the dangers they had incurred, and all that sort of thing. I am not here, however, to answer that. I do not know. This law which I ask "your honor"—if I may so change the vernacular of the committee—to construe, is as follows:

Whenever a vacancy occurs in either House of Congress, by death or otherwise, of any Member or Delegate elected or appointed thereto, after the commencement of the Congress to which he has been elected or appointed, the person elected or appointed to fill it shall be compensated and paid from the time that the compensation of his predecessor ceased.

There was no predecessor and no vacancy in this case.

Mr. Chairman, under ordinary rules no man is entitled to money, paid by the taxpayers of the country, for a period when he does not serve them. It is an anomalous provision that a member of Congress shall receive pay for a period anterior to his election or anterior to his qualification.

We ought not to increase, we ought not to amplify this anomalous provision by a doubtful construction. So that finally it returns to this: the affirmative is upon them. I put the law and rule of this House, simply to say that, as the committeeman in charge of this bill, I believe that this question ought not to be put to a vote of the House; and I raise a question of order. We stand upon the law. Of the member who desires to vote public money from emotional reasons I have no criticism to make; of the member who fails to draw a distinction between the public money, of which he is trustee, and private funds, of which he has entire control, I have no criticism to make. The simple proposition is, Shall the law and rule of the House be complied with, no matter who the person is who asks an appropriation in violation of it?

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, just a moment. In response to the last statement of the gentleman from Kentucky, which is that their committee wish to guard the Treasury and are not actuated in any way by sympathy, I read in this bill:

To pay the widow of Philip S. Post, late a Representative in Congress from the State of Illinois, $701.91.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. That is the law. We are bound to pay that.

Mr. TERRY (reading):

To pay the widow of G. B. Shaw, late a Representative in Congress from the State of Wisconsin, $3,061.25.

To pay the widow of M. B. Wright, late a Representative in Congress from the State of Pennsylvania, $1,699.82.

Now, I would like to know if they can show any law under which this is done.

Mr. SAYERS. You can make the point of order on all of it, if you desire.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. No, you can not; the law is sufficient; the precedents very numerous.

Mr. TERRY. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the gentleman from Kentucky in charge of this bill differ on that point.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The law is:

In all cases of vacancy in either House, by death or otherwise, of any member elected or appointed thereto after the commencement of the Congress to which he shall have been elected, each person afterwards elected or appointed to fill such vacancy shall be compensated and paid from the time the compensation of his predecessor ceased.

Mr. BOATNER. This goes on to the end of the term.

Mr. CAUSEY. No; it does not.

Mr. BOATNER. That has been the uniform custom of the House.

Mr. TERRY. I would not raise the point of order against anything of this kind, as suggested by the gentleman from Texas. I just wish to show the opinion of some of the gentlemen who had to do with the construction of the law, in which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] says that there is existing law for payment to the widow of a member of Congress for the whole of his unexpired term, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] informs him there is no such law, and yet they have put in their appropriation bills thousands of dollars for such claims. I read from the report made by Senator TELLER, and he certainly knew something about the law. He shows that Senators Rice and McDonald, of Arkansas, were paid back of the time when the States were admitted.

Sawyer of South Carolina was paid back of that date. Spencer of Alabama and Senators Foster and Patterson of Tennessee were all paid back of that time. I read now an extract from the report of Senator TELLER, in which he says:

Your committee finds that the Senators and Representatives from Arkansas were seated in the Senate and House on the 23d of June, 1868, and that the Representatives were paid from the 4th day of March, 1867.

This report shows that the Senators and Representatives from Virginia were seated in the Senate and House on the 27th day of January, 1870, and the Representatives were paid from the 4th day of March, 1869, and the Senators were paid from the 27th of January, 1870.

And all of them were paid from the 4th day of March, 1869; and the Senators, also, were paid from the 4th of March, 1869, although not seated until 27th January, 1870. Hon. G. S. Patterson and Hon. John S. Fowler, the United States Senators from Tennessee, were seated July 27, 1866, and were paid from the 4th day of March, 1865.

All back of the date of the Congress to which they were elected.

The Representatives from Tennessee, Hon. W. B. Stokes and others, were seated July 23, 1866, and paid from March 4, 1865, on a report of the Hon. Henry L. Dawes, afterward Senator Dawes. The Sergeant-at-Arms asked for instructions as to when their pay should commence. The House decided without division that their pay should begin with the term.

That has been the practice all along; and Mr. Stevens and Mr. Dawes said there could be no doubt of the fact that members' pay should commence with the term and was for the term. These were the men who had been here, and were experienced in the usage of the law. The report of Mr. TELLER states;

Your committee find many precedents both in the Senate and House sustaining this fact.

Now, what I stand upon is that the pay of a member of Congress dates not from the date of his election and the time he takes his seat, but from the beginning of the Congress to which he is elected.

Now, the act of 1862 is not in order now. That does not confine it to the case of vacancy from death or anything of that kind, but it says as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in all cases of vacancy in either House of Congress, by death or otherwise, of any member elected or appointed thereto after the commencement of the Congress to which he shall have been elected, each person afterwards elected or appointed to fill such vacancy shall be compensated and paid from the time the compensation of his predecessor ceased.

So that, if a man is not elected at the beginning of Congress, but is afterwards elected, and seated, he is entitled to pay from the beginning of the term, without any question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regrets that on a question of this importance a decision must be rendered upon such brief consideration. It is embarrassing to the Chair to be required to render an opinion upon the point of order raised without more ample time to examine the one precedent presented or to consider the arguments submitted. Members of Congress receive an annual salary of $3,000, not a term salary of $10,000.

Under the act of 1863 provision is made in case of the election of a member during a term of Congress that he shall be entitled to the salary which would have gone to his predecessor in that term had there been such predecessor; in other words, that his salary shall date back to the creation of a vacancy in the office by death or otherwise. This presupposes the election of another person to fill the particular term and the creation of a vacancy by the death or removal of such person, or some other like cause.

It appears that in 1868 the Congress of the United States made provision for the representation upon this floor of the State of Louisiana, that State not having for some years previous had representation in this body. By the act of 1868 Congress made provision for restoring the representation of that State in this House, not for filling vacancies caused by death or any personal event, but creating a legal right to representation on the part of the State to begin upon compliance with the conditions prescribed in the act. A proclamation reciting certain conditions was to be issued by the President of the United States, and when, and not until, those conditions had been complied with the State of Louisiana was to be entitled to representation upon this floor.

The present occupant of the chair will not assume to enter into any discussion of the constitutionality or validity of that law, but will accept it as the valid law of the land, as it was then construed valid by all the authorities of the Government, and in particular cases since its validity has been uniformly upheld. If, then, the act of 1868 was a valid act, its effect was the same as though the State of Louisiana had never theretofore had or been entitled to have representation in this body; it created a right upon the part of Louisiana to representation on this floor, to begin when, and not until, the State had complied with the terms of the act, and only upon compliance with the terms of that act the right of the Congressional districts of Louisiana to representation here was to commence. Conceding the validity of the act of 1868, the Chair can not distinguish this case from that of a person chosen a member to represent a new State admitted after the commencement of a Congress.

The Chair would not feel so strongly warranted in making this decision at this time without further examination and consideration but for the fact that when the gentleman for whom this claim is made was admitted to his seat to fill an unexpired term, or to fill the short term that was created by that law, his salary was paid to him for only the remaining period of the term. That was the construction of law at the time by the Congress in which he served by the fiscal officers of the Government and by all the authorities of Government at that time.

Now, this is not a question of equitable right appealing to the sympathy or even the discretion of the Chair. As presented here there is no question of justice involved in it. It is a question of whether here upon a deficiency bill this claim, be it equitable or be it legal, has a right to be incorporated by amendment. The present occupant of the chair finds that in the last Congress the same point of order was made upon this very same claim, and the then occupant of the chair held, following the line of precedents and reasoning now being followed, that such an amendment was not in order under the rules of the House. That decision was, upon appeal, sustained by the Committee of the Whole at that time, and these being precedents which should govern until some higher and better precedent is set, the Chair sustains the point of order and holds that this amendment is not in order.

Mr. TERRY. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on that for a moment. The Chair in passing upon a question of order has, in reality, passed upon the merits of this case and decided that inasmuch as, in his judgment, the United States does not owe this claimant any balance of salary, he will prevent, if it is in his power to do so, the House from passing on that question itself. This amendment proposes to pay a balance of salary due to this man as a member of Congress. Whether there is a balance of salary due is a question of fact, and it is a question which the House is entitled to ascertain and determine for itself.

What has the Chairman done? He has said that inasmuch as the State of Louisiana was not entitled to representation upon this floor in 1868 until an act of Congress had been passed authorizing her to obtain that representation, the United States could not be bound for a salary to a member of Congress from Louisiana for a period anterior to the time when the State was admitted to representation here under that action of Congress. I submit that that is taking away from the House the right to judge of the very fact which the House ought to determine for itself. If this amendment is to pay a balance of salary to a member of Congress it is not denied that it is in order.

No one will contend but that an amendment proposing to pay an officer of the Government any part of his salary fixed by existing law would be in order as an amendment to any appropriation bill. The amendment declares that it is for a balance of salary, and I say it is a question of fact for the House to decide whether it is a balance of salary or not, and not a question of law for the Chair to decide in ruling upon the point of order.

Another thing. If the ruling of the Chair be correct that the act of 1868 admitting those States to representation upon this floor is a valid statute, then there are several States of this Union that have not a lawful representation upon this floor or in the Senate of the United States to-day, because there are incorporated in that act certain so-called fundamental conditions taking away from the States the right to amend their organic laws in a number of very important particulars, which conditions several States have disregarded and have gone on to frame their organic laws to suit themselves and according to their own ideas of a republican form of government.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I submit that the act of 1868 was merely declaratory of a right which already existed. I submit that this House can not decide that those States were ever out of the American Union or were ever for one day de jure deprived of the right of representation upon the floor of both Houses of the Congress of the United States. That, to my mind, is a perfectly clear proposition. It is a right which those States refused for a time to exercise, which they for a time abandoned by going into a state of open war. But when that war had ceased, when the military authority of the United States had reinstated the integrity and unity of the Government, the right to representation on this floor so instantly asserted its existence.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Does the gentleman take the position that we never did get out of the Union at all?

Mr. BOATNER. I certainly do. Does the gentleman think we did?

Mr. CATCHINGS. I thought so.

Mr. HAYES. What do you think now?

Mr. CATCHINGS. I think we are in the Union now.

Mr. BOATNER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] doubtless tried very hard to get out of the Union; but he must not belittle a question of this sort by ignoring the great contention between the two political parties which then existed in the United States. He is perfectly aware of the fact that those who maintained that the United States had the right to subjugate the Southern States, did so upon the ground that the Union could not be dissolved, and that the General Government had the right by force of arms to maintain the Union of the States.

Mr. CATCHINGS. That is true; but I once entertained a contrary opinion.

Mr. BOATNER. The gentleman knows that the correctness of that conclusion was successfully enforced by the military power of the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, there are some members of the Appropriations Committee who have brooded over the Treasury eggs until, like a hen setting over her time, they can not distinguish an egg from a doorknob. [Laughter.] They are willing to invoke any sort of a technicality to prevent the Government of the United States from discharging its obligations wherever they can be avoided.

Mr. LACEY. And the Treasury has about as much meat in it as a doorknob about this time.

Mr. BOATNER. Why, sir, the Secretary of the Treasury reports that we have a handsome surplus. [Laughter.] The Committee on Appropriations will not deny that fact. There is no pretense that the United States is not able to pay its just debts.

Mr. SIMPSON. The syndicate has a surplus, too.

Mr. BOATNER. Now, I appeal to gentlemen to answer this question in their minds, and to answer it by their votes: Why should this old man, who was elected a member of the Fortieth Congress, be denied his compensation as a member of that Congress—the same compensation which was accorded to every other member of that body?

A MEMBER. But we do not know that.

Mr. BOATNER. Here is an official report.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. We have had simply a statement which was read awhile ago from a speech.

Mr. BOATNER. There has been no denial that all the Representatives from the State of Arkansas were paid; there is no denial that the Senators from that State were paid.

Mr. BRETZ. The gentleman from Virginia has stated that one of these very gentlemen had asked him to introduce a bill to that effect.

A MEMBER. That statement was taken back.

Mr. BRETZ. When and where? The retraction ought to be made publicly.

Mr. MOSES. That was the case of a gentleman elected but never seated.

Mr. BOATNER. I wish to call attention to another fact. The case of the Virginia members stood on somewhat different grounds because they were not elected until 1868. They were elected in the fall of that year for a term which commenced at that time. These other men were elected in 1869 for the term which commenced on the 4th of March, 1867.

Now, gentlemen, in conclusion I want to say that I have been animated in my action on this matter by a desire that the Congress of the United States shall do justice to a man who is entitled to receive justice at its hands. This old gentleman who was elected and served is entitled to the same meed of compensation that was paid to his colleagues who were elected under similar circumstances, and that the House should not make fish of one and flesh of another. If those who were elected at the same time and under the same circumstances were paid the full amount of the compensation for the whole term, we ought to pay him the full amount. The Chair, instead of passing on the question of law involved, has gone beyond it and passed on the facts and the merits of the question itself. As he has ascertained to his satisfaction that there is no balance of salary due he sustains the point of order, and here refuses to permit the House to determine for itself the merits of the controversy.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TERRY) there were—ayes 98, noes 14.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For allowance to the following contestants and contestees, audited and recommended by the Committee on Elections, for expenses incurred by them in their contested-election cases, namely:

To J. Thomas Goode, $2,000;
To JAMES F. EPES, $2,000;
To Charles E. Belknap, $1,500;
To G. F. RICHARDSON, $1,500;
To Lewis Steward, $1,000;
To ROBERT A. CHILDS, $2,000; in all, $10,000.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert on page 49, after line 12, "To THOMAS SETTLE, $2,000."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Has that been certified by the Committee on Elections? If the committee has certified it under the law the Committee on Appropriations will accept it.

Mr. BROWN. Let the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Elections allowed Mr. Williams and Mr. SETTLE each $2,000 at the last session of Congress. Their respective claims were put into the bill at the last session of Congress—the deficiency bill, I suppose. This matter has not been before the Committee on Elections.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then I reserve the point of order upon it.

Mr. BROWN. The truth of the matter is this: The expenses in this contest were very great, and it was thought by many gentlemen that there should be an allowance of this amount in excess of the amount already paid. But we all know that Congress is restricted to $2,000 in cases of this sort.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Has the $2,000 been allowed already?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. This, then, would make the total allowance in this case $4,000 to each of the parties?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Then, of course, Mr. Chairman, there is a question of order here.

Mr. SETTLE. Will the gentleman from Kentucky permit me a moment before submitting the point of order?

There are, if the Chair will permit me, a number of precedents where the full amount of the expense incurred in a contested-election case has been allowed by this body, notably in the Fifty-first Congress in the case of General Post.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Which I did all I could to beat.

Mr. SETTLE. I am fully aware of the fact that if the point of order is insisted upon it must be sustained. I only desire to state to the committee the facts connected with my expenses in this contest.

There was a contest before every tribunal in the State having jurisdiction of any phase of the case, in the various counties comprising the district, and before the board of canvassers, entailing a cost of approximately $1,000 to me. After all of that the notice of contest was served, depositions were taken in five counties of the district at the same time, requiring the retention of lawyers at each place, and a large number of witnesses, much greater than in any contest before the present Congress or any other that I have known of in this country. This entailed from the date of the service of the notice until the conclusion of the argument before the Committee on Elections on my part an expense of between $4,500 and $5,000, not counting the cost before the local boards and the State boards, which of course would not be a branch of the expense to be taken into consideration in the contest here.

It is with a view of reimbursing at least a part of this that the amendment is offered; and it is that statement only I desired to make to the committee, hoping the gentleman from Kentucky will not insist on the point of order under the circumstances.

Mr. COX. Do I understand that $2,000 has been already paid for this contest?

Mr. SETTLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX. And this is an extra $2,000?

Mr. SETTLE. Yes.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I wish before the gentleman from Kentucky submits the point of order that he will yield to me for a few moments.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I always yield to the gentleman with pleasure. I will reserve the point of order for the moment.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I want to say a word touching this amendment. Prior to 1879 or 1880 there was no limitation upon allowances to contestants in Congress. Under the law prior to that time, on the recommendation in the main of the Committee on Elections, Congress gave what was thought to be fairly due to reimburse contestants their expenses.

And, as I conceive, this was a wise policy. Our object ought to be to see that the voters are represented, and if fraud or mistake intervene it is along the line of the right of the citizen in a representative government that the fullest scope should be given to make known the will of the majority.

So much for the policy of the appropriation and the practice of the Government up to 1879 or 1880. During that session, under the lead of General Atkins, of Texas, a provision was enacted upon an appropriation bill that in no case should over $2,000 be allowed, and it has been the law from that time to this. There are some cases, however, where it is perfectly evident that that is no proper allowance. I recollect that within two years after the enactment of the law there was a case that came from Pennsylvania, where the expenses were properly so great that the appropriation to each of the parties to the contest was over $9,000. Later on substantially the same thing, perhaps in less degree, happened in the State of Ohio. I recollect that in the Fifty-first Congress my colleague, General Post, now dead, who had been allowed the $2,000, had actually expended, as I recollect, between $6,000 and $7,000; and, notwithstanding the law, and notwithstanding it was subject to a point of order, the House, on consideration, voted to reimburse him.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. My colleague will recollect, however, that in that special case the rule was enforced in the House, and then the provision was put on in the Senate, and the committee of conference agreed to it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, the House agreed to it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. It was originally decided adversely in the House upon the ground I take to-day.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. As the amendment came in from the Senate, it was not subject to a point of order in the House. Now, I could wish, if it were proper to wish, that the House, after discussion from the Committee on Elections, and full knowledge touching this matter, might have the privilege of voting whether or no it was a meritorious case, and so meritorious that the member should be reimbursed over and above the $2,000.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield to me for one moment?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. In a moment. I am not claiming that it is not subject to the point of order, but I am giving a little history of this legislation, and perhaps it may be considered in the shape of an appeal, after the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Brown] has made his statement, that the House may have an opportunity to do justice in this matter, the law to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. COX. One word, if you please. There is a statute upon the books that in these contested-election cases the amount allowed shall not exceed the sum of $2,000.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, certainly.

Mr. COX. Now, how are you going to change that law in a special case here, and allow the additional sum of $2,000, without new legislation?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, I will say to my friend that there is no trouble about that. We have full power to appropriate, and do appropriate, in fifty cases on this bill, where there is no law authorizing the appropriation. We give a month's extra pay to the employees of this House. We give here and there and yonder without any provision of law, and with full power in the premises.

That is all I want to say.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I desire simply to say that I believe the law is a good law. Before that law was passed there were various ugly scandals about this very thing. Whenever Congress ceases to obey that law and goes into a computation of expenses the door is instantly opened by temptation to all sorts of expenses that are not proper. Therefore, in the Fifty-first Congress I did all I could to prevent the precedent in the case of General Post, of whom I was very fond, and who was a very noble and excellent gentleman, and I must insist upon the point of order now.

Mr. McDOWELL. Is it not too late to make the point of order after the matter has been discussed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman first reserved the point of order.

Mr. McDOWELL. Not until after it was discussed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood him to reserve the point of order.

Mr. McDOWELL. He reserved no point of order until the matter had been discussed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] of the Committee on Appropriations, both reserved the point of order.

Mr. McDOWELL. But it had been discussed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will overrule that point, and direct the Clerk to read the provision of the Digest relating to matters of this kind.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter no contestee or contestant for a seat in the House of Representatives shall be paid exceeding $2,000 for expenses in election contests; and before any sum whatever shall be paid to a contestant or contestee for expenses of election contest he shall file with the clerk of the Committee on Elections a full and detailed account of his expenses, accompanied by the vouchers and receipts for each item, which account and vouchers shall be sworn to by the party presenting the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hold that the amendment is subject to the point of order.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, I present an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 14 on page 49, insert the following:

"To pay John B. Conklin, messenger, for extra services as clerk in the disbursing office, $300."

Mr. SAYERS. I raise the point of order upon that.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. First as to the point of order, I would like to hear what the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has to say.

Mr. SAYERS. I want the gentleman to explain his amendment.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I will make this statement, Mr. Chairman. It is well known to the committee that by virtue of the provision of law for clerks to members a large number of new accounts were necessarily begun and conducted during this Congress—over 300 new accounts—that is the accounts for clerks to members. This gentleman is a messenger in the library. He was called upon by the disbursing clerk to assist in making up these accounts. He did assist in making up these accounts and in keeping these accounts. Two other gentlemen also, in the Clerk's office I believe, were called upon to assist in the same manner.

In the last deficiency bill these gentlemen were each allowed $300 for their extra services. This gentleman, Mr. Conklin, has performed quite as much service in that direction as the other gentlemen who have already received $300. I send up to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a letter in this connection from the Clerk of the House to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I maintain, Mr. Chairman, before that letter is read, that this is for the prosecution of a work already in progress; that it was necessary to have some one to perform this extra duty; that no one was appointed or provided for by Congress to perform this duty; that the disbursing clerk exercised his discretion in calling to his assistance these other gentlemen.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Right there. Is not that a mistake? Was not the disbursing clerk necessarily the person by whom this work should have been done?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The disbursing clerk could not perform it all. It was impossible for him to do so. It was necessary for him to have this assistance, and they not only were not able to do it at night, but were also sometimes compelled to work on Sundays to get up these accounts. Now, I ask that the letter be read by the Clerk.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to state my point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 5, 1895.

MY DEAR SIR: I take pleasure in commending to your consideration the work that has been performed by J. R. Conklin, who, as a clerk in the disbursing office, has been very faithful in the discharge of his duties. He is there early and late, night after night, Sunday after Sunday. In fact, has been continual almost in the performance of the heavy duties that have been laid upon the disbursing office by reason of the long-continued session of Congress and the additional work that has been brought to that office by reason of the clerk-hire resolution which became a law at the beginning of this Congress. I think an extra allowance of $300 to him is reasonable and deserved.

Very respectfully, yours,

JAMES KERR.

Hon. JOSEPH D. SAYERS,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, at the last session it was not claimed that this gentleman was entitled to any extra pay or had rendered any extra service; but it was claimed for the two clerks that they had performed extra service. They claimed for themselves, and so did the Clerk of the House, that they were the ones who rendered extra service.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Oh, no.

Mr. SAYERS. The reason given by the gentleman from Ohio in showing that the amendment is in order is that it is for the "construction of a work already in progress."

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I did not say "construction." I said for the "prosecution of a work already in progress."

Mr. SAYERS. The "prosecution of work already in progress." That is absolutely untenable in my opinion. If the ruling that was made with reference to the construction of ships and the increase of the naval force should be available to the amendment, then there is no limit or restriction upon the action of this committee upon any appropriation bill that may be presented for consideration. If this man be really entitled to extra compensation, I would prefer to withdraw the point of order rather than to have it overruled upon such a ground as that stated by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Well, withdraw your point of order, then.

Mr. SAYERS. I will withdraw it if the gentleman will withdraw his statement of the ground on which he supports the amendment.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I am just a little bit surprised at the course of argument taken by the gentleman, for it seems to reflect upon the good faith of this proposition, in that he intimates that because this gentleman's claim was not presented at the last session of this Congress it has no validity. Now, let me say that the letter indorsing the claims of the other two gentlemen did not pretend to state that they were the only two who had been engaged in this labor. It did not pretend to state that they had done all this extra labor. It was simply a letter similar to that which was read from the Clerk's desk—that these two gentlemen had performed extra labor, labor performed at night, labor performed on Sunday, in the prosecution of this work in making up these 300 accounts. Suppose the whole amount is allowed. It is $3 for each account. Three dollars for each account during the whole Congress. That is all.

Now, I wish to say in this connection, because the gentleman's remarks would seem to indicate that there is something suspicious about this not having been presented sooner—

Mr. SAYERS. Oh, no; I did not intend any such intimation.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I desire to say that this gentleman is not a constituent of mine and I was not aware of his having done this labor. It was brought to my notice first, not by him, but by another gentleman in the employ of the House, who called my attention to the fact that two others had received extra compensation at the last session of Congress, but that no one had seen fit to present a claim for Mr. John Conklin, who had performed equal services. It is, therefore, upon the ground of doing equal and exact justice to this gentleman that I ask the chairman of the committee to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, if you will withdraw the—

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Oh, I will withdraw my reasons if you will withdraw your point of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAYERS. Upon that condition I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment to the amendment was read, as follows:

Add to the amendment the following:

"To pay J. Frank Snyder, disbursing clerk, and Thomas B. Kalbfus, assistant disbursing clerk, for extra services rendered, $500 each."

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose that as an amendment to my amendment. The gentlemen there named are the two who received $300 each during the last session of Congress for this work, and now the gentleman from Pennsylvania comes in and attempts to attach to the amendment which I have offered another proposition to pay these two gentlemen $500 each.

Mr. REILLY. I will say to my friend that I offer this upon my own responsibility.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes; but those two gentlemen received $300 each at the last session.

Mr. REILLY. I am aware of that, and I was waiting for an opportunity to offer this amendment on its merits at the proper place.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then why not let my proposition be dealt with upon its merits and offer yours separately?

Mr. REILLY. Well, your amendment comes in at the proper place, and I submit that my amendment to it is entirely fair and proper. This proposition originated in the shape of a resolution, which was introduced and referred to the Committee on Accounts. That committee thoroughly investigated the matter and made a favorable report to the Committee on Appropriations, recommending this allowance; but the Committee on Appropriations, for some reason, have not seen proper to include it in their bill, although I do not understand that they antagonize it. Now, I ask to have read in this connection the report of the Committee on Accounts, and also a letter from the Clerk of the House.

The documents were read, as follows:

In re resolution to pay J. Frank Snyder, disbursing clerk, and Thomas B. Kalbfus, assistant disbursing clerk, $500 each for extra services.

COMMITTEE ON ACCOUNTS, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 25, 1895.

GENTLEMEN: The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the accompanying resolution, offered by Mr. REILLY, to pay Mr. J. Frank Snyder, disbursing clerk, and Thomas B. Kalbfus, assistant disbursing clerk, $500 each for extra services rendered—

After due investigation and proper consideration this committee is of the opinion that this allowance should be made and respectfully recommend that provision be made for its payment.

Attached petition and letter of Hon. James Kerr, Clerk House of Representatives.

H. W. RUSK, Chairman.

To the honorable COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

CLERK'S OFFICE, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 26, 1895.

SIRS: I desire to recommend the allowance and payment of $500 to each of the above employees for extra services rendered by them in their respective positions during the present session.

The disbursements of the House have increased during the last and present fiscal year, and have brought additional labor and added greater responsibilities upon the disbursing clerk and assistant disbursing clerk, for which their respective salaries are not, in my judgment, an adequate compensation.

These gentlemen have, by their attention to the duties of the office, in every way protected the best interests of the Government and at the same time have most efficiently discharged all the duties imposed upon them from time to time in such manner as to make them in justice and equity entitled to the full amount they each claim, and I recommend and ask that it be allowed.

Respectfully,

JAMES KERR,
Clerk House of Representatives.

To the COMMITTEE ON ACCOUNTS,
House of Representatives.

[Fifty-third Congress, third session.]

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 23, 1895.

Mr. REILLY submitted the following, which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

"Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to J. Frank Snyder, disbursing clerk, and Thomas B. Kalbfus, assistant disbursing clerk, for extra services rendered, $500 each; in all, $1,000."

Attest:

JAMES KERR, Clerk.
By T. O. TOWLES, Chief Clerk.

Mr. REILLY. In addition to what has been said, Mr. Chairman, I wish to remind this House that since the act was passed authorizing the employment of clerks to members the labors of these accounting clerks have greatly increased. Furthermore, we all know that under the law clerks in Government employ are not obliged to work more than eight hours a day. All the points which have been presented by the gentleman from Ohio apply to my amendment. These gentlemen have also been obliged to work extra hours and on Sundays, and if they worked only eight hours a day, according to law, it would necessitate the employment by this House of several additional clerks. It is true that these two gentlemen were paid $300 apiece in the last session of Congress upon the report of the Committee on Appropriations; but even if the allowance I now ask for is made it will only make their compensation equal to that of the officials who do the same kind of work in the other branch of Congress.

Mr. WISE. Do you say that these gentlemen got an increase last year?

Mr. REILLY. I say that the Committee on Appropriations allowed them $300 each last year; but that was not the amount they asked for, and did not put them on an equality with the employees doing the same kind of work in the other branch of Congress.

Mr. WISE. But they did get an increase at the last session.

Mr. REILLY. They were allowed $300 apiece extra.

Mr. WISE. Then why do you come in here again now and ask for another increase for them?

Mr. REILLY. Because these extra services have been rendered and these gentlemen are entitled to the compensation. The Committee on Accounts have investigated the matter and reported upon it favorably, and the Clerk of the House, who is responsible for their work, recommends this allowance. I will say to my friend from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] that I have no disposition in the world to prejudice or interfere in any way in the world with the chances for favorable action on the amendment that he offers. On the contrary, I am willing to vote for it, and will do so, because from my own knowledge I think these claims are entirely meritorious.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The proper way to do is to allow each proposition to stand on its own merits, and not attempt to make an amendment in behalf of a messenger who is receiving only $1,200 while doing clerical work carry a proposition in favor of two gentlemen, one of whom is receiving $2,200 and the other $2,500.

Mr. REILLY. I hope the gentleman will not state the question in that way. I have no such purpose. I would be glad to see the gentleman's amendment adopted as well as my own.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then withdraw your amendment, and let each proposition stand on its own merits.

Mr. REILLY. Will not my amendment be subject to a point of order, if offered separately? I will ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to offer my amendment separately.

Mr. WISE. I object.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, if the Committee of the Whole will do me the favor to listen, I wish to make a statement about this proposition and other matters of similar character. The subcommittee charged with the preparation of the deficiency bill had before them probably eighty or ninety claims of various officers of the House, for compensation for extra work of various kinds. We also had before us communications from the Committee on Accounts endorsing many of these claims, and in some cases similar communications from various officers like the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Clerk, and the Doorkeeper. The subcommittee thought that as the Committee on Accounts is a privileged committee and can come in at any time and submit to the House as single propositions any of these claims, to be decided on their merits and paid out of the contingent fund, our committee ought not to be made the dumping ground of the claims of these different officers for various allowances.

In the second place, we thought it was not a good precedent to establish that at the close of the Congress when we give usually an extra month's salary to the various employees of the House, particular officers should be making claims for extra services. But on the other hand there are gentlemen connected with the House who do perform extra work—whom it is necessary for the proper transaction of public business that we should sometimes call on for very severe and exacting labor—performed at odd times, sometimes at a late hour of the night, sometimes on Sundays and in various other ways. In such cases, the committee thought, some extra compensation ought to be allowed. Of course the committee could only decide these questions on the testimony before them. Therefore, while they rejected a majority of these claims they allowed certain of them.

Having made this general statement, I wish to make a specific statement about these particular gentlemen, the two disbursing officers. The committee believed that there had been put upon them a considerable amount of extra work. About 350 additional accounts which were not anticipated when the salaries of these gentlemen were fixed have been opened and extra services rendered in connection with those accounts. Therefore we thought some extra payment should be made, and at the last session we provided for paying to the disbursing clerk and the assistant disbursing clerk $300 each. Some members of the committee—and I am frank to say that I was one—thought that we ought to pay these gentlemen something for this session, but we were met by several considerations. The subcommittee on deficiencies is simply an appropriating committee.

The subcommittee on the legislative bill have before them the question of fixing salaries; and as the duties of these clerks had been going on for some time, and the committee on the legislative bill had not seen fit to raise the salaries of these gentlemen, and as the legislative bill had met the approval of the House without any such increase, we thought that we ought not to put ourselves in the attitude of reversing pro tanto the action of the legislative committee and of the House with reference to the salaries of these particular officers.

For myself, while I think that Mr. Conklin ought to be paid something, I do not think he ought to be paid as much as these other gentlemen, because while he accepted service as a messenger his work has actually been pleasanter than that of a messenger, and some consideration is to be given to this fact. I think that these two disbursing clerks ought each to be paid about $200 extra, and that for Mr. Conklin $300 for his entire extra services during this Congress would be ample pay. I therefore move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania by striking out the word "five" and inserting the word "two."

Mr. REILLY. I have no objection to that amendment, and will accept it.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that each one of these propositions ought to stand on its own merits, if they have any, and that the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania ought not to be offered as an amendment to that presented by the gentleman from Ohio. If this amendment is to prevail it would seem that an amendment should be presented adding $500 to the salary of every one of the 306 employees of this House. It is not fair to make these selections. If the salaries fixed by law are not ample, there should be a general revision of the salary list; but certain gentlemen of the 306 employed by the House should not be selected for special favors.

Mr. SAYERS. My colleague on the committee will allow me to suggest also that there is now an amendment pending to give all the officers and employees of the House an extra month's salary. And that was intended to cover all these deficiencies.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is true. As the gentleman says, there is an amendment pending, and although I am opposed to it, it will doubtless pass Congress at this session, allowing each one of our 306 employees an extra month's pay.

Mr. REILLY. Does not the gentleman from Missouri know that the disbursing clerks of the House have very much extra labor to perform—more than they have ever had before?

Mr. DOCKERY. They have rendered just this extra service: They have opened up accounts with 360 members, which consist of a debit of one item and a charge of one item, and they also send to each member one printed voucher, receive a receipt from the member, and issue one draft in payment.

Mr. REILLY. But that is each month, and this involves an expenditure of over $300,000—

Mr. SAYERS. I suggest also that these gentlemen were compensated for this extra service at the first session of this Congress at the rate of $300 for the year.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly, as suggested by my colleague on the committee, they have already been compensated for it.

Now, with reference to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, let me say that the subcommittee in charge of the legislative bill considered it and unanimously decided against it. The Clerk of the House submitted in his estimates, as he submits from time to time in cases here, increases from $2,500, which the law now gives, and $3,000, respectively, in these two cases, to $3,000 and $2,500, and the subcommittee in charge of that bill unanimously disapproved of his recommendation. The House approved the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations; and it seems that we have fully reached the point where we should stop these profligate increases of salaries of House employees.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I only want to make a single remark for the purpose of giving notice. We have had now two hours, almost, of wrangling, taking up the time of the House about an increase in the pay of certain employees of the House here that we know, or that some of us know, and I think it will last the day out and bids fair to take up a part of to-morrow, and then will come up a provision to give a month's extra pay; and after finishing this all up, taking at least a day of time to give extra pay to the employees we happen to know or come in contact with, we have but begun. When the next Congress organizes, the most of this force, some, not all, will come in one way or another to claim other extra allowances. Now, it has always been so for twenty years to my certain knowledge—sometimes one day, sometimes two days taken up in this kind of squabble.

In my judgment—and I am not saying it to antagonize anybody's pets particularly at this time—the employees of the House of Representatives are the best-paid employees in this Government anywhere, for the service performed, except the employees of the Senate.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is true.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Further than that, I want to say that if the salaries ought to be increased to cover the month's extra pay and other increases ought to be made, then we should take a day and revise them, changing the law, and then call a halt on attempts to increase salaries by appropriation over the provision made by law; and if I can get the cooperation of members, as this Congress is soon to expire and the place that knows it now is to know it no more forever, when the new Congress organizes—if I can get their cooperation—I want to give notice that our employees, so far as I am concerned, will be paid the legal salaries, and if they are not getting enough we will increase them by a general law, and then get rid of this everlasting scrambling, in which not infrequently the persistent, clever fellow gets more than he ought to get, while the meritorious, hard-working fellow, if he happens to be modest, gets nothing.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Now, Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered is in the interest of a hard-working fellow, in the interest of a man who is not a pet of mine, who is not here by my selection and does not come from my district. He has no claims on me whatever, nor have I on him. He is receiving a salary inadequate to the duties he is called upon to perform. He is on the roll as a messenger and is receiving that salary. But because of his skill and ability he was called in by the disbursing clerk to assist in the matter of keeping the accounts. He did this; he assisted daily, and assisted at all times. He assisted in this work at night, and assisted upon other days on which the work is not usually required for members. He did quite as much work as either of the other gentlemen did, the one getting $3,200 and the other getting $2,500, that now appear to want him and his amendment to carry them through the House.

I ask that a vote be taken on the merits of the amendment I have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. REILLY) there were—ayes 29, noes 73.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. OUTHWAITE, it was adopted; there being on a division—ayes 83, noes 39.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 14, page 40:

"To pay Thomas M. Rogers for services rendered as acting clerk to the Committee on Railways and Canals, from March 24, 1894, to May 17, 1894, inclusive, the difference in salary between that of clerk to a Congressman and a session clerk to a committee, $149.50."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I reserve the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. This is simply the difference between the pay of a Congressman's clerk and that of a committee clerk for the time Mr. Rogers was acting clerk of the committee and before he was appointed as clerk.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I suggest to the gentleman that he withdraw the amendment. We shall have to rise very soon, and he can put it in later, which will give us an opportunity to look into it.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. It is unanimously reported from the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Leave it pending, with the point of order pending.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. It is all right. The Committee on Railways and Canals certify to the fact of his services.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of order insisted upon?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I am perfectly willing that it be passed over, with the point of order pending.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it be passed over, with the point of order waived.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will not waive the point of order.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. Then I would rather have a vote upon it now.

The CHAIRMAN. If the point of order is insisted upon at this time, the Chair will have to decide that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Let it go over.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. I will let it go over, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. With the point of order pending.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

To pay D. S. Porter as extra compensation for services rendered as assistant clerk to the Committee on Pensions during the Fifty-third Congress, $500.

Mr. MARTIN. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 40, between lines 21 and 22, insert the following: "To pay F. F. Dennis for extra services rendered as assistant clerk to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, on detail from the Pension Office, during the third session of the Fifty-third Congress, the sum of $200."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I reserve the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky wishes this matter to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Let it go over with the point of order pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request that the matter go over?

There was no objection.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

To pay G. W. Pratt, assistant Journal clerk, for extra services rendered during the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congress, $500.

Mr. SPERRY. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 25, page 40, insert the following:

"To pay R. A. Rosenbaum, F. F. Perkins, and George Zerby $100 each, for extra services rendered during the Fifty-third Congress in the folding room of the House of Representatives."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I reserve the point of order. Let it go over.

There was no objection.

Mr. BRETZ. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay Richard H. Dalton, for extra services rendered in the folding room, $300.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will say to the gentleman that if he will withdraw that the committee will offer it. I am authorized by the subcommittee to offer it.

Mr. BRETZ. Why not let it be offered now?

Mr. SAYERS. I will reserve the point of order on it, then.

Mr. BRETZ. I will withdraw it, Mr. Chairman, with the understanding that I shall have the right to offer it if it is not offered by the committee hereafter.

Mr. BROWN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] has just stated that he would offer it; that the committee had considered it.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

To pay George L. Browning and P. E. Cox $300 each for extra services rendered in the folding room; in all, $600.

Mr. IKIRT. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 24, page 50, insert the following:

"To pay John H. Hogan the difference between the pay of a laborer and that of a messenger in the House post-office during the sessions of the Fifty-third Congress, $300.73."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I reserve the point of order on that. Let it go over.

Mr. IKIRT. I will let it go over. I think the gentleman will withdraw the point when he understands the case.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. It is understood that the point of order is pending.

Mr. SPRINGER. On page 50 of the bill I see the following words:

To pay the following, which have been audited and recommended by the Committee on Accounts, namely:

I desire to know where that list ends.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. At the bottom of page 51.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

To pay M. M. Robinson for services rendered as assistant to the Sergeant-at-Arms, $100.

Mr. BERRY. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 9, page 51, as follows: Strike out "$100," and insert "$300."

Mr. SAYERS. I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. BERRY. I do not think this is subject to the point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. BERRY. The last Congress allowed this gentleman $300. It is not one of those cases that are hidden away in committee rooms or the library, but this is Mr. Robinson, an employee of the House, who is right here before us, an employee assisting the Sergeant-at-Arms, who is detailed from another roll, at $900 a year. We all know him. He has kept our pairs and done work on this floor for which $100 a month is not excessive pay. He does twice as much work as many of those who get $2,200 a year. He has been in the service of this House for seven or eight years as assistant to the Sergeant-at-Arms, and this claim is recommended by the Committee on Accounts, and it ought to be allowed.

This is a matter that we can all see for ourselves daily. We are associated with him daily as an officer of this House. His pay is not sufficient; it is a meager and insufficient salary; and there is no reason why he should not be allowed an additional $300. I ask the committee to act upon it.

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman insists upon immediate consideration I will insist upon the point of order. There is no law or resolution of the House authorizing the appropriation.

Mr. BERRY. I do not like to let this thing go over, but on the urgent request of so many gentlemen I will consent to it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I offer an amendment containing a series of additional items.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 51, after line 23, insert the following:

"To pay Howard Gill for services as acting assistant foreman of the folding room, from August 29 to December 3, 1894, inclusive, $240.

"To pay Howard Wiltberger for services rendered in the folding room from August 29 to December 3, 1894, inclusive, $240.

"To pay J. H. Van Buren, assistant index clerk of the House, his salary from October 1 to November 23, 1894, inclusive, and from November 4 to December 3, 1894, inclusive, at $3 per day, $534.

"To pay George B. Parsons, enrolling clerk, and John Kelley, assistant enrolling clerk, for extra services, $200 each; in all, $400.

"To pay Richard H. Dalton for extra services rendered in the folding room, $300.

"To reimburse Walter H. French for moneys actually paid by him for clerical hire in rearranging the files of the House, including the consolidation of the papers in the reports of the Southern Claims Commission and the papers in the Indian depredation cases, and relettering the file boxes from the Forty-fourth to the Fifty-second Congress, inclusive, $750.

"To pay Peter J. McDonald the difference between his salary as folder and that of acting assistant foreman of the folding room, at $1,300 per annum, from January 20, 1894, to January 20, 1895, inclusive, $300."

Mr. SPRINGER. Would it be in order to add an additional item to this?

Mr. DOCKERY. Do I understand that is offered by the committee?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Yes; on an order made by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. DINGLEY. One moment. I want to know if these items have been approved by the committee.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. They have.

Mr. SAYERS. If any point of order is to be raised, the point of order ought to be reserved on that at once.

Mr. DINGLEY. I had not heard of any action of the committee on that list.

Mr. DOCKERY. I want to suggest to the gentleman that in justice to certain employees of the House who have not pressed their claims, and in view of the fact that it is said that all the employees are to get an extra month's pay, it is unfair, grossly unfair, to select for special recognition these persons mentioned in this amendment and other amendments that have been offered. I simply desire to protest, and protest most earnestly, against this policy of discrimination.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I reserve the point of order upon this matter.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas raised the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. But it is too late; debate had occurred. I desire to offer an amendment, as an additional paragraph, to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after line 23, on page 51, as a separate paragraph, the following:

"To pay John W. Almarode, the father of Ernest Almarode, deceased, late an employee of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to six months of the salary being paid to him at the time of his death, and also to pay to him the amount of the expenses of the last illness and funeral of said Ernest Almarode, said expenses not to exceed $250, in all not to exceed $700."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would hardly consider this amendment germane to the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move, in view of the fact that the House has to take a recess at 5 o'clock, that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TARSNEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 8892, and had come to no resolution thereon.

KANSAS CITY, PITTSBURG AND GULF RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8900) to amend section 9 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the Kansas City, Pittsburg and Gulf Railroad Company to construct and operate a railroad, telegraph, and telephone line through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes."

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I hope some explanation will be given by the gentleman. My information is that there is but very little of the Territory that has not been taken up by these rights of way that have already been granted in the Territory.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Speaker, this is simply an act to amend one section of an act that was passed two years ago, giving a right of way for the construction of a trunk line from Kansas City to Shreveport, La. Since that right was granted, the road has been constructed from Kansas City to the point where its line is to enter the Indian Territory, more than 250 miles. The original charter would require them to complete their road through the Indian Territory this year. The company desire to complete their road south of the Territory, through Texas, Arkansas, and Louisiana, so as to get the benefit of local traffic while they are building through the dead portion of the Indian Territory. It merely extends the right one year.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TARSNEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HOURLY OF MEETING.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the hour of meeting to-morrow may be changed so that the House may meet at 11 o'clock. There is a special order for eulogies on the late Senator Vance at 2 o'clock. I make this request so that it will give us a greater length of time before the special order is reached. We desire to get this bill through as rapidly as possible.

Mr. PAYNE. I have no objection to meeting at 11 o'clock if those who are in charge of the business of the House deem it necessary; but it seems to me that the order might be made to meet at that hour for the remainder of the session. The objection to making it 11 o'clock from time to time is that members do not understand it and do not get here until 12 o'clock.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, we desire an exception in this instance, because we are anxious that this bill shall get to the Senate to-morrow, and that will complete the appropriation bills.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I would be glad, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from New York would not complicate the general question of the hour of meeting with my request for an early meeting to-morrow. His proposition can be taken up by the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky that the House meet to-morrow at 11 a. m.? There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

DEEP-WATER WAYS BETWEEN THE OCEAN AND THE GREAT LAKES.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution authorizing a preliminary inquiry concerning deep-water ways between the ocean and the Great Lakes and providing commissioners therefor.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized to appoint, immediately after the passage of this joint resolution, three persons, who shall have power to meet and confer with any similar committee which may be appointed by the Government of Great Britain, or of the Dominion of Canada, and who shall make inquiry and report whether it is feasible to build such canals as shall enable vessels engaged in ocean commerce to pass to and fro between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic Ocean, with an adequate and controllable supply of water for continual use; where such canals can be most conveniently located, the probable cost of the same, with estimates in detail; and if any part of the same should be built in the territory of Canada, what regulations or treaty arrangements will be necessary between the United States and Great Britain to preserve the free use of such canal to the people of this country at all times; and all necessary facts and considerations relating to the construction and future use of deep-water channels between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic Ocean. The persons so appointed shall serve without compensation in any form, but they shall be paid their actual traveling and other necessary expenses, not exceeding in all $10,000, for which purpose the said sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

The President may, in his discretion, detail as one of such persons an officer of the Engineer Corps of the Army.

Mr. SAYERS. I will ask the gentleman whether that matter has been before any committee of the House?

Mr. HAUGEN. It was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House and received the unanimous approval of that committee. The appropriation, as the gentleman will see, is very small—only about what it would cost, on an average, to build 80 rods of railroad.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. SAYERS. I object.

COLLISIONS AT SEA.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2783) to postpone the enforcement of the act of August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea."

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas the President, in accord with the proposition of Great Britain to enforce on March 1, 1895, the revised international regulations for preventing collisions at sea, and on the representations of that Government that those regulations had received the general approval of the several foreign maritime powers, pursuant to section 3 of the act of August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea," issued on July 13, 1894, his proclamation fixing March 1, 1895, as the time when the provisions of said act, as amended, embodying said revised international regulations shall take effect; and

Whereas the Government of Great Britain has withdrawn from the position, communicated to this Government on April 25, 1894, that no time should be lost in carrying those regulations into effect, and on January 10, 1895, announced to this Government that the Government of Great Britain now finds it impossible until Parliament has been consulted to fix a date for bringing the regulations into force, and earnestly requests this Government to consent to a temporary postponement of the enforcement of said regulations; and

Whereas it is desirable that the revised international regulations for preventing collisions at sea shall be put into force simultaneously by the maritime powers: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That said act of March 19, 1890, take effect not on March 1, 1895, but at a subsequent time, to be fixed by the President by proclamation issued for that purpose.

Mr. DURBOROW. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman whether this has been referred to a committee?

Mr. TRACEY. Yes, sir; and unanimously reported.

Mr. DURBOROW. From what committee?

Mr. TRACEY. The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to considering this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TRACEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. TRACEY, members of the committee and others desiring to print remarks on the bill in the RECORD obtained leave to do so.

ANNIE M. GREENE.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 305) granting a pension to Annie M. Greene, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "twelve" and insert the word "ten;" and the House agree to the same.

A. N. MARTIN,
M. J. MCETTRICK,
Managers on the part of the House.
JOHN M. PALMER,
J. H. GALLINGER,
W. A. PEPPER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

STATEMENT.

[Fifty-third Congress, third session.]

In the case of the bill (S. 305) granting a pension to Annie M. Greene, now in conference between the two Houses, the managers on the part of the House submit to the House the following statement of the differences between the two Houses, viz: As the bill passed the Senate it granted a pension of $12 per month for the beneficiary as dependent and invalid daughter of the deceased soldier. Under the facts stated in the report of the Senate Pensions Committee, the soldier does not appear to have died as the result of his army service, and therefore if pensioned at all, the beneficiary ought, as it seemed to the House, to be placed on the pension roll under the act of June 27, 1890, and therefore the House amended the bill accordingly, the effect of which would be to pension the beneficiary at the rate of $10 per month—and the amendment recommended by the conference committee's report will specifically give effect exactly according to the import of the House amendment—being a virtual agreement to the House amendment.

A. N. MARTIN,
M. J. MCETTRICK,
Managers on the part of the House.

The conference report was adopted.

On motion of Mr. MARTIN of Indiana, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted was laid on the table.

MRS. EVALYN N. VAN VLIET.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present another conference report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 684) for the relief of Mrs. Evalyn N. Van Vliet, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agrees to the same with an amendment. Strike out the word "thirty," in line 4, and insert the word "twenty-five;" and the House agree to the same.

A. N. MARTIN,
GEO. B. FIELDER,
G. D. MEIKLEJOHN,
Managers on the part of the House.
JOHN M. PALMER,
J. H. GALLINGER,
JOS. R. HAWLEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the managers on the part of the House was read, as follows:

STATEMENT.

[Fifty-third Congress, third session.]

The managers on behalf of the House as to the bill (S. 684) to grant a pension to Mrs. Evalyn N. Van Vliet, now in conference between the two Houses, make the following statement, viz:

The Senate bill fixed the rate of pension at $30 per month; the House amended it so as to pension her subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension law, which would have been equivalent to $25 per month, and the amendment agreed on by the managers on behalf of both Houses fixes that amount specifically, being an actual agreement by the Senate to the amendment of the House.

A. N. MARTIN,
GEO. B. FIELDER,
G. D. MEIKLEJOHN.

The conference report was adopted.

On motion of Mr. MARTIN of Indiana, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted was laid on the table.

MATHEW S. PRIEST.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 1314, for the relief of Mathew S. Priest.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. SAYERS. I ask consent that this may go over until tomorrow. I am not willing to object, but I would like an opportunity to examine this case.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it can go over, subject to the right to object.

There was no objection.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE EMORY AND CLINCH RIVERS.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (H. R. 8659) was read.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PATTERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. WASHINGTON, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for this day on account of sickness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. WADSWORTH, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the claim of Catherine Childs.

RECESS.

The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House, under the rule, took a recess until 8 p. m., the Speaker announcing that at the evening session the duties of the Chair would be performed by Mr. DOCKERY.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House, at 8 o'clock p. m., was called to order by Mr. DOCKERY as Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider bills on the Private Calendar, under the rule.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina) there were—ayes 33, noes 0.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. BRETZ in the chair.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that, beginning where we left off on Friday night last, the roll be now called and that each member present be allowed to call up one bill introduced by himself or one bill coming from the Senate originating in the State from which the member comes.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, while I do not propose to interpose objection to the request, still it seems to me that this is rather an irregular way to proceed. I have noticed that on several nights past when we proceeded in that way gentlemen would call up a bill at the request of someone else, not their own bills; and I have also observed that as soon as gentlemen got their bills through they immediately took their cloaks and hats and left the Hall. Now, it seems to me that they ought to stay, at least, and help others. They have shown considerable selfishness in the matter, and for that reason I do not think this rule ought to obtain. I, however, merely throw out the suggestion, for I do not desire to object. The committee can exercise its own judgment in the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that an inquiry or a point of order would reach his objection in case any gentleman undertakes to call up a bill not within the agreement.

The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the committee proceed to call the roll, beginning where we left off on Friday night last, which was at the name of Mr. EVERETT, and that each member present be permitted to call up a bill introduced by himself or one coming from the Senate and originating in the State which he represents. Is there objection?

Mr. BRODERICK. I do not wish to object, but on last Friday night I was absent from the House on account of sickness when my name was called. I have a bill here, one which passed the Senate, introduced by one of our Senators for the benefit of a constituent of mine, and I will ask consent to call that bill up. My absence at the last meeting was on account of sickness.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I shall not object, provided that every gentleman, after he gets his bill through, will stay and help the rest of us to get ours through.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, of course, has no power to compel members to remain.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Of course I understand that, Mr. Chairman, and I do not mean to undertake to control the Chair, but I merely throw out the suggestion for the benefit of members of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. PEARSON. I do not want to pose in the light of an objector to granting unanimous consent to anybody, but some of us have attended most every Friday night session for the last four years and have been unfortunate enough not to be able, when their names are reached, to get a bill through the House. I am one of that class, and while I do not object to the order now asked, I shall object to unanimous consent being given to any member until after the alphabet has been called through.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request? Does the gentleman from Vermont object?

Mr. GROUT. I will state, if the Chairman will allow me a moment, I do not want to object to the request, but I do wish to say that at the request of persons interested in a bill to grant a pension to Martha Custis Carter, granddaughter of Martha Washington and widow of Rear-Admiral Carter, lately deceased, I came up here to urge the consideration of that bill when my name shall be called—

Mr. HAYES. Well, nobody will object to it.

Mr. GROUT. Very well, if they will not I shall be content not to object to the request asked by the gentleman from Indiana. But the order the gentleman asks will exclude me, because the beneficiary in this bill is not from my State, and I can not call it up unless I practice a silent fraud on the House. There is eminent propriety, and I do not suppose anyone will object to my calling it up on this, Washington's birthday.

Mr. HAINES. There is a gentleman from Massachusetts here who will be able to call it up.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again submit the request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRODERICK. I ask unanimous consent now before the roll is called to take up a Senate bill for the reason I have already stated. I was sick on Friday night last, and necessarily absent.

Mr. PEARSON. I must object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will call the roll.

The name of Mr. FIELDER was called.

Mr. BRODERICK. If the gentleman from New Jersey will yield just a moment I want to call up a Senate bill—

Mr. FIELDER. I should be very glad to give way to my friend. I know he represents a case of merit.

Mr. BRODERICK. It will take but a few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. But unless the gentleman from Ohio withdraws his objection the Chair can not recognize the gentleman.

Mr. BRODERICK. If there is serious objection I will withdraw the bill. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will call the roll.

JOHN C. DULL.

Mr. FIELDER. Mr. Chairman, I call up for present consideration the bill (S. 1535) to correct the naval history of John C. Dull.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be authorized and directed to correct the naval history of John C. Dull, who, while yet a minor, was enlisted as a landsman in the United States ship Aetna for service during the war with Mexico, so as to relieve him from the charge of desertion, dated June 3, 1845, and that said John C. Dull be given an honorable discharge from that date.

The report (by Mr. TYLER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1535) to correct the naval history of John C. Dull, having in a prior Congress submitted a favorable report on a bill of similar import (H. R. 4796, House Report 1473, first session Fifty-second Congress), adopt the said report and recommend the passage of the Senate bill.

[House Report No. 1473, Fifty-second Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4796) to correct the naval history of John C. Dull, having considered the same, beg leave to report:

It appears from the evidence that Dull enlisted in the Navy January 13, 1847, at the age of 18 years, as a landsman, for three years; that he served on board the United States steamers Ontario, Franklin, and Aetna, and that while serving on the last-named vessel, on the 3d day of June, 1848, he failed to report for duty before the sailing of his ship, and thereby became chargeable with desertion, for which he was deprived of all pay and allowances then due him and "dishonored for all his services during the war."

In his letter to the Secretary of the Navy, dated December 9, 1891, Dull states, in explanation of his conduct, that he was led astray, during temporary excitement, by persons older than himself, and that he was wholly unconscious of committing any serious injury to the Government. He further states in this letter that he "would never have made a complaint, perhaps, of the harshness of this punishment had he not met with a severe accident in 1866, by which he lost all the fingers of both hands, rendering him incapable of manual labor in his advancing years."

Under these circumstances and (as stated by the Secretary of the Navy in his letter of March 11, 1892, herewith appended) "in view of the fact that Dull was a minor at the time of his enlistment and of his desertion, and that prior to the date of his desertion hostilities had ceased and the treaty of peace between Mexico and the United States had been concluded and ratified," the committee report favorably on the bill and recommend that it do pass.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 11, 1892.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the letter from the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, inclosing H. R. bill No. 4790, "to correct the naval history of John C. Dull," and requesting the opinion of this Department as to the merits of the proposed legislation.

It appears from an examination of the records of the Bureau of Navigation, Navy Department, and in the office of the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury, that Dull enlisted in the Navy January 18, 1847, at the age of 18 years, as a landsman, for three years; that he served on board the United States steamships Ontario, Franklin, and Etna, and that he deserted from the latter-named vessel off Frontera, Mexico, June 3, 1848.

In view of the fact that Dull was a minor at the time of his enlistment and of his desertion, and that prior to the date of his desertion hostilities had ceased, and the treaty of peace between Mexico and the United States had been concluded and ratified, the Department perceives no objection to the favorable action by Congress upon the bill to correct his naval history.

Very respectfully,

HON. HILARY A. HERBERT,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives.

B. F. TRACY, Secretary of the Navy.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 9, 1891.

SIR: Your humble petitioner, John C. Dull, age 62 years, residing in Washington City, respectfully submits the following statement of facts:

In the year 1847, being then a minor, and working at my trade of blacksmith, I enlisted in the United States steamer Etna as a landsman for during the war with Mexico. I served in said capacity until the 3d day of June, 1848, after the treaty of peace between the United States and the Republic of Mexico had been duly ratified, and being led astray, during temporary excitement, by persons older than myself, and wholly unconscious of committing any serious injury to the Government in whose service I had volunteered, I failed to report for duty before the ship sailed from Tabasco. For this infraction of the rules of discipline, which I have ever since regretted, the serious charge of desertion was entered against me, by which I was deprived of my pay and allowances then due and dishonored for all my service during the war.

I would never have made a complaint, perhaps, of the harshness of this punishment had I not met with a severe accident in 1866, by which I lost all the fingers of both hands, rendering me incapable of manual labor in my advancing years, and I have submitted an application to the honorable Commissioner of Pensions to grant me the allowance awarded to the soldiers and sailors who served in the war with Mexico. The Commissioner, on December 1, 1891, rejected my application on the ground that I "was not honorably discharged, but deserted the service June 3, 1848, and the mark of desertion has not been removed."

I therefore humbly petition the honorable Secretary of the Navy, in view of the circumstances related, to grant me an honorable discharge to date from June 3, 1848.

And your petitioner will ever pray, etc.
Very respectfully,

JOHN C. DULL.

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

Mr. JONES. I hope the gentleman who is in charge of this bill will make some statement in reference to it. He is probably aware that the President has recently vetoed a bill of this character. In reading that veto I observe the President says that this authority exercised by Congress to remove the charge of desertion is one of rather doubtful character, and that when the power is exercised he thinks the beneficiary should not be given a pension such as is enjoyed by soldiers who served during the entire time of their enlistment. Inasmuch as one bill of this character passed by us has been vetoed on that ground, I should like the gentleman to state why this bill has any peculiar merits beyond other bills of this class.

Mr. FIELDER. I will say that Mr. Dull was a minor at the time of his enlistment. Receiving a furlough from his vessel, he went ashore, and being a very young man he was inveigled into a series of little indiscretions, so that when he was ready to report again to his vessel she had left her moorings, and he was unable to reach her. For this reason he was returned as a deserter.

He does not seek this correction of his record with any reference to an application for pension, although he cites the fact that in 1866, by a series of accidents, he lost the fingers of both hands. He is at present a man of some 67 years of age. He does not expect to enjoy this life very much longer, and being a patriotic citizen of the United States, he naturally desires before he dies that his record may be cleared so that he may leave an honorable name to his children. On this ground and this ground only I base my support of this application, and I do hope that in view of the age of the applicant and the peculiar circumstances the bill will receive favorable consideration.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Will the gentleman explain why this "patriotic gentleman" happened to wait forty-seven years before seeking relief from this charge?

Mr. FIELDER. Well, I never asked him that question. His action in this respect was doubtless due to some consideration of his own. As I have stated, he is now a man of advanced years—a man of good moral habits; and his object in seeking the passage of this bill, in view of the short time that he has to live, is that he desires to hand down to his children a clear record. The service in connection with which he is charged with being a deserter was during the Mexican war, of which I know nothing. But I do believe that this claim is just.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. It was nearly thirty years ago that he lost his fingers.

Mr. FIELDER. Yes; and during the intervening time he has eked out a very comfortable living. He is not in impoverished circumstances. He earns his own support and has a comfortable inheritance. He does not seek the passage of this bill with reference to any application for pension.

Mr. BALDWIN. If this application is not made with any reference to pension, I should like to know why the applicant states in this report that he would not have taken this action but for the fact of his having maimed his hands.

Mr. FIELDER. At that time I believe he did make application for pension, which he now withdraws.

Mr. BALDWIN. I think the case had better be put fairly and squarely before the Committee of the Whole. This man desires his record corrected with the view to securing a pension.

Mr. FIELDER. No, sir.

Mr. BALDWIN. Well, I think we can put no other construction upon the case; and it seems to me it would be best to put the matter in that shape.

Mr. JONES. Let the bill be amended.

Mr. FIELDER. Gentlemen can amend the bill if they like; but I feel justified in saying that the applicant for the passage of this bill does not seek it for the purpose of securing a pension.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Chairman, I have been advised, correctly or incorrectly, that there is a disposition on the part of one or more of the Representatives on this floor to object to any bill that may come before the committee this evening, whether it be meritorious or otherwise. Therefore, I have asked and received recognition from the Chair. I favor this bill (without going into any discussion of its merits) for the reason that it has been passed upon by the regularly authorized Pensions Committee. I have served upon the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and I know that the gentlemen composing that committee have been very careful to investigate thoroughly every bill brought before them, and the passage of any bill by that committee is a sufficient guaranty to satisfy me that it is worthy of consideration and passage by this Committee of the Whole and by the House. I favor the passage of this bill, as I shall all others which may be brought here upon a favorable report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A MEMBER. This bill is not from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. HAINES. I have the floor at present, and I do not know that I shall be recognized later. I wish to complete my statement in relation to the matter now under consideration.

Mr. Chairman, having been elected a member of the House of Representatives, early in 1893 I called up claim No. 23334, the pension claim of Jeremiah Whitbeck, of my district, and I asked for a statement of that claim. On January 6, 1893, I was notified that it was in the hands of a special examiner. I waited long and patiently until I was asked concerning it by the people interested. I again inquired the status of the claim; and on April 13 of the same year I was again notified that it was in the hands of a special examiner. I again called it up on July 1, 1893, and was notified that it was still in the hands of a special examiner.

On October 20 it went to a special examiner in Sullivan County. I do not know the reason why. Again, later, the notice received was that it awaited letters of inquiry. Later, I was informed that more information was required, and later that it must go before an examining board. Later, I was told that a new declaration must be filed; again, that a medical examination was necessary; then that further testimony was required, and again it was referred to the medical bureau. Then it went to a board of surgeons to await additional information. Then it went to the board of surgeons again, to determine the rate of pension, and so on until February 4, 1895, it went to a special examination in Minnesota. That is one of the claims that I have been requested to facilitate, and yet this, as other like claims, is not settled.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Is that the case under consideration now?

Mr. HAINES. No; it is not the case under consideration at the present time. I am only stating the reasons why I favor this or any other bill brought before this committee after having passed the Committee on Invalid Pensions or any other committee of the House, because I believe in the integrity and honor of those people who represent their constituents here upon these committees. When I was a member of that committee I was careful, and so is every member of that committee, to determine each claim upon its merits.

The case that I mention has been before the Pension Commissioner for years, and still, knowing it to be a claim that must sooner or later receive recognition, the Pension Department does not want evidently to place an extra expense upon this Administration. That is about the truth of the case.

Mr. PAGE. Has it not been rejected yet?

Mr. HAINES. It has never been rejected. If it was rejected, why then that would settle the matter; but they do not reject it. They hold on and hold on. That man is either entitled to a pension or he is not entitled to a pension. I want it settled one way or the other, and I can not get it settled.

Mr. HAYES. Nobody will get anything settled if the gentleman keeps on talking.

Mr. HAINES. I only wish to talk for a few minutes. Going up into my district three months ago I was very happy to take to a man named Martin P. Hoy, who was in the county house in Columbia County, N. Y., a pension certificate. I knew it would gladden his heart, for he had waited long years for that pension. Putting it in my pocket, I intended to deliver the certificate personally to this poor man, who was being supported by our county. I had occasion to go there to attend the funeral of a Masonic brother, and I went to Ghent to deliver this pension, when I was surprised to find that the poor man, tired of waiting for his pension, had hanged himself.

Mr. HAYES. If they were granting pensions to dead men, what are you complaining about?

Mr. HAINES. It came too late. They are making these men wait too long in cases where they are legitimately entitled to pensions, and I am not one of that class that ask the people who are entitled to pensions to wait any longer. I do not belong to that party, thank God, that asks that. I do not belong to the party of the gentleman from Virginia, or of the gentleman from Alabama, or of those men who object always to these claims that are brought forward here. I claim to be a Democrat, and a New York Democrat, but not of that class of Democracy. [Applause.] The reason that I speak to-night upon this subject is that day before yesterday I called up a bill (H. R. 5877) for the relief of a man named Michael Gaul, living in my district.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry—and I speak with all deference to my friend from New York—I am very sorry to raise a point of order on this line of discussion. It is not germane to the subject under consideration at all.

Mr. TUCKER. I do not think the gentleman is right about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think that the point of order is well taken, and hopes the gentleman from New York will confine himself to the bill under consideration. The gentleman from New York will proceed in order.

Mr. HAINES. I think I can proceed in order, Mr. Chairman, and I do not intend to delay any of the bills here.

A MEMBER. You are doing it by talking.

Mr. HAINES. That is what I am here for, to talk. [Laughter.] This bill that I called up day before yesterday (H. R. 5877) was objected to by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STALLINGS]. I will only take the time of the committee for a few moments, as they are listening so attentively to my remarks, for which I thank them, to state that this constituent of mine entered the Navy and served four years, reenlisted and served three years, and was honorably discharged. He appeals to me, as his Representative, to get a charge of desertion removed, for after the third enlistment he indulged too freely and went home.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. He could not live in your district, then.

Mr. HAINES. It is something unusual there, I will acknowledge. He got drunk and went home, and now he asks that that charge be removed, stating that he never had any bounty, any back pay, but that he has three girls and two boys, and on account of his children he wants that charge removed, without asking anything else from the Government, directly or indirectly. Still that bill was objected to.

And, as I stated in the beginning, I have in the past and I shall in the future, so long as I am honored by the people I represent, vote for any bill passed by the Pension Committee of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman whether or not he would consent to an amendment to this bill. I do not exactly remember the language of the bill now, but it seems to me that the usual provision, that the soldier shall receive no bounty or back pay, is not in this bill. I understand, of course, the gentleman will not object to that amendment, as it is the usual amendment put on by the committee. I want to ask the gentleman, as this applicant is in comfortable circumstances, whether he will not consent that the amendment shall also be made that he shall receive no pension by reason of the passage of this act.

Mr. FIELDER. I will make no objection whatever to the suggestion of the gentleman; but I do think the gentleman from Virginia would take my word for it.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman accept that as an amendment?

Mr. FIELDER. I accept the amendment, if the gentleman from Virginia insists upon it.

Mr. JONES. I move to amend by inserting the following proviso:

Provided, That no bounty, back pay, or pension shall be paid by virtue of the passage of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, That no bounty, back pay, or pension shall be paid by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. As I understood the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia, it did not include pension, but simply bounty and back pay. I shall object to this amendment.

Mr. JONES. I included the word "pension," because the gentleman having charge of the bill said that the party did not want a pension, and he had no objection to the amendment.

Mr. HULL. In all the bills reported by the Committee on Military Affairs removing the charge of desertion we put in the words:

Provided, No pay or emolument shall become due by virtue of the passage of this act.

I think that is sufficient.

Mr. JONES. My amendment included the word "pension" also.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. How does the amendment read?

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no bounty, back pay, or pension shall be paid by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I move to strike out the words "or pension."

The question was taken on the amendment to the amendment; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. JONES. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 3.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill as amended with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. JONES. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 1.

So the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MICHAEL RYAN.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). Mr. Chairman, I desire to have considered the bill (H. R. 8391) for the relief of Michael Ryan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to revoke the order dishonorably discharging Private Michael Ryan, Company I, Fifth Regiment United States Infantry, on September 20, 1865, and to issue to him an honorable discharge from the military service of the United States as of that date.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask that the report be read.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I reserve the point of order on the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. This is not a case of desertion.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. This is not a bill for the removal of the charge of desertion.

Mr. DOCKERY. This is a court-martial case, and is not in order at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Minnesota upon the point of order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Chairman, I am not aware that this bill is not entirely in order. I supposed the bill was in order. I talked with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] with respect to the bill, and he was of the opinion that it was in order.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, that bill is not in order; and discussion on that point only delays the transaction of other business.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause the rule to be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the rule.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will withdraw the bill, as there seems to be some objection, and I do not wish to interpose any obstacle in the way of the transaction of business.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the committee has no jurisdiction to deal with the case.

ALEXANDER M. LAUGHLIN.

Mr. FUNK (when his name was called). Mr. Chairman, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 8884) granting a pension to Alexander M. Laughlin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alexander M. Laughlin, who was a private in the company of Capt. George B. Willis, Fortieth Regiment, Fourth Brigade, First Division of the Illinois State Militia, and who served as such in the Indian war of 1832, known as the Black Hawk war, and pay to him a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. MOSES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8884) granting a pension to Alexander M. Laughlin, have considered the same and respectfully report as follows:

The claimant was a private in Capt. George B. Willis's company, Fortieth Regiment, Fourth Brigade, First Division of Illinois Volunteers, in the Black Hawk war. The rolls of the company, which are on file with your committee, fail to show the exact date of his enlistment, but this presumably took place on May 21, 1862, as nearly all of the other members of the company enlisted on that day. He was mustered out with the company on June 18, 1862.

Although, as stated above, the exact date of enlistment is not shown by the rolls, it is fair to presume that, like the majority of the company, he served twenty-nine days—just one day short of the time required to give title to pension under the Indian-war act of July 27, 1862.

Mr. Laughlin is now 79 years old and in straitened circumstances, and unable to do anything toward earning a support.

The passage of the bill is respectfully recommended, with an amendment fixing the rate of pension at $12 per month, so as to conform to the provisions of an act passed by the House at this session and now on Senate Calendar.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARIA T. KARGÉ.

Mr. GARDNER (when his name was called). Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (S. 1230) for the relief of Maria T. Kargé.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Maria T. Kargé, widow of Joseph Kargé, colonel Second Regiment New Jersey Cavalry, at the rate of $30 per month.

The report (by Mr. FIELDER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (S. 1230) to pension Maria T. Kargé, and submit the following report:

This bill passed the Senate March 15, 1894, the following facts being shown in the report of the committee.

The beneficiary, Maria T. Kargé, is the widow of Joseph Kargé, late colonel Second New Jersey Cavalry. She is 74 years of age, without property, and dependent on others for support.

The late Colonel Kargé was a most gallant and meritorious officer, as will be seen from the subjoined letter of the Record and Pension Office of the War Department. He was a native of Poland, and took part in the revolutionary movement in Europe in 1848. He entered the Union Army in 1861 and was mustered out in 1865. He was one of our most efficient foreign officers, and was many times trusted with special duties, which he discharged with signal credit and ability. At the battle of Rappahannock Station, Va., August 20, 1862, he was wounded while in action with his command. For this wound he was pensioned. He fell dead of heart disease December 27, 1892, while crossing the ferry from Jersey City to New York. The medical records fail to state the diagnosis of his case or his disposition at the time of his last admission to the regimental hospital, May 30, 1865, and it is therefore impracticable to prove the origin in the service of the complaint of which he died to the satisfaction of the Pension Bureau.

The records of the War Department show that Joseph Kargé was mustered in as lieutenant-colonel First New Jersey Cavalry October 18, 1861; August 31, 1862, absent, wounded, in hospital, Washington, D. C.; received gunshot wound left thigh August 19, 1862; resigned December 22, 1862; was mustered in as colonel Second New Jersey Cavalry September 25, 1863; mustered out November 1, 1865.

The records of the Pension Bureau show that he was pensioned at $30 per month for gunshot wound of left thigh, and died December 27, 1892, from syncope from valvular disease of heart.

It is also stated that he was appointed first lieutenant Eighth United States Cavalry July 18, 1867, and mustered out January 1, 1871.

The widow has applied for pension both under the general law and under the act of June 27, 1890, and both claims are pending, awaiting evidence called for February 1, 1894, as to prior marriage of the claimant and death of her former husband.

The proof shows that she is without property or income, and it is reasonably certain that a pension of $8 per month will be allowed her under the act of June 27, 1890; and while his death from heart disease may not be traceable to his military service, in view of all the circumstances the committee report the bill back and recommend its passage.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, while it is true that this bill is reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I can hardly understand why a favorable report is made in this case. I can not now recollect of the case being up, and must appeal to the gentleman on the committee who seems to have made the report [Mr. FIELDER]. Here is a widow that has applied, and her claim is pending both under the general law and under the act of June 27, 1890.

Mr. GARDNER. Since the data on which this report was based have been obtained the pension has been granted by the Pension Bureau at the rate of $8 per month. It is not now pending. As a matter of fact, the certificate has been issued.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Now, Mr. Chairman, accepting that statement as true—

Mr. GARDNER. That is the fact.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I know it is true. I do not mean to question it in the way my language would perhaps imply. But accepting that statement as true, here is a pension granted under the act of June 27, 1890, an act which expressly states in terms that no discrimination shall be made on account of rank. Now, what reason does there appear here in this case for the granting an increase from eight to thirty dollars per month? Would the reasons given here for an increase from eight to thirty dollars per month be sufficient were it the case of a widow of a private soldier or a second lieutenant?

Mr. GARDNER. If I may answer that question right here, I will say that if a private soldier or a second lieutenant had performed as valuable services as those of Colonel Kargé, she would be entitled to such a pension at the hands of this House.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I do not want to take up more time than I can avoid, for time is precious; but here is a general law. Under the general law, where death is the result of army service the widow of a second lieutenant is entitled to a pension of $15 a month, the widow of a first lieutenant $17 a month, of a captain $20 a month, of a major $25, and of a colonel and all ranks above that $30 per month.

Under the act of June 27, 1890, regardless of the question of rank, the widow is entitled, it dependent upon her own labor, to but $8 per month. Now, I have called the attention of the committee to this bill, and with all respect to the gentleman who has made the favorable report on the bill, and I have no recollection of it myself, it seems to me that the Committee of the Whole should not pass this bill. If you do you will find that you have set a precedent which will come to you in the next Congress and in succeeding Congresses and will plague you to the very uttermost.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, if my memory is not at fault this bill is precisely in line with one recently passed by this committee and by the House in the case of the widow of Samuel F. Starr, reported favorably by the Committee on Invalid Pensions and favored by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN]. That was a case where the death of the soldier at 81 years of age could not be traced to his military service. So is this. That was the case of a colonel who had performed most gallant and meritorious services. So is this. That was the case of an old soldier who had left a widow of more than three-score and ten. So is this. In so far as I am aware the cases are wholly parallel. Now, I do not advance this as a reason why the Committee of the Whole ought to vote to lay this bill aside with a favorable recommendation, but I do advance it as what seems to me a conclusive reason why the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions should not oppose it.

One word further as to the merits of this bill, though I do not know that anything more need be said than is set forth in the report. Colonel Kargé entered the Army in 1861 as lieutenant-colonel of a New Jersey cavalry regiment. He performed most meritorious services and was grievously wounded. He resigned. Recovering, he reenlisted and was mustered in as colonel of a cavalry regiment, and so served until the end of the war. Because of his services and because of the nature of his wounds, he was pensioned by the Department at the rate of $30 per month. A year or two ago he fell dead. His widow is now more than seventy-four years old. She was past seventy-four when the data on which the report is made came to the committee, and so much time passes in getting these bills advanced that I do not know how much older she may be now.

Mr. HERMANN. What are her circumstances?

Mr. GARDNER. Her circumstances are those, I may say, of extreme poverty. Colonel Kargé was not a native of this country. He came here poor. He was a scholar, a professor in Princeton College after the war, and this bill is pressed by nobody, perhaps, with as much earnestness as by the faculty of Princeton. Living there a scholastic life, he accumulated nothing. He died without estate. He left a widow who must be now 75 years of age, with nothing to depend upon but the $3 a month granted her by the Pension Bureau.

Mr. FIELDER. And that only six months ago.

Mr. HERMANN. Are her relatives in needy circumstances?

Mr. GARDNER. Her relatives, I believe, are in needy circumstances where they live, and they are not in this country.

Mr. Chairman, I am asked why, being the widow of a colonel who was wounded, this lady is not entitled to $30 a month under the law. I understand the reason to be this, that the man's death of heart disease two years ago can not be shown to be the result of his wound, and therefore his widow can only be pensioned under the act of 1890.

Mr. HERMANN. Has she any children to support her?

Mr. GARDNER. She has none that I am aware of.

Mr. FIELDER. Mr. Chairman, I will state that she has one son, who lives abroad and never has been in this country except as a visitor.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER] to say that there are precedents for this bill. I have in my hand a report made by the Committee on Invalid Pensions upon the application of the widow of a gentleman who served as colonel and who, when he was mustered out, was a brigadier-general and was retired as a brigadier-general. This is an adverse report and it is the unanimous report of the Committee on Pensions, and I desire to read the last paragraph of it to this body:

This lady is now receiving a pension two and a half times as large as that of a private's widow, and your committee are unable to see any reason why further discrimination should be made in her favor. This committee has invariably of late years refused to report favorably bills of this character, increasing the pension of widows because of the high rank of their husbands, believing it to be personal or class legislation of a very unwise character. Your committee therefore recommend that this bill do lie on the table.

Mr. FIELDER. What case is that?

Mr. JONES. This is the case of Alice K. Potter. Mr. APSLEY submitted the report, and it is the unanimous report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, in which they say that the committee has invariably of late years refused to report bills of this character. Now, Mr. Chairman, it does seem to me that this is the true doctrine. It does seem to me that if this has been the invariable policy of the committee—

Mr. LACEY. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that in the pending case the widow of the officer is drawing only $8 a month, while in the case reported by Mr. APSLEY, from which the gentleman has just read, the widow was drawing $30 a month, and the pending bill is a proposition to increase the pension of $8 a month to $30 a month, the same amount that Mrs. Potter was drawing.

Mr. JONES. I understand that. The application in the case from which I have read was to grant a pension of $50 a month to the widow of a general. The pending bill is a proposition to grant $30 a month to the widow of a colonel.

Mr. LACEY. He was a brevet major-general also.

Mr. JONES. I am simply reading the reasons of the committee and their conclusions. They say that this application proposes to give the widow about two and a half times as much as she was receiving. The application now under consideration is to give the widow nearly four times as much as she receives. But the committee say that their reason for reporting adversely the bill to which I have referred is that they failed to see any reason why a distinction should be made between the widow of an officer and the widow of a private. They state that position broadly; they make no exception. And this is a unanimous report. Even my friend from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] is supposed to have voted for the report. And the report states that it has been the invariable course of the committee in late years to make no distinction of this sort between the widows of private soldiers and the widows of officers.

Mr. HAYES. Is not that report based upon the idea that the committee would not give the widow by special act more than she would have received under the general law, provided the husband had died from injuries incurred in army service?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; not at all.

Mr. HAYES. I think that is the distinction.

Mr. JONES. Not at all. I will read the language of the report:

This committee has invariably of late years refused to report favorably bills of this character, increasing the pension of widows because of the high rank of their husbands, believing it to be personal or class legislation of a very unwelcome character.

Mr. HAYES. The gentleman fails to apprehend correctly the idea of the committee. They were unwilling to increase the pension of the widow beyond what she would receive if her husband had died of injuries incurred in the military service. They do not object to bills (because they have continually reported such bills) bringing up the pension to what it would have been if the husband had died by reason of his army service.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman is no doubt correct in saying that the committee has repeatedly reported such bills as he mentions. But in this case the committee did not make such a report, and they say they have invariably refused to do so.

Mr. HAYES. The gentleman does not get the correct meaning of the language used by the committee. What they mean is that they will not, because the applicant is an officer or the widow of an officer, increase the pension beyond what the law would give provided the disability or death had resulted from injuries received in the Army. They do not mean that they would not give an officer's widow more than they would the widow of a common soldier.

Mr. JONES. That question does not arise in this case at all. The report is a very short one, and I have read nearly everything that it contains. They base the report upon the broad ground I have stated.

Mr. HAYES. The gentleman mistakes the meaning of the committee.

Mr. JONES. I know that the committee in taking this ground is a little inconsistent. Some of the members of the committee who favor bills of the character now before us were probably absent when this report was adopted or did not understand exactly its effect. Still, the report comes before the House as a unanimous report.

Mr. HAYES. In the case to which that report refers the pension under the law would have been $30; and the effort was to increase it to $50 on the ground that the applicant was the widow of an officer. The committee decided that they were opposed to any such proposition.

Mr. JONES. This lady is now receiving the very highest pension that can be given under the law; and the gentleman who has charge of this bill says that he thinks it ought to be increased on account of the services or rank of her husband.

Mr. HAYES. Increased up to the amount which it would be if the soldier had died by reason of his army service.

Mr. JONES. I simply wanted to read this report so that gentlemen of the Committee of the Whole might understand the views of the committee on this subject.

The question being taken on laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation, it was agreed to; there being, on a division (called for by Mr. JONES)—ayes 53, noes 7.

MARY TUTTLE.

Mr. GRIFFIN of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I desire to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 5616) granting a pension to Mary Tuttle.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Mary Tuttle, formerly widow of Joseph Lester, late of Sixth Battery, Wisconsin Light Artillery, and to cause to be paid to her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (H. R. 5616) granting a pension to Mary Tuttle, and submit the following report:

The petitioner was formerly the widow of Joseph Lester, who served in Sixth Independent Battery Wisconsin Light Artillery, from September 23, 1861, to October 10, 1864, and died April 21, 1883, from disease of lungs. In June, 1883, a pension was allowed to his widow, the petitioner, at $8 per month from the date of his death until her remarriage to Albert Tuttle November 3, 1885, the total amount paid her being $330.47. It appears that this was her third marriage, and that this third husband died February 6, 1891. The following statement appears in the Senate report of June 27, 1892, Fifty-second Congress:

"Mrs. Tuttle was the wife of John N. Thomas, who was a private in Company K, Twenty-third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, who died in the service December 16, 1862. In October, 1864, she married Joseph Lester, who belonged to the Sixth Wisconsin Battery. Lester died April 21, 1883. She applied for a pension, but there was long delay, and, being entirely dependent, she married Albert Tuttle in November, 1885. After her marriage to Tuttle she received an allowance of pension due her on her application as widow, and February 6, 1891, Tuttle died. She is three times a widow, twice the widow of soldiers. At the present time she is infirm with age and very poor."

The purpose of this bill is to place her on the pension rolls now as widow of Lester at $12 per month.

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass after being amended by inserting, after the word "roll," in line 4, the words "subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws."

The amendment reported by the committee, as stated in the concluding paragraph of the report, was agreed to.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I should like to have the gentleman from Wisconsin make some statement of this case.

Mr. GRIFFIN of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I can by any further statement give any information beyond that embraced in the report. The chief question, as I apprehend, involved in this case is one of precedent; and I believe that the Committee on Invalid Pensions, which has been so careful, particularly with reference to the establishment of improper precedents, would not have reported unanimously in favor of this bill unless the precedents were such as to warrant such a report. This woman was twice the widow of soldiers; and I would ask the gentleman from South Carolina how many soldiers he would have a woman bury before he thinks she is entitled to a pension? [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Has she been married three times?

Mr. GRIFFIN of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Was the last husband a soldier?

Mr. GRIFFIN of Wisconsin. No; he was a civilian, and died about four years ago. This lady is poor; is 64 years of age. She has no relatives younger or older than she is upon whom she may depend for her support. If the third marriage amounts to anything it cancels, according to the general law, the claim which she had upon the Government on account of her widowhood of one soldier. And, Mr. Chairman, I hope to live long enough to raise my voice in the next Congress against the unconstitutional, unnatural, and unjustifiable provision of law which assails, through the legislation of Congress passed years ago, the inalienable right of these widows to their pensions by depriving a woman who may have been the widow of a soldier of her pension if she marries again. It is unjustifiable, and is not founded on any natural law, any reason, or any logic.

Now, it may be that one claim of this woman has been canceled as against the Government; but the second claim still remains unsatisfied, and I ask the committee on that claim to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to make any captious objection to the passage of this or any other pension claim, but I do think if the pension law is worth anything at all it is a law that we should obey under any and all circumstances. The law under which we are acting to-night expressly says that when a widow remarries she forfeits all rights she may have had under the pension laws; and the fact that this Congress or any other Congress has given pensions to widows in like cases to this is no reason or justification why this practice should be continued or that we should continue to violate the law and the Constitution. Hence I say I hope that the Committee of the Whole will refuse to pass this bill and that thereby we will establish a precedent, or else stop the precedents that have heretofore been established, so as to prevent the recurrence of such unjustifiable pensions in the future.

I move that this bill be laid aside with the recommendation that it be reported to the House to lie on the table.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not think that a woman who is patriotic enough to marry two or three veteran soldiers ought to have at least one chance for a pension? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GRIFFIN of Wisconsin. I wish to extend to the gentleman from Rhode Island my thanks, and the thanks of the committee are evidently with him also for his inquiry.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I will answer the gentleman's inquiry.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the gentleman will.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. The patriotism of the lady is not in question at all here. The right that this lady has under the laws of the country to a pension is the only question that we are called upon to decide; and I can find any number of ladies in my district, and other districts throughout the country, who have married four or five times [laughter] and yet to-day are poor and dependent; and you need not stand here and plead poverty as an excuse for granting pensions. If you do I can go into my district and find numbers of women and children at the very point of starvation. I can bring them up by brigades and get pensions for them under that rule, if that is to be the standard.

But, Mr. Chairman, that is not the question. The question presented here is not one of patriotism, nor a question of poverty, but of right under the law we have sworn to support as members of this honorable body; and I submit that this lady, as she is, if she had buried a hundred soldiers and a hundred civilians would not be entitled to a pension under the law of the land; and I propose to stand by the law and not by the patriotism or the poverty of this, that, or the other claimant. I hope the committee will not pass favorably upon the bill.

Mr. PAGE. I am obliged to the gentleman from South Carolina for his answer, and I wish to state to him that if any of the ladies in his district who have married four or five soldiers petition for pension while I am in Congress I will cheerfully vote for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to lay the bill aside with the recommendation that it be reported to the House to lie on the table. That question takes precedence of the question to report favorably.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina) there were—ayes 10, noes 45.

Mr. JONES. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. TALBERT, and the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. GRIFFIN, as tellers.

Mr. GRIFFIN of Wisconsin. With the consent of the gentleman from Virginia, under the circumstances, I withdraw the bill.

Mr. JONES. Then I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is withdrawn, and the Clerk will proceed with the calling of the roll.

MARTHA CUSTIS CARTER.

Mr. GROUT (when his name was called). Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (S. 328) granting a pension to Martha Custis Carter, widow of the late Rear-Admiral S. P. Carter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Martha Custis Carter, widow of the late Rear-Admiral S. P. Carter, on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and pay her a pension at the rate of $75 per month, from and after the passage of this act.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

In lines 7 and 8, strike out the words "seventy-five" and insert the word "thirty."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. STALLINGS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 328) granting a pension to Martha Custis Carter, have considered the same and report:

A similar bill was introduced in the House, and, having been considered by your committee, the same was reported back to the House with the recommendation that it be amended so as to fix the rating at $30 per month, and that as so amended the bill do pass. This bill (H. R. 4794) is now on the House Calendar, and the report thereon is Report No. 1540.

Mrs. Carter is now receiving a pension of $8 per month under the Mexican war act of January 29, 1887. She endeavored to establish a claim under the general laws, but being unable to furnish the technical proof required to show that Admiral Carter's death resulted from causes originating during his active service, her application was rejected.

Your committee recommend that the Senate bill herewith be amended so as to fix the same rating as that recommended in the House bill, i. e., $30 per month; also that the title be changed so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Martha Custis Carter," etc., and that as so amended this bill be substituted for the House bill and passed.

Mr. JONES. I understand there is a Senate report on this bill, and I should like to have it read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the report is not at the desk.

Mr. GROUT. I have a copy of the Senate report, made by Senator PALMER. If the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] will give his attention for a moment, I will say that this Senate report is somewhat long. It is the report on the bill as it passed the Senate, providing a pension of $75 a month. The House having previously reported a bill at $30, the House committee propose an amendment to this Senate bill reducing the amount to $30 a month.

Mr. JONES. So I understand. I am very anxious to hear the Senate report, because I want to hear something about the services of the late Rear-Admiral Carter.

The Senate report (by Mr. PALMER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 328) granting a pension to Mrs. Martha Custis Carter, have examined the same and report:

Your committee find that Rear-Admiral Samuel Powhatan Carter bore a highly honorable record in both the Army and Navy, of which the following is a synopsis:

Samuel Powhatan Carter, Tennessee, midshipman, United States Navy, February 14, 1840; passed midshipman, July 11, 1846; master, September 12, 1854; lieutenant, April 18, 1855; lieutenant-commander, July 10, 1862; brigadier-general volunteers, May 1, 1863; brevet major-general volunteers, March 13, 1865, for gallant and meritorious service during the war; honorably mustered out of volunteer service January 15, 1866; commander, United States Navy, June 25, 1865; captain, October 25, 1870; commodore, November 13, 1878; retired August 9, 1881; retired with rank of rear-admiral May 6, 1882.

We also find that a similar bill had been introduced in the Fifty-second Congress, first session, and was carefully considered by the Committee on Pensions of the Senate, and a report was made thereon by Senator DAVIS, then chairman of the committee, which is hereto appended as follows, which your committee endorse and herewith make a part of this report:

"The bill to grant a pension to Martha Custis Carter, the widow of the late Admiral S. P. Carter, is supported by most meritorious considerations.

"Admiral Carter was appointed a midshipman in the Navy February 1, 1840, and remained in constant service, having meanwhile risen to the rank of lieutenant, until July 9, 1861, when he was detailed to special duty at the War Department. This was done at his instance, in order that he might be enabled to transfer his service from the ocean to the land and to enable him to raise troops in his native State of Tennessee in defense of the Union. In this he was successful, and was commissioned as a colonel in the Army.

"He was promoted from grade to grade until he attained the rank of major-general, in which rank he served until the conclusion of the war. He thereupon resumed his position in the Navy, and from grade to grade rose to the position of rear-admiral on the retired list, May 6, 1882, and died intestate on the 26th day of May, 1891, leaving his widow little or no property.

"Services so distinguished and various should receive the fullest recognition, and the committee accordingly recommend the passage of the bill."

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill as amended, by inserting in line 7, after the word "of" and before the word "dollars," the words "seventy-five;" so as to read "$75 per month."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARIAN C. GURNEY.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska (when his name was called). Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 5560) granting a pension to Marian C. Gurney.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $12 per month, the name of Marian C. Gurney, the indigent widow of James W. Gurney, late a captain of Company E, One hundred and twenty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, who was wounded at the battle of Antietam, Md., on September 7, 1862, and from the effects of which wound he died on or about May 18, 1876.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the adoption of the amendments set forth in the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. MEIKLEJOHN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (H. R. 5560) granting a pension to Marian C. Gurney, and submit the following report:

The claimant is the widow of James W. Gurney, who was captain of Company E, One hundred and twenty-seventh New York Volunteers, from September 8, 1862, to October 23, 1864; her marriage to him is shown by the original marriage certificate to have occurred June 17, 1873, and the fact is also shown by testimony of several witnesses as is also the fact that she has no means of support but her own labor at the washtub, and that she has not remarried since the soldier's death.

The soldier never applied for pension. It is alleged that he was wounded at Antietam, but of this there is no satisfactory proof.

The widow can not secure a pension under the general laws, for the reason that she is unable to prove positively that the soldier is dead, much less to prove that his death was due to his military service. There is abundant circumstantial evidence, as set forth more fully in the Senate Report No. 1063, tending to show that the soldier died about May 18, 1876, while on his way from Michigan to join his family in Nebraska. His family relations were pleasant; he has not been heard of for about eighteen years, and, in short, the evidence at hand leaves no logical conclusion but that he died in 1876.

In view of these facts, it seems clearly proper that the widow should be pensioned under the act of June 27, 1890, but not under the rates provided for cases where the soldier's death is clearly shown to be a result of his military service.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass after being amended by striking out the words "at the rate of $12 per month," in lines 4 and 5, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the act approved June 27, 1890," and by striking out all of the bill after the word "infantry," in line 8.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, this report refers to a Senate report, which sets forth the circumstances of this man's disappearance, and I hope that will be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman a copy of the Senate report?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I have not the Senate report which is referred to in the report already read, but I have the Senate report adopted this year, which incorporates that Senate report, and I send it to the Clerk's desk. I will, however, suggest that this is the same case which I canvassed with my friend from Virginia [Mr. JONES], and the Senate report is rather long. It introduces no new fact, other than has already been stated, and I trust the gentleman will not take up the time of the committee by asking that it be again read.

Mr. JONES. I do not think that the time is at all wasted in giving the House that information. I think it is just as little as we can do, if these cases are not discussed, to have the meager facts given in the reports. I understand from this report that this man disappeared. This woman does not know whether she is a widow or not. She does not know whether this man is living or dead, and she can not, of course, trace his death to the wounds which she knows he received in the war. It does seem to me that the circumstances ought to be set forth with sufficient clearness for this committee to be able to judge whether or not the man is really dead, or whether they are simply separated. I should like to have the Senate report read.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Does the gentleman think that the Senate report sets forth the facts in the case any more succinctly or concisely than the gentleman himself has stated them?

Mr. JONES. It sets forth the facts much more fully. I do not understand my friend from Nebraska to state the facts.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. But my friend from Virginia has already stated that the man disappeared. Eighteen years have elapsed. That is the only question, and that is known to the committee. I should think the gentleman would be willing to take a vote on that.

Mr. JONES. We should like to know the circumstances, whether they were living together or not.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. But they did live together. Why not let a vote be taken?

Mr. JONES. It will not do any harm to have the report read.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, as this bill has already passed the Senate, I ask, with the consent of my friend from Virginia [Mr. JONES], to move an amendment substituting the Senate bill, which is now on the Speaker's desk, in place of the House bill.

Mr. JONES. What is the difference in the bill?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. There is no difference.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. If the Senate bill is upon the Speaker's table, I suggest that the gentleman ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill be substituted for the House bill, so that we may consider it rather than the House bill, and then have the Senate report read.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. That is my motion.

Mr. JONES. I would like to ask whether that can be done in Committee of the Whole?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Nebraska where the Senate bill is?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. The Senate bill is on the Speaker's table. Now I move to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill and that the Committee of the Whole to-night act upon the Senate bill instead of the House bill. Is there objection? (After a pause.) The Chair hears none.

The title of the Senate bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 2539) granting a pension to Marian C. Gurney.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the Senate report.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Senate report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the Senate report is precisely in the language of the House report, which has been read once.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I noticed when the House report was being read reference was made to the Senate report for a fuller statement.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. The variation is in the small type. If the Clerk will read the small type in the report of the Senate the gentleman will find the new matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk then, without reading the entire report, will read the additional facts.

The Clerk read as follows:

The following is a copy of the report made by Mr. Paddock, from the Committee on Pensions, made to the Senate in the Fifty-second Congress, first session, to accompany S. 3265:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2535) granting a pension to Marian C. Gurney, have examined the same and report:

Claimant is the widow of James W. Gurney, late a captain of Company E, One hundred and twenty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry.

The soldier was wounded in action at the battle of Antietam, Md., September 7, 1862, and is said to have died from the effects of the above-mentioned wound on or about May 18, 1876.

It appears from the evidence in the case that the widow is in destitute circumstances and dependent upon her own exertions for the support of herself and children.

Claimant states under oath that the late soldier was teaching school at Coldwater, Mich., in the year 1870; that a little while before the close of the school term a party of friends decided to leave Michigan and settle in Nebraska, and that her late husband had also decided to make his home in the State of Nebraska, but owing to the fact that his school had not as yet closed for the season, he sent her and the children with the party of friends to Nebraska, intending to follow in a few weeks; that soon after reaching Nebraska she received a card stating that her husband was very ill; that she was prostrated by a high fever and remained unconscious and helpless for a long time; that during her illness above referred to another card came announcing the death of her husband; that as soon as she was able after her recovery from sickness she made diligent and persistent efforts to ascertain the circumstances attending her husband's death, but has never been able to obtain full and satisfactory information; that she has not heard from him since the spring of 1876, and that she firmly believes that he died on or about May 18, 1876.

Mrs. Caroline Niles, formerly of Coldwater, Mich., now a resident of Nebraska, testifies that she knew Mr. and Mrs. Gurney as husband and wife, living together in happy relations, at Coldwater, Mich.; that she has personal knowledge that claimant's statements respecting the death of her husband are true in every particular.

In affidavit executed July 8, 1892, Hon. J. E. Hill, treasurer of the State of Nebraska, testifies that he has known claimant since 1860 and believes her to be a lady in whose word the utmost confidence may be placed. Mr. John A. Forbes, of Beatrice, Nebr., a gentleman of high standing, states that claimant is a person of the highest integrity and is justly entitled to a pension on account of the service and disability of her late husband.

Under similar circumstances a person not heard from within seven years would be presumed to be dead. Nothing has been heard from this soldier within the past sixteen years. It is, therefore, reasonable to conclude that he is now numbered among the dead, and that claimant as his lawful widow has a pensionable status. She has exhausted all of her sources of information respecting his death, and as he was not a pensioner during his lifetime, nor has anybody else drawn a pension on account of his service, and admitting that his death was brought about by no fault of his, the issuing of a pension certificate to claimant would be an act of simple justice to herself and children. As her needs are pressing, the allowance of her pension should not be delayed a day longer than is absolutely necessary.

The facts seem to warrant favorable action, and your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill with the following proviso as an amendment:

Amend by adding, after the word "Infantry," in line 8, the following: "Provided, That if it shall at any time be ascertained that said James W. Gurney is living, then the pension herein granted shall cease to be paid to said widow."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state in reference to the action of the committee a few moments ago in substituting the Senate bill for the House bill, that in the opinion of the Chair that action was without authority for this reason: The Senate bill reported from the Senate is upon the Speaker's table and has not yet been presented to the House; and therefore this committee has no jurisdiction of that bill. Without objection the action substituting the Senate bill for the House bill will be vacated. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection. The committee will act upon the House bill; and the Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Nebraska that if this bill is laid aside with a favorable recommendation he can substitute the Senate bill for the House bill when the bill is properly before the House.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I wish, however, Mr. Chairman, to offer this amendment or proviso, which was engrafted in the Senate, so as to make it in all its terms correspond with the Senate bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding the following proviso after the word "Infantry," in line 8:

"Provided, That if it shall at any time be ascertained that said James W. Gurney is living, then the pension herein granted shall cease to be paid to said widow."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MICHAEL GAUL.

Mr. HAINES (when his name was called). I wish to call up the bill (H. R. 5877) for the relief of Michael Gaul. I think this committee has jurisdiction over this bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to correct the record of Michael Gaul by removing the charge of desertion which now stands against him on the records of the Navy Department, and to issue to him a certificate of honorable discharge from the United States Marine Corps.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. HAINES. It has been suggested that the words "or pension" be inserted in the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. From what committee does this come?

Mr. HAINES. From the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Then I make the point of order that we have no jurisdiction of it to-night.

Mr. JONES. This is a bill for the removal of the charge of desertion, as I understand; and the rule, as I read it, is:

That the evening session shall be devoted to the consideration of private bills reported from the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion only.

It does not confine the committee to bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I am mistaken; I withdraw the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the bill is properly before the committee. The Clerk will now read the report.

Mr. HAINES. I may say, in all fairness to the gentleman who has raised objection to this bill, that I desire to offer an amendment that is marked in pencil upon the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "bounty," in line 9, insert the words "or pension."

Mr. JONES. Has the report been read? If it has not, I would like the gentleman from New York to make a statement in regard to the bill.

Mr. HAINES. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that request.

Mr. JONES. I will say to my friend that I am not raising any objection; but this is a bill to remove the charge of desertion, and I think the House ought to have some information upon which to act.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I think the shortest way is to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. MEYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs have considered the bill (H. R. 5877) for the relief of Michael Gaul, and submit the following report:

The purpose of this bill is to remove the charge of desertion against Michael Gaul, who was a sailor in the United States Marine Corps and Navy.

The records of the Navy Department show that he enlisted in the Marine Corps October 26, 1861, and was honorably discharged November 8, 1865; enlisted in the Navy December 17, 1866, as first-class fireman, and was honorably discharged April 23, 1870; enlisted again in the Marine Corps January 25, 1871, and deserted February 16, 1871, and the Navy Department has no authority under the general law to remove this charge.

The petitioner states, in explanation of this charge of desertion, that he was on a spree with some of his old shipmates, and when he became sober he regretted what he had done, but his health not being good he returned to his home and never returned to duty; that he wishes the charge of desertion removed for the sake of his family; that he had one brother killed in the war and another who served through the war; that he never received any bounty or prize money.

There is on file, an original number of a newspaper, the Hogo News, dated September 24, 1868, containing a letter from an officer of the United States steamer Iroquois describing the rescue from drowning of a Japanese (whose boat had capsized) by the united efforts of William Hawkins and Michael Gaul, at the imminent peril of their own lives.

The petitioner states that William Hawkins, above referred to, assaulted a comrade with a razor and subsequently deserted from the Iroquois, but was reinstated in his rank as a petty officer by the President because of his assistance in rescuing the Japanese.

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass after being amended by adding the words:

"Provided, That no arrears of pay or bounty shall be allowed to the said Michael Gaul by this act."

The amendment of Mr. HAINES to the amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

IDA C. MARTIN.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). Mr. Chairman, I call up Senate bill No. 2032, to grant a pension to Ida C. Martin. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Ida C. Martin, widow of John A. Martin, who was colonel of the Eighth Kansas Regiment of Kansas Infantry Volunteers in the war of the rebellion.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I will simply state that this lady has never received any pension whatever, and the object of this bill is to put her upon the pension roll under the provisions of the general law. She has four young children. She is without income, and she is the widow of one of the most gallant soldiers of Kansas sent to the war.

The report (by Mr. LACEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (S. 2032) to pension Ida C. Martin, and submit the following report:

This bill proposes to pension at $50 the widow of John A. Martin, who was colonel of the Eighth Kansas Infantry, and subsequently was governor of Kansas, manager of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and commissioner of the Centennial Exposition. The claim was rejected by the Pension Bureau because of the claimant's inability to prove that the soldier's death was chargeable to his military service.

This bill passed the Senate August 10, 1894, and the Senate report, No. 640, contains the following:

"It appears from an examination of the papers that Colonel Martin enlisted on the 27th day of October, 1861, was honorably discharged November 15, 1864, and died October 2, 1890. During the campaign of 1864 he was much exposed to severe physical trials by reason of inclement weather, long marches, hard fighting, and insufficient food. By reason of these exposures and hardships he was taken down with scurvy, and with lung and throat disease, which finally resulted in his retirement from the Army after a period of more than three years' hard and faithful service.

"It appears further that the disease he contracted while in the service affected his lungs, his throat, and his skin so seriously that persons who had known him ever since that time and had been familiar with his habits readily connected his coughing and cutaneous eruptions, which were frequently exhibited afterwards, and all along during his lifetime, with his army troubles.

"After his retirement from the Army, and when he became acquainted with the lady whom he afterwards married, and who is now his widow, the claimant in this case, she frequently observed eruptions on his face and neck, accompanied by a short hacking cough, and upon calling his attention to these matters he always attributed them to his exposure and disease during the war. Her memory upon this point is clear and her statement is explicit.

"It appears further from her testimony, and from that of several witnesses, including their family physician and his partner, that after their marriage her husband frequently told her and others that his coughing and his throat troubles and his cutaneous affection had originated in his exposures during the period of his army service.

"It is shown by the sworn statement of Mrs. Martin that Colonel Martin often said that he did not expect that he would ever be relieved from the effects of the disease which he contracted during the war; and it appears that during his last sickness he spoke several times of his disease having originated while he was in the Army."

A number of affidavits are also printed in full in the Senate report referred to.

There is record evidence of scurvy and intermittent fever in 1864.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill, amended by striking out all after the word "rebellion," in line 7, and all of line 8, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I understand from the reading of the report that the claimant married this soldier after the war.

Mr. HARRIS. I believe that is true.

Mr. JONES. Can the gentleman state how long after the war she married him?

Mr. HARRIS. I think my colleague [Mr. BRODERICK] can give you the exact facts.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Chairman, I probably have a more detailed knowledge of this case than my colleague who called the bill up. It is true that this lady married the deceased officer after the war. Colonel Martin served more than three years in the Army. He went in early and was in active service during the entire period. He was discharged on account of disability contracted from exposure the last year of the war. He never applied for a pension. He was the editor and proprietor of a newspaper, and while he lived he was able to earn a livelihood in that way, although he had frequent sick spells, and it was understood by all his neighbors that they were the result of disease contracted in the Army.

Nevertheless, as I have said, being able to earn a living, he never applied for a pension. He died in 1889. His widow heretofore has never applied for a pension. At the time of his death she was left with six children, five of them under sixteen, and four of them are still under the age of sixteen. She has very limited means apart from her homestead. The paper was controlled by the administrator of the estate for some time, and was then traded for encumbered town property which is yielding no income. The Senate passed a bill granting a pension of $50 a month, but it has been amended by the House committee so as to provide that this lady shall be pensioned under the general law.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman has not yet answered the question I propounded as to the time when this lady married Colonel Martin.

Mr. BRODERICK. She married him after the war.

Mr. JONES. I gathered from the report that it was after the war, but how long after the war?

Mr. BRODERICK. Three or four years, I think.

Mr. JONES. Then of course she did not share any of his privations during the war. Now, if this bill should pass, those four children who are under sixteen years of age would also draw pensions, would they not?

Mr. BRODERICK. That may be.

Mr. JONES. So that the effect of the passage of this bill would be not only to give this lady a pension of $30 a month, but also to give those children pensions.

Mr. BRODERICK. Until they are sixteen.

Mr. JONES. What are the ages of the children now?

Mr. BRODERICK. The fourth one is nearly sixteen; the youngest is about six. As I have already said, the widow has never received any pension.

Mr. JONES. Now, if it is so well understood in that community that the soldier died from disease contracted in the service, how does it happen that the widow can not establish her claim at the Pension Bureau?

Mr. BRODERICK. I am glad the gentleman called my attention to that point. The records show that Colonel Martin was in the hospital while in the service and was treated for scurvy and lung trouble, and he died of lung trouble. The army surgeon who treated him there is dead, and one of the physicians who treated him three or four years after he came out of the Army is also dead, so that his treatment from the time he first contracted the disease up to the time of his death can not be traced continuously and established by regular proof. Only for that the widow could have had a pension under the general law.

Mr. JONES. And this bill proposes to give her how much?

Mr. BRODERICK. Just what she would get under the general law, $30 a month.

Mr. JONES. The husband's rank was what?

Mr. BRODERICK. He was a colonel. When he enlisted he was made lieutenant-colonel. He was soon promoted to be colonel for gallant services, and in the latter part of his service he commanded a brigade, and was a brevet brigadier-general at the time of his discharge. There are gentlemen here, I believe, who served with him in the Army.

Mr. FIELDER. Mr. Chairman, I would state that I knew Colonel Martin very well in the war and after the war. I understood that there had been a false statement or intimation made about his habits after the war, and I want to state here, very frankly, that he was my guest several times at banquets in my city, and on several occasions when opportunity was offered (and I was the party who offered the indulgence) Colonel Martin refrained absolutely from taking any liquor whatever. I want to say further that Colonel Martin was as good a soldier as ever lived or ever served in the Army, and his disease, I believe, was contracted in the service.

Mr. JONES. Do I understand the gentleman to say that it has been suggested that this soldier's death resulted from his habits?

Mr. FIELDER. I understood the insinuation had been made.

Mr. JONES. Where?

Mr. FIELDER. It was made in my presence.

Mr. JONES. Before the committee?

Mr. FIELDER. Not before the committee. Some years ago.

Mr. JONES. Not in connection with this application?

Mr. FIELDER. No; not in connection with this application. But the insinuation having been made, I want to refute any statement that this gentleman's habits were of such a nature as would be calculated to hasten his death. On the contrary, in my estimation, a more exemplary man never lived.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

CARRIE H. GREENE.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama (when the name of Mr. HARRISON was called). At the request of my colleague [Mr. HARRISON], who is absent, I ask unanimous consent to call up a bill introduced by him—the bill (H. R. 8690) for the relief of Carrie H. Greene.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to call up a bill for his colleague [Mr. HARRISON], who is absent. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Carrie H. Greene, of Lee County, Ala., widow of John W. Greene, late member of Captain Jones's company of Georgia Volunteers, Indian war of 1836, subject to all of the conditions of the act of July 27, 1892, except the provision of the said act requiring the soldier to have rendered thirty days' actual service against hostile Indians, which provision is hereby waived in her behalf. This pension to date from the 29th day of October, 1893.

The report (by Mr. STALLINGS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8690) granting a pension to Carrie H. Greene, have considered the same and respectfully submit the following report:

The claimant is the widow of John W. Greene, late a private in Capt. S. A. H. Jones's company of Georgia Volunteers in the Creek Indian war of 1836. The soldier in his lifetime made application for a pension under the Indian-war act of July 27, 1892, and the records showing that, including fifteen days' travel, he served forty-two days in said war, his claim was allowed and he remained on the roll until his death on October 29, 1893.

This widow, the beneficiary, then made application under the act referred to, but the fifteen days' travel included in the soldier's case was not allowed in her claim by the Department, and her application was rejected on the ground of insufficient service. The reason for this was that, subsequent to the allowance of the soldier's claim, departmental decisions in what are known as the "Blazer and Bailey" cases declined to accept time consumed in travel to and from the rendezvous of the organization at the time of enlistment and discharge.

As stated above, it is conceded in the soldier's case by the Department that, including the fifteen days' travel referred to above, the period of his service was twelve days more than is required to give title under the general act granting pensions to Indian-war veterans and their widows.

Mrs. Greene was married to the soldier in 1856. She is now well advanced in years, an invalid, and wholly unable to do anything toward earning a support; and the pension carried by the bill is greatly needed to provide her a comfortable maintenance.

The passage of the bill is respectfully recommended with amendment striking out all after the word "behalf," in line 12; also with an amendment changing the title of the bill so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Carrie H. Greene."

The amendment reported by the committee to strike out at the end of the bill the words "the pension to date from the 29th day of October, 1893," was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ELIZABETH L. MARKHAM.

Mr. HAYES (when his name was called). I call up the bill (H. R. 7671) granting a pension to Elizabeth L. Markham.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth L. Markham, widow of Rufus A. Markham, late of Company G, Fiftieth Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry, and pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out the word "twelve," in line 8, and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight," and add at the end of the bill the words, "Provided, That pension under this act shall cease in case it be shown that said soldier is alive."

Mr. HAYES. If it be acceptable to the committee, I think I can state this case in less time than it will take to read the report; and upon the statement of the case I think there will be no objection to it. This lady is a neighbor of mine, and the facts are within my own knowledge. The only reason she has not been granted a pension at the Pension Office is that she has not been able to show, in accordance with the rules and requirements of the Bureau, the death of her husband. He has been absent and not heard from for more than twelve years. The relations between her and her husband were entirely pleasant. He left about twelve years ago to go to Chicago to obtain work. He immediately dropped out of sight and has never been heard from since. There is practically no question about his death. That fact is accepted by his family and everyone else. The amendment provides that if he should hereafter prove to be alive this pension shall cease.

Mr. JONES. I think we had better hear the report.

Mr. HAYES. I have stated all there is in it. This man is not drawing any pension; the records show that. His wife's application for pension was rejected at the Department simply for the reason I have stated.

Mr. JONES. I accept the gentleman's statement, though I think as a general rule reports ought to be read.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. LACEY) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7671) granting a pension to Elizabeth L. Markham, having examined and considered the same, submit the following report:

Mrs. Markham was the wife of Rufus A. Markham, Company G, Fiftieth Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry, in which he served as fifth sergeant, having been appointed to that position in 1862, while serving in the regiment in which regiment he so continued to serve until honorably discharged in 1865. They were married September 17, 1859. Mr. Markham never made any application for pension, although it is claimed by his family that he was entitled to a pension by reason of the breaking down of his health in the service.

Mrs. Markham made application for pension in the Department under the law of 1890, and although she has shown everything to entitle her to a pension under that act, except absolute proof of the death of the soldier, her husband, her claim has been rejected on the ground of failure to show that fact, but the affidavits in the Department show that over twelve years ago he left his home for the purpose of securing some employment and that he has never been heard from since.

It is represented that his relations with his family were pleasant and that he was so situated and surrounded that there is no reason to believe that he would not have made his whereabouts known and returned if alive, and his family implicitly believe that he is dead, and to so presume is entirely in accord not only with the general principles of law upon this subject, but with the precedents of this committee. Hon. W. I. HAYES states personally that he is well acquainted with Mrs. Markham, and that he knows of the disappearance as above stated, and that he has been absent and his whereabouts unknown for about twelve years, and the common belief and report is that the soldier is dead.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass after being amended by striking out the word "twelve," in line 8, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "eight," also by adding at the close of the bill the words, "Provided, That pension under this act shall cease in case it be shown that said soldier is alive."

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

WILLIAMSON DURLEY.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois (when his name was called). I call up the bill (H. R. 8888) granting a pension to Williamson Durley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Williamson Durley, who was a private in the company of Capt. George B. Willis, Fortieth Regiment, Fourth Brigade, First Division of the Illinois State Militia, and who served as such in the Indian war of 1832, known as the Black Hawk war, and pay to him a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The report (by Mr. MOSES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8888) granting a pension to Williamson Durley, have considered the same and respectfully report as follows:

The claimant, Williamson Durley, swears that in June, 1831, he enlisted in Captain Campbell's company of Illinois Volunteers in the Black Hawk war, and served therein for a period of about thirty-one days; and, further, that in 1832 he again enlisted, under Capt. George B. Willis, and served for a period of nineteen days. A record of the claimant's service in Captain Campbell's company has not been obtained by your committee, but a certified copy of the rolls of Captain Willis's company is on file, and shows the nineteen days' service alleged by the claimant in that organization.

Mr. Durley is now 86 years old, and unable to do anything toward earning a support.

The passage of the bill is respectfully recommended, with an amendment fixing the rate of pension at $12 per month, so as to conform to the ratings allowed pensioners under the general Indian-war act by a bill which passed the House at this session and is now on the Senate Calendar.

The amendment reported by the committee to strike out "eight" and insert "twelve," so as to make the rate of pension $12 per month, was read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JOSEPHINE FOOTE FAIRFAX.

Mr. HENRY (when his name was called). Mr. Chairman, I call up for present consideration the bill (S. 1530) granting a pension to Josephine Foote Fairfax.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Josephine Foote Fairfax, widow of the late Rear-Admiral Donald MacNeil Fairfax, of the United States Navy, at the rate of $100 per month.

The report (by Mr. PICKLER) was read as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (S. 1530) to pension Josephine Foote Fairfax, at $100 per month, and submit the following report:

This bill (S. 1530) passed the Senate on July 28, 1894. The Senate report makes the following statement:

"The applicant is the widow of the late Rear-Admiral Donald MacNeil Fairfax, of the United States Navy, and the daughter of Rear-Admiral Andrew Hull Foote. Both these officers served with great distinction, and their careers reflect credit to a remarkable degree upon the American Navy.

"Rear-Admiral Foote was born in Connecticut September 12, 1800. He was a son of United States Senator S. A. Foote, of that State. Entering the Navy as a midshipman in 1822, he saw active service almost immediately under the elder Porter in breaking up the piratical haunts in the West Indies. He became lieutenant in 1830.

"During the years 1849, 1850, and 1851, while in command of the Perry, he did effective service in the suppression of the African slave trade. While commanding the Plymouth in China in 1854, protecting American property during hostilities between Great Britain and China, he was fired upon by the forts on Canton River. An apology being refused he attacked the forts, carrying them by storm. At the outbreak of the war of the rebellion he was selected to command the flotilla forming on the western waters. His conduct in connection with this and similar subsequent duty was so conspicuously fine that in June, 1862, he received the thanks of Congress and was made a rear-admiral. In June, 1863, he was selected to succeed Rear-Admiral Du Pont in command of the fleet off Charleston; but while on his way to assume this command he died in New York, June 26, 1863.

"Rear-Admiral Fairfax was born in Virginia March 10, 1821, and appointed midshipman in the Navy August 12, 1837. During the Mexican war he served on the California station and took part in the capture of Mazatlan and Lower California. At the outbreak of the war he had been promoted through successive grades to lieutenant, and was serving as executive officer of the San Jacinto. The boarding of the British mail packet Trent, and the taking therefrom Mason and Slidell and their secretaries, Eustis and MacFarland, was directed in person by Lieutenant Fairfax, a most delicate and important event.

"In May, 1862, he was ordered to command the Cuyaga, reporting to Admiral Farragut, off New Orleans. In January, 1863, he was ordered north to command the monitor Nantuxet, just built at South Boston. He was afterwards transferred to the Montauk, and participated in all the principal operations before Charleston. He was commissioned as rear-admiral July 11, 1864, and in the following year was placed on the retired list, having been forty-four years in active service, twenty-four years of which were spent at sea. He died at Hagerstown, Md., January 10, 1894."

In addition to this, your committee have the following evidence before them:

The clerk to the county commissioners at Hagerstown, Md., certifies under seal that Mrs. Josephine Fairfax is assessed for real and personal property to the amount of $4,300. Mr. Buchanan Schley, of Hagerstown, writes that of this $4,000 is for real estate, namely, her house, and $300 for furniture.

Dr. A. S. Mason, Buchanan Schley, and J. C. Lane testify that Mr. Fairfax died in January, 1894, leaving no estate at all; that his widow's means are so limited as to be wholly insufficient for the support of herself and three unmarried daughters, who are dependent upon her, one of whom is in delicate health. The house in which she lives, and which she owns, is assessed at $4,300.

Your committee is advised that the petitioner married the deceased officer about ten years before his death.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "one hundred," in line 8, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "thirty," and that as so amended the bill do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment recommended by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to this phase of the pending question: This lady was a widow and married Rear-Admiral Fairfax about ten years ago. The daughters to whom reference is made in the report here are not his children, and of course I mean no reflection upon the lady. No word that I say should be construed as a reflection upon her in anywise whatever. But she was not his wife during the time of his naval service. She married him some two or three years, not more than that, before he was placed upon the retired list. She is reported as having property which is assessed in value at $4,300, and is drawing no pension.

There is no pretense, as I understand it, that the death of this officer was due to his naval services. There is no allegation or claim that his death was due in any way, even remotely, to that service; and if in any statement I now make I am at all incorrect I shall be very much obliged to any gentleman to correct me. I want to lay before the House the matter in its exact form, to show that this is simply a service pension and nothing more; where the husband of the recipient did not die as a result of the service rendered to his country. I believe this is a class of bills that ought not to be passed, although in saying that I say it with the very deepest regret that I can express.

But I feel it to be my duty to lay these facts before the committee to show that this is a service pension pure and simple.

Mr. McKAIG. Mr. Chairman, I would like to state to the committee that all the facts detailed by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions were presented in full before the Committee on Invalid Pensions when this case was examined, and were in possession of the committee when the report was made. They had full and fair knowledge of the fact that this lady was not the wife of Admiral Fairfax at the time of his services. He served the United States Government for over forty-four years. After his active service had terminated he was placed upon the retired list and went into the district that I have the honor to represent on this floor, making his residence in the city of Hagerstown; and I believe it was there he met this lady who became his wife. She is the daughter of Admiral Foote, a man who has performed for his country most gallant and meritorious services. She was a widow when he married her, and was his wife for ten years before his death.

He was on the retired list about four years previous to his death. The children the gentleman from Indiana speaks of are the children of her first husband. One of the young ladies is quite a delicate invalid, who has to make her own living and assist her mother as far as she is able by doing fancy work. The other daughter teaches school.

Mrs. Fairfax has no means or income at all. The property she has is assessed at $4,000, real estate, and $300 in household furniture; all of the property being inside of the limits of the town of Hagerstown, and is heavily taxed.

Mr. MAHON. May I ask who presented this bill?

Mr. McKAIG. This is a Senate bill. I would not have had it called up by another gentleman, except that it is a Senate bill, and my colleague, under the order adopted to-night, called it up.

Mr. HICKS. This pension is for the widow?

Mr. McKAIG. Yes; for the widow of Admiral Fairfax.

Mr. HERMANN. What is the amount?

Mr. McKAIG. It was originally $100, but it has been cut down to $30 by an amendment in committee.

Mr. HERMANN. She would be entitled to that under the general law.

Mr. McKAIG. She would be entitled to a pension of $30 provided the officer had died in line of duty.

Mr. HERMANN. And she has no income?

Mr. McKAIG. None at all.

Mr. HERMANN. Then let us vote.

Mr. McKAIG. The real estate is taxed heavily and she gets nothing in the shape of revenue from it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to accommodate my friend from Oregon and other gentlemen by voting at once on this bill, but it seems to me that this is a matter that should be very carefully considered before the vote is taken.

I know I can not add anything to what has been said so ably and forcibly by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, but I want to call the attention of the House to one fact in this connection, and that is that at a previous session of the House we refused in Committee of the Whole to pass just such a bill. We voted down a bill to pension the widow of an officer, the widow having married the officer long after the war, but there having been no children as the result of the marriage. In that case it was shown to the House that the officer had rendered over forty years' service to the Government, and it was claimed that his services had been longer and more meritorious than those of any other that could possibly come before the House.

That matter was fully discussed. A vote was had in the Committee of the Whole, and the Committee of the Whole voted that bill down. Now, here is precisely a case of that character, and I hope that that committee will not undertake to adopt a precedent of this sort.

This bill came from the Senate at $100 a month. There is not a gentleman here who does not know that when these large bills are amended and cut down in the House they go back to the Senate, and there is a conference committee appointed, and gentlemen know that the Senate, as we have seen to-day, insist either upon retaining the figure fixed by that body or they compromise the matter by fixing an intermediate sum.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Will the gentleman indicate the case to-day?

Mr. DOCKERY. They receded in those cases to-day.

Mr. JONES. I thought the Senate had insisted in the cases to-day.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. In both cases reported to-day the Senate receded.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman may be correct about the cases to-day, but there have been cases in the last day or two, and I know of a case now pending, in which that question has arisen. Gentlemen insist that they can not control these bills after they get back to the Senate, and that the Senators having charge of them insist upon these large pensions.

Mr. McKAIG. I will guarantee that nothing will be asked beyond the $30 in this case.

Mr. JONES. I will accept the gentleman's statement, but I want to say here that recently a bill was passed, and that statement was made to me by a member of this House, but the bill went to the conference committee, and that gentleman was not a member of that conference committee. What has been the result of it I do not know. But I was informed by a gentleman who was on the committee that no protest had been made, and that the Senate insisted upon its amendment, and the gentleman was powerless to prevent it.

Mr. HERMANN. Let us vote on this one.

Mr. JONES. I am tired of that sort of thing, so far as I am concerned.

Several MEMBERS. We are all tired.

Mr. JONES. I know you are tired, but your fatigue goes to the extent of desiring to get these bills off the Calendar as rapidly as possible, so that you may call up others in which you are interested. I do not look at it from that standpoint.

I think that each one of these bills ought to be carefully considered. I do not think this bill ought to be passed. I think it is a very bad precedent to establish; but if it is passed, I am glad that I have the assurance of my friend from Maryland that it will not be increased to more than this amount, and that that sum will be accepted, and that he will see that it is not raised. I shall, however, vote against the bill and oppose it under any circumstances, but I am glad that the gentleman has given us that assurance.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the amended bill with a favorable recommendation.

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. JONES demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 5.

Accordingly the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that as amended it do pass.

DAVID H. SEXTON.

Mr. HERMANN (when his name was called). Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 5301) granting a pension to David H. Sexton for services in Oregon Indian wars.

Mr. JONES. I understand now why the gentleman wanted a vote on the bill which was just under consideration. [Laughter.]

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension roll of the Government the name of David H. Sexton, of Capt. Robert Williams's Company E, Second Regiment Oregon Volunteers, for meritorious service, and for wounds received by hostile Indians, in the Oregon Indian war of 1855 and 1856 in Oregon, then a Territory, and allow him a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The Committee on Pensions recommended the amendment set forth in the report.

The report (by Mr. TAWNEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5301) granting a pension to David H. Sexton, have considered the same and respectfully report as follows:

The records of the Second Auditor's Office, Treasury Department, show that David H. Sexton was enrolled August 21, 1853, as a private in Captain Owens's Company, Colonel Lane's Oregon Volunteers, Rogue River Indian war, and that he was discharged with the company September 14, 1853.

He also served in Company E, Second Regiment Oregon Volunteers, commanded by Capt. R. L. Williams and Hugh O'Neill, from November 13, 1855, to February 1, 1856. This last service is a matter of record in the office of the Third Auditor of the Treasury.

Mr. Sexton swears that while in his last service he participated in four engagements with the Indians, and that in the battle of Battle Bar, on Rogue River, November 23, 1855, the bones of his left leg were shattered by a rifle shot, causing permanent lameness of the leg. He further declares that he is 66 years old, in feeble health, and without property of any productive value. He resides at Lucky Queen, Josephine County, Oreg.

Abram Cole, a citizen of the above-named county and State, testifies that he was a member of the same company and regiment with claimant, and fully corroborates, from personal knowledge, all of the latter's allegations respecting the receipt of a wound, and his age, disability, and dependence.

The existence of the wound is also testified to by Dr. W. F. Kremer, who states that there is a cicatrized wound upon the lower third of the left leg and an indentation in the tibia, indicating clearly that when the wound was received the tibia was badly fractured. The doctor also testifies that the beneficiary is feeble from the effects of rheumatism.

In view of the circumstances, your committee recommend the passage of the bill, amended, however, by striking out the word "twenty-five," in line 10, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "twelve;" so as to allow a pension of $12 per month.

Mr. JONES. I hope the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] is not so anxious for a vote that he will fail to make a statement about this bill. I understand this man was not in the service of the United States.

Mr. HERMANN. He was in the Territorial service. At that time Oregon was a Territory, and he was one of the volunteers under the Territorial government. He is on the muster roll, now of record in the War Department.

Mr. JONES. Has he ever applied for a pension?

Mr. HERMANN. He has never applied for a pension, and could not get it if he did, because there is no law pensioning the old Indian war survivors after 1843.

Mr. JONES. Does not the gentleman think this is one of those cases that ought to be covered by general legislation?

Mr. HERMANN. I do think there ought to be a general law covering these cases, but I also think that this bill ought to pass. I do not wish to detain the committee, because we have only a few minutes remaining. I know this man. He is old and in poverty. He has a lame leg, which was shattered by a rifle ball fired by an Indian at the battle of Battle Bar, Rogue River, November 23, 1855. One of his comrades who was present by his side at the time saw him fall to the ground as the effect of the shot. There is testimony which amply establishes the fact. A physician also testifies. There are a good many precedents for legislation of this kind.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY JANE LYNN.

Mr. HICKS (when his name was called). Mr. Chairman, I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6565) granting a pension to Mary Jane Lynn.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Mary Jane Lynn, the daughter of John R. Lynn, who served as a private soldier from the State of Pennsylvania under General Wayne in the war of the Revolution, and allow the said Mary Jane Lynn a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand this lady is 76 years old, and is the daughter of a Revolutionary soldier.

Mr. HICKS. That is right.

The report (by Mr. LUCAS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6565) granting a pension to Mary Jane Lynn, and appropriating money therefor, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

Mary Jane Lynn, the applicant, is now over seventy-six years of age, and resides in the city of Altoona, Pa. She was born in Union County, Pa., November 23, 1817, and is the only surviving child of John R. Lynn and Jane Lynn. John R. Lynn, her father, enlisted as a private in Captain Gill's company of Colonel Moylan's regiment of Pennsylvania volunteers in 1780, to serve during the war, and resided at the time of his enlistment at Lancaster, Pa., and was honorably discharged from service.

At the age of 45 years he was granted a pension as a Revolutionary veteran, his application being dated April 6, 1818. He died in Union County, Pa., September 23, 1847, and left to survive him a widow and the applicant, who continued to reside with her mother until her mother's death in 1854. Miss Lynn, the applicant, is a maiden lady, and is in indigent circumstances, and has made her living as a seamstress. She is now of such an age and is so infirm that she is unable to follow her employment, and is dependent to a very large degree upon her friends (she having no relatives) for support.

All the facts relative to the service of the soldier are shown in the papers on file at the Pension Bureau; and Hon. J. D. HICKS, the gentleman who introduced the bill in the House, certifies from personal knowledge to the relationship, age, and dependence of the beneficiary.

There are several precedents for the proposed legislation, and in the light of the claimant's necessities circumstances, your committee believe that the small pension proposed in the bill should be allowed to her. The passage of the bill is, therefore, recommended.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ASA HALL.

Mr. HOOKER of New York (when his name was called). Mr. Chairman, I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 8178) to correct the military record of Asa Hall.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed and empowered to remove the charge of desertion standing against the name of Asa Hall, late a private of Capt. James Houser's company, United States Artillery, and to grant unto the said Asa Hall a certificate of honorable discharge from said service.

Mr. HOOKER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a short statement, as I have to catch a train in a few minutes. The facts are briefly these: A bill passed the House granting a pension to the widow of this soldier at the rate of $12 per month as the widow of a soldier of the war of 1812. The bill went to the Senate, and they refused to report it from the Committee on Pensions for the reason that it appeared that the soldier was borne on the rolls as a deserter. The record shows, however, that he was in the service two years, and only fourteen days' service was necessary to entitle his widow to a pension. The committee thought that that service was sufficient. And inasmuch as the records of the War Department were very inaccurate as to service in the war of 1812, they thought the claim should be allowed for a pension of $12 a month. This bill is simply to correct the record, so that this widow can get a pension. She is now 84 years of age, and in destitute circumstances.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES E. JONES.

Mr. HUDSON (when his name was called). Mr. Chairman, I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2351) granting a pension to Charles E. Jones.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles E. Jones, late photographer for the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers, said pension to be at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the words "of $30 per month" and insert the following: "proportionate to the degree of disability from gunshot wound of the back and results."

The report (by Mr. MARTIN of Indiana) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (S. 3351) to pension Charles E. Jones, and submit the following report:

This bill passed the Senate January 24, 1895, and fixes the rate of pension at $30 per month.

The petitioner, Charles E. Jones, was not a soldier. He was a civilian, who accompanied the Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry as a photographer. It is shown by the evidence that on one occasion, while taking a photograph of Longstreet's fortifications, under orders of Gen. John Peck, he received a gunshot wound across the small of the back from one of Longstreet's sharpshooters.

The petitioner has since become almost totally blind, and it is claimed that this is a result of the wound referred to, but it is not shown to the satisfaction of the committee that the present condition is chargeable to said wound.

The policy of the committee has been well defined in cases of this kind, namely, to report bills to pension civil employees and nonenlisted men only for wounds or injuries received in battle.

It does not appear that this man was wounded in battle, but the testimony does show that he was acting under orders and received the wound at the hands of the enemy. Your committee therefore favor pensioning him for this gunshot wound and its direct results only, and therefore recommend that the bill do pass after being amended as follows:

Strike out the words "of $30 per month," in line 8, and insert in lieu thereof the words "proportionate to the degree of disability from gunshot wound of the back and results."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I understand this is not a bill to pension a soldier at all. This bill is to pension a photographer who was with the Army, and he does not claim to have been a soldier, unless I am mistaken about it. I would like to hear a statement concerning the bill. I certainly will object most strenuously to pensioning photographers.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, I think the inquiry of the gentleman from Virginia is perfectly proper. However, I will state that this is a Senate bill, that it passed the Senate without objection, was unanimously reported by the Senate Committee on Pensions, came to this House, and was unanimously reported by the Committee on Pensions of this House. This man was with the command of Gen. John A. Peck, who commanded a portion of the troops of Pennsylvania. He had been in company with the Army, and he was directed to go and take a photograph of General Longstreet's position for the use of the Army. He went to take that photograph, and while doing so was shot across the back and his back was broken. He is to-day helpless and blind.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The question was taken on ordering the bill as amended to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. JONES. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 1.

So the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DOCKERY having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BRETZ, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that that committee had had under consideration sundry bills on the private calendar and had directed him to report the same to the House with various recommendations.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered on each of the bills reported by the Committee of the Whole to the House to-night, with the right of fifteen minutes' debate on each side, subject to the right of way of revenue and general appropriation bills.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 10.30 having arrived, the House stands adjourned until 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. MARTIN of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: A bill (S. 2491) granting a pension to Mary A. Hall. (Report No. 1912.)

Also, a bill (S. 2671), with an amendment, granting an increase of pension to Florence W. Buskirk. (Report No. 1914.)

By Mr. BUNN, from the Committee on Claims: A bill (H. R. 8668) for the relief of George F. Horton. (Report No. 1915.)

By Mr. CAMPBELL, from the same committee: A bill (H. R. 3671) for the relief of George Rushburger. (Report No. 1916.)

ADVERSE REPORT.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. LOUD, from the Committee on Claims, reported adversely the bill (H. R. 7738) to appropriate a certain sum for the purchase of eight acres of land for the benefit of Portage Lake harbor of refuge, Manistee County, Mich.; which, with the accompanying report (No. 1917), was ordered to be printed and laid on the table.

PUBLIC BILLS AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, a bill and a memorial of the following titles were introduced, and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DOCKERY: A bill (H. R. 8939) to abolish the office of Solicitor of Internal Revenue, and for other purposes—to the Joint Commission of Congress to Inquire into the Status of Laws Organizing the Executive Departments.

By Mr. HARTMAN: A memorial of the joint assembly of Montana, asking for the setting aside of a portion of the Fort Shaw Military Reservation for school purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CLARKE of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 8940) to increase the pension of John T. Walton, of Marengo County, Ala.—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SPRINGER: A bill (H. R. 8941) for the relief of Benjamin J. Kilbourn—to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania: Memorial of the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia, for legislation to enlarge the tariff so as to produce sufficient revenue for the needs of the Government—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BELL of Colorado: Petition of Progress Assembly, No. 399, Knights of Labor, Durango, Colo., praying for the free coinage of silver and against bond issues, etc.—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Also, protest of Progress Assembly, No. 399, Knights of Labor, Durango, Colo., against any further suspension of the mining assessment law—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Also, petitions of Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of Creede, and of citizens of Pueblo, Colo., praying that the right of franchise be granted only to bona fide citizens of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GRIFFIN of Michigan: Resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Detroit, in favor of hydrographic service for Detroit—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HARMER: Resolution adopted at a meeting of 140 citizens of Tacony and 75 of Harrowgate, Philadelphia, Pa., in favor of maintaining civil and religious liberty by absolute separation of church and state, and in favor of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States against the use of the property or credit of the United States or any State, or any money raised by taxation, for maintaining any institution wholly or in part under sectarian or ecclesiastical control—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, preamble and resolution adopted at a meeting of 140 citizens of Tacony, Philadelphia, and 75 of Harrowgate, Philadelphia, Pa., setting forth that in a number of States the right of franchise is granted to aliens after a residence of from four to five months to one year, and, that the rights of the legal citizens may not be abridged, petitioning that Congress shall adopt a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States that no State shall grant the right of franchise to any person in violation of the law of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa: Resolutions of the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia, denouncing the recent gold-bond transaction of the Government—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota: Resolutions of the Minnesota Academy of Natural Sciences, favoring special postal rates for science specimens exchanged by collectors—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. MAGUIRE: Petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., urging the laying of the Hawaiian cable—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of residents of Los Angeles, Cal., against imposing a tax upon the funds of mutual life and accident insurance companies—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. PENCE: Petition against exempting mining claims from annual assessment work—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. RICHARDS: Petition of citizens of Mount Eaton, Ohio, against sectarian appropriations—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RICHARDSON of Michigan: Petition of W. R. McMurray and 25 others, citizens of Ada, Kent County, Mich., for the passage of the bill to give the States full control over the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine and other imitations of butter—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. SCRANTON: Petition of Cigar Makers' Union No. 295, of Scranton, Pa., in favor of House bill 5603—to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. WOOLMER: Petition of 74 citizens of Oberlin, Pa., praying for a constitutional amendment providing that neither Congress nor any State shall pass any law respecting an establishment of religion—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 23, 1895.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

On motion of Mr. QUAY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. BLANCHARD presented the credentials of DONELSON CAFERY, chosen by the legislature of the State of Louisiana a Senator from that State for the term commencing March 4, 1895. The credentials were read and ordered to be filed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 20th instant, a copy of the report of Dr. Sheldon Jackson upon the work of introducing reindeer in Alaska in 1894; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 14th instant calling for an estimate of the return from the internal-revenue taxes upon distilled spirits, etc., a report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue upon the subject; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, in response to a resolution of the 15th instant, calling for a statement of the number of acres of land now owned by the Union and Central Pacific railroads, which are a part of the lands granted to those railroads by the United States, etc., transmitting a report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office containing the information desired; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. JAMES KERR, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the following bills:

A bill (S. 305) granting a pension to Annie M. Greene; and

A bill (S. 694) for the relief of Mrs. Evalyn N. Van Vliet.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2783) to postpone the enforcement of the act of August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea."

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 8659) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Emory and the Clinch rivers, in the State of Tennessee; and

A bill (H. R. 8900) to amend section 9 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the Kansas City, Pittsburg and Gulf Railroad Company to construct and operate a railroad, telegraph, and telephone line through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes."

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 5711) to authorize the adoption of children in the District of Columbia; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

FORT HAYS MILITARY RESERVATION, KANS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair presents a concurrent resolution of the legislature of the State of Kansas, which will be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MARTIN. I should like very much to have the concurrent resolution read, and I also ask leave to introduce a bill in connection with it, that it may be referred with the concurrent resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The memorial was read and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as follows:

House concurrent resolution No. 20. By Mr. Schlyer.

Whereas the experience of the settlers upon the plains of western Kansas, covering a period of more than twenty years, has demonstrated conclusively that agriculture can not be pursued with profit, under existing natural conditions, and that artificial means and methods must be substituted therefor; and

Whereas the tests and experiments required to determine the fitness of new methods applicable to these higher altitudes and limited rainfall can not be made at the Agricultural College of the State; and

Whereas the Fort Hays Military Reservation, at an altitude of 2,000 feet above sea level, contains a valuable body of native timber that should be preserved to posterity, and the land of said reservation is admirably adapted for such experiments in agriculture as are required in the premises; and

Whereas the buildings upon said military reservation, formerly used as residences for officers and their families, barracks for troops, storehouses, etc., are large and commodious, but can not be moved without destruction of their value, but in their position are of great value, and could be used with little additional repairs for the purpose of a branch of the State Normal School; and

Whereas the location of a branch of the State Normal School at this place would be central and convenient for the whole of the north half of the State; and

Whereas the said military reservation has long since been abandoned by the United States Government as a military post: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Kansas (the senate concurring therein), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are hereby requested to secure the passage of an act of Congress donating the said Fort Hays Military Reservation to the State of Kansas for the following public purposes:

First. For a western branch of the Kansas Agricultural College.

Second. For a western branch of the Kansas State Normal Institute.

Third. For a public park.

Resolved, further, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, instructed to transmit a copy of these resolutions to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of Kansas.

STATE OF KANSAS, Office of the Secretary of State:

I, W. E. Edwards, secretary of state of the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that the following and annexed is a true and correct copy of the original instrument of writing filed in my office February 18, 1895.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my official seal. Done at Topeka, Kans., this 19th day of February, 1895.

[SEAL.]

W. E. EDWARDS,

Secretary of State.

Mr. MARTIN introduced a bill (S. 2799) granting to the State of Kansas the abandoned Fort Hays Military Reservation in said State for the purpose of establishing western branches of the Kansas Agricultural College and of the Kansas State Normal Institute thereon, and for a public park; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

NEW MEXICO MOUNTED VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 962) for the relief of Capt. Ceran St. Vrain's company of New Mexico Mounted Volunteers, to report it favorably without amendment. The bill has the unanimous approval of the committee. I do not think there can be any possible objection to it, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. HALE. If the bill is to take any time I must notify the Senator that at a quarter past 11 I shall insist upon the agreement that was made yesterday being carried out.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I do not think it will take any time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am authorized unanimously by the Committee on Finance to report a resolution. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for information.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to ascertain in every practicable way, and to report from time to time to the Senate the effect of the tariff and internal-revenue laws upon imports and exports, the growth, production, development, and prices of agricultural and manufactured articles at home and abroad; and upon wages, domestic and foreign; and they are also authorized to submit to the Senate such statistics and data concerning loans and currency as they may deem of importance to the Senate; and for these purposes they are empowered to sit by subcommittee or otherwise during the recess and sessions of the Senate at such times and places as they may deem advisable, and to employ a stenographer and such clerical and other assistance as may be necessary, the expenses of said investigations and reports to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. The resolution goes to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. VOORHEES. Not necessarily.

Mr. HALE. Under the rule.

Mr. MANDERSON. Under the rule it must be referred to that committee.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let it be referred, then. I want to make simply one observation. It is the same work that has been on hand for ten years. It is just a continuation of the work, and involves little if any expense at all. I wish to make this statement in connection with the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY CONFERENCE.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which I ask to have read. In this connection I will state that I recognize the agreement that at a quarter after 11 we are to take up the bridge bill. I shall not trespass two minutes upon that time in the few words I feel it necessary for me to say in explanation of the amendment, and I ask that the clock shall not point fifteen minutes until after I am through. I ask to have the amendment read.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator keeps to that promise I for one will not interpose at that time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will do that.

Mr. HALE. But promptly when he is through and the action taken I shall insist that the agreement be carried out. I must do that. I am trying to get business done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Colorado will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment, as follows:

Amendment intended to be introduced to the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Whenever the President of the United States, upon invitation of the Government of Germany or Great Britain or any of the Governments of Europe or otherwise, shall determine that this Government should be represented at any international or other conference to be held with a view to secure internationally a fixity of relative value between gold and silver as money by means of a common ratio between those metals, with free mintage at such ratio, he shall be authorized to request the attendance of the commissioners to be appointed as hereinafter provided, to attend such conference on behalf of the United States.

The number of such commissioners shall be nine. The President of the United States shall appoint, by and with the consent of the Senate, three of said commissioners prior to the adjournment of this Congress; the other six members of said commission shall be a joint committee of this Congress, three of said committee to be members of the Senate and three of the House of Representatives. If after the adjournment of this Congress there shall be any vacancies in said commission so appointed, by death, resignation, or otherwise, such vacancies shall be filled by appointment by the President.

For the compensation of said commissioners and for all reasonable expenses connected therewith, to be approved by the Secretary of State, including the proportion to be paid by the United States of the joint expenses of such conference, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated. If such commissioners shall not be called upon to serve, no compensation shall be allowed them.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, it was with much hesitancy, after discussion with others interested in the subject, that this amendment was introduced. The chief embarrassment arose from the fact that it might be construed abroad as indicating an undue desire on the part of this country that other countries should enter into some agreement for international bimetalism. But inasmuch as nine full months are to elapse between the adjournment of this Congress and the meeting of the next, and inasmuch as the President of the United States, if he should be called upon to act with other nations in some conference looking to an international agreement respecting gold and silver, would be powerless to act other than by the appointment of commissioners, and would be unable to clothe them with the proper authority and funds for the representation of this Government in such proceedings and in its share of the expenses, etc., it seemed wise to introduce this amendment.

It is entirely satisfactory, I think, to those bimetalists who vote for bimetalism. It should be equally satisfactory to that devoted band of bimetalists here who talk for us and vote against us, and who look with ravished eyes for English approval before they register their votes.

The method of appointment may at first seem somewhat peculiar, but it is not so. The President of the United States is to appoint three of these commissioners. He would naturally appoint one-third, or thereabouts, among civilians, men outside of public life. The last commission and all others have been largely and properly represented by members of the two Houses of Congress. It occurred to us that the Congress of the United States was best fitted to name its membership in that body. Every member of this body knows that our thoughts instinctively turn to the Senators who should represent us in any international conference, men who have spent nearly a generation in the study of the great financial questions of the world, and who have illumined them with their thought and utterances, and whose presence in any international conference would be hailed with satisfaction by metallists all over the world. For these reasons it seemed best that the Congress of the United States should name its membership.

Mr. President, the Senate, by a decisive majority the other day, declared its opinion that bimetalism by the United States should at once be inaugurated. There was disinclination to imperil the great appropriation bills, and possibly bring about an extra session, by insistence at this time on consideration of a free-coinage measure, with the knowledge that nothing could be practically accomplished in the way of legislation at this time and under existing circumstances; but this body did record its solemn conviction that, amid the suffering, the poverty, and the paralysis of business which have overtaken this land, the way out was not by waiting for the tardy and uncertain action of European countries, not by the abandonment of silver and the adoption of gold monometallism, but by a return to the principles laid down by our Constitution, and to the financial policy which brought this country prosperity for nearly a century.

We are for the establishment of bimetalism by the United States alone. If other countries will join us so much the better. The amendment gives this country an opportunity to act in concert with other nations, if that cooperation shall be tendered us. I ask that the amendment be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HALE. Let the Senate understand. Does not the Senator intend in the end that the amendment shall be submitted to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Oh, certainly; it must go there.

Mr. HALE. Then I suggest to the Senator and to the Committee on Finance that there should be no delay whatever, as the appropriation bill to which it would properly belong, if any, may be considered at any time by the Senate as soon as the pending appropriation bill is through.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I appreciate that suggestion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHICAGO, ILL.

Mr. VEST. I desire to submit a report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HALE. I must ask for the enforcement of the agreement entered into yesterday.

Mr. VEST. I will state to the Senator from Maine that we passed a bill the other day for the erection of a public building at Chicago. There is a mistake of one word. Unfortunately it has been signed by the President. I should like to pass a bill this morning of about five lines changing one word, the word "lowest" to "highest."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. VEST. It will lead to no debate whatever.

Mr. HALE. I have been trying to get the agreement that was deliberately entered into by everybody yesterday enforced, and I am appealed to in a dozen different directions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri the joint resolution will, under the agreement, be laid before the Senate.

Mr. VEST. Do I understand the Senator from Maine to object to a mere formal report of this kind?

Mr. HALE. I am appealed to in half a dozen cases. Let the Senator from Missouri go on. After that I shall insist on the agreement being carried out.

Mr. VEST. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report a bill, and ask for its present consideration.

The bill (S. 2798) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the erection of a Government building at Chicago, Ill.," approved February 13, 1895, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the word "lowest," in line 11 of the act to which this act is amendatory, be changed to the word "highest," so that the original act shall provide as follows: "And the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to contract with the highest and best bidder, after reasonable notice by advertisement in two or more newspapers published in the city of Chicago, for the sale of the present building as hereinafore described and the removal of the same from the site where it is now located."

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DELAWARE RIVER BRIDGE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT (at 11 o'clock and 21 minutes a. m.). Under the agreement made yesterday the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the motion of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON] to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution (S. R. 133) directing the Secretary of War to make an examination of the bridge to be constructed over the Delaware River between the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania was passed.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I have not the remotest interest in the action which the Senate shall take on this joint resolution, but the Committee on Commerce in the matter of bridges have always exercised the utmost care. I do not know of a single instance in which their judgment has been subsequently overruled. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has been chairman for a great many years of the bridge committee, so called. Every bridge bill referred to our committee is referred to that subcommittee and thorough investigation is always had.

Now, take the case at bar. In 1894 the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Railroad Company had a bill introduced for the construction of a bridge with terminals at Philadelphia and at Camden. It was referred to the Committee on Commerce. That committee referred it to the Secretary of War. The Secretary of War referred it to Major Raymond, one of the ablest officers in the Engineer Corps, who is stationed at Philadelphia. He has been there for five years, and understands the navigation of that harbor just as thoroughly as I understand this Senate Chamber and its seats. No man can understand better than he the requirements of that harbor. The bill was referred to him. He reported that if a bridge was to be constructed over the Delaware River at the points indicated it must be 150 feet high, and a single suspension span; and it was utterly impracticable for the railroad companies to build any such bridge. He reported further that the harbor of Philadelphia extended between two points, Eli Point, I think it is, and Fishers Point; that a bridge could be constructed at Fishers Point, or just above it, and it would not to any material extent interfere with navigation, because above Fishers Point there really is little or no navigation, the depth of water being only about 15 feet.

Mr. QUAY rose.

Mr. FRYE. I will state what the navigation is before the Senator interrupts me.

Mr. QUAY. The Senator from Maine is entirely mistaken. As high up as the city of Burlington, 16 miles above this proposed bridge, there are 30 feet of water. There are one or two shoal places, I think, in the bed of the river, where the depth of water is reduced from 13 to 20 feet, but with a very little improvement a depth of 35 feet can be carried from the bridge up to Burlington, 16 miles; and 25 feet is the ordinary depth carried in the harbor at Baltimore for the ocean steamers.

Mr. FRYE. If there is one point where it is only 13 feet, then no vessels can now use that river drawing more than 12 feet of water.

Mr. QUAY. It is 13 feet at low water.

Mr. FRYE. As a matter of fact, there are no vessels going up the Delaware River above Fishers Point under sail. No vessel goes up there that does not go in tow. There is no vessel that requires a height of bridge of over 15 feet that is not under tow. As a further matter of fact, in the river at that point there are a few summer steamers that run on excursions. As a matter of fact there, too, the railroad corporations made an arrangement with those small river steamers by which they should telescope their smokestacks, and they would place the bridge, instead of 40 feet, at 50 feet above the water.

Mr. QUAY rose.

Mr. FRYE. As the Senator is to reply to me, will he be kind enough to allow me to go on?

Mr. QUAY. I rose just to correct one error in the Senator's statement. There is a daily line of steamers from the city of Baltimore, through the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, up the Delaware, and through the Raritan Canal, to New York.

Mr. FRYE. I am coming to that further on. I say Major

Raymond reported in favor of a bridge above Fishers Point, with a span of 500 feet, with a draw of 135 feet, with a height of 40 feet, and with other spans not less than 300 feet. That report came to the committee. The committee reported favorably the bill to construct the bridge at that point. Immediately these two railroad companies entered upon its construction. They prepared their plans and specifications, and submitted them to the Secretary of War. He approved them; and Congress enacted into law the right of those companies to build this bridge of 40 feet height, with 500 feet span, 125 feet draw, and spans of not less than 300 feet outside. That is to-day the law.

Immediately on its becoming a law the railroad companies commenced to build the bridge; they made their contracts for structural iron, and all that sort of thing. They have, I understand, over 800 men at work on that bridge to-day, on either side. Now comes in a proposition from the Traffic League of Philadelphia that that work shall be suspended; that another commission shall be appointed, and that that commission shall determine whether or not the plans and specifications of this bridge, all prepared under the law, all approved by the Secretary of War, shall be changed. Suppose there are commissioners appointed who would recommend a change; they can not change the law. The law must stand until the next meeting of Congress, nearly a year from now; and the work on this bridge must be hung up. But I have not the slightest fear of that. No commission of engineers will make any change there.

Mr. QUAY. Then there can be no objection to the joint resolution.

Mr. FRYE. The joint resolution suspends work on the bridge for the present until the commission reports. That is the objection to it.

Mr. QUAY. The joint resolution can be amended so as to provide that the commission shall make a report within two weeks.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator who has the reply to me be kind enough to make his reply afterwards? Ordinarily I do not object to any interruption, but we are going to vote at 12 o'clock.

Mr. President, the plans and specifications of this bridge were over there in Major Raymond's office for six months. The harbor commissioners for the harbor of Philadelphia are in constant communication with Major Raymond. The Maritime Association is in constant communication with Major Raymond; they have access to his office and his plans. There was not an intelligent man in Philadelphia who did not know that this bridge was to be built at Fishers Point; there is not one who did not have an opportunity to know just exactly how it was to be built, and yet Major Raymond says no man in Philadelphia ever made the slightest complaint to him about this bridge during that entire time, and no question was ever raised about it by the men who understand the navigation of that harbor better than anybody else possibly can. Now, the Traffic League—what it is I do not know—

Mr. QUAY. I will tell the Senator it is the Trades League.

Mr. FRYE. The Trades League, is it?

Mr. QUAY. Yes, and I might give the Senator further information if he would permit me to interrupt him.

Mr. FRYE. I will hear the Senator after I get through. I do not wish for the information now.

The Trades League sent in their statement of complaint to the Secretary of War and asked to be heard. The Secretary of War heard them all they desired to be heard at the time, and informed them that he had no power whatever in the premises, that the bridge was being built under a law of Congress, and that he had no power to repeal any such law; and he sent the complaints to Major Raymond, the officer in charge, who, I say, is one of the best officers in the corps, and has been in Philadelphia for five years. Major Raymond made reply to it, which I have received, taking the charges one after the other, and I propose to read what he says in part.

The construction of a railroad bridge across the Delaware at or near the point established by the act is, I believe, considered by all to be highly desirable for the best interests of the city of Philadelphia. With reference to this point I have never heard a dissenting voice. Even the Trades League admits this. The construction of a single-span suspension or cantilever bridge high enough to permit the passage of masted vessels would not be justified by the traffic and would not be undertaken. If a bridge is to be constructed it must have piers in the river; and since the cost and difficulty of obtaining suitable grades prohibit an elevation great enough to pass all masted vessels, it must have a draw. I believe these points will not be disputed.

With these assumptions the main points to be considered were the location, clearance, width of channel and side spans, and width and location of the drawspan. These were to be determined with a view to the best interests of commerce, including the traffic across the bridge as well as that upon the waterway. It was fully recognized that the construction of any pier bridge over any navigable channel must to some extent be an obstruction to water navigation, and that a fair and reasonable adjustment must be made between the interests of land and water transportation. A brief statement of the character and extent of the navigation interests of this part of the Delaware River is therefore necessary.

As is well known to the Department, the physical character of the channel of the Delaware River changes at a point not far from Fishers Point. Below this point the normal channel depth at mean low water has been deterained to be about 20 feet. Above it this depth is not greater than about 15 feet, and it steadily decreases as the river is ascended.

This is from an engineer who knows every inch of the river as well as he knows the way to his house.

Surveys and numerous investigations made by this office during the past ten years have shown that this upper part of the river can probably never be made of much more importance as a route of commerce than it is at the present time. The physical harbor of Philadelphia has, therefore, been considered to end at this point, and this is the upper limit of the existing projects for the improvement of Philadelphia Harbor and the Delaware River.

Then he goes on and explains how he located it, and he explains still further that, after the location and after the law of Congress establishing a bridge 40 feet high, with a span of 500 feet, the railroad companies themselves, for the purpose of not being compelled to open the draw more frequently than could be helped by them—because it is a nuisance to open a draw—made an arrangement with the steamboat men that they would increase the height of that bridge to 50 feet, and they did that without any law at all. They made it 50 feet instead of 40 feet, and then made an arrangement with the steamboat men to telescope their smoke funnels so as to go under the bridge, instead of compelling the railroad companies to open the draw.

Let me say right here that the Harlem River has twenty times the navigation there is on the Delaware River above Fishers Point, or that there ever will be, and yet the Committee on Commerce never reported in favor of the building of a bridge over 26 feet high over the Harlem River, and there is not a bridge upon the Harlem River over 26 feet high, and this bridge will be 50 feet high. They did increase the span from 500 to 540 feet, and they increased the draw from 125 to 129½ feet.

Major Raymond takes up seriatim the complaints made by the Trades League. He says:

I will not attempt a thorough analysis of the remarkable pamphlet of the Trades League, but will simply invite attention to a few prominent points, upon which I will comment as they are stated.

The introduction to the resolutions of the board of directors, adopted January 10, 1895, contains the following direct or implied statements:

1. That the height adopted for the bridge is insufficient for the free passage of large numbers of steamboats and other craft now using the river.

This is not true, if we leave out of consideration vessels which could not pass if the bridge were raised to 70 feet.

2. That the United States Government is now expending large sums of money in bettering and deepening the channel in the vicinity of the proposed bridge.

This implies either that the bridge will interfere with the improvement, or that the Government is engaged in the improvement of the river above the bridge so that it will accommodate a heavier traffic. Neither is true.

3. That the passage of vessels through a draw is often aggravated by certain causes which lead to sailing vessels missing the draw at first trial.

This implies that vessels will sail through the draw. As before stated, vessels of sufficient size to use the draw do not sail on this part of the river, but are always towed.

4. That riparian property above the bridge will be injured in value and unfitted for commercial purposes by the construction of the bridge.

However this may be, the value of riparian property can not be seriously influenced by a question of elevation which affects merely the convenience of passage of a very small number of vessels.

5. That the cost of raising the bridge to 70 feet would be insignificant as compared with the damages inflicted upon the commerce of the river and the losses in other values.

In my opinion, the cost would be very large and the benefit would be very small.

6. That "the right of the people of this city, of this State, of New Jersey, and of the whole country to full enjoyment of all the natural advantages of a great river is incontestable."

If this were true, no bridge which in the slightest degree obstructed navigation could be built over any navigable river. In this particular case it means (if it means anything) that a small number of steamboat men have an incontestable right to compel all the rest of the people to travel over inconvenient or dangerous grades in order to save them from a trifling inconvenience.

I have already remarked upon the letter of the committee, so far as concerns its request for the organization of a Board of Engineers to revise the action of Congress. It only remains for me to invite attention to the two disingenuous comparisons with which it is concluded.

The first is a comparison of the requirements for the proposed bridge over the North River at New York with those for the bridge over the Delaware at Philadelphia.

Now, this committee seriously undertakes in this paper to compare the requirements of navigation in the erection of a bridge over North River to the Delaware River above Fishers Point. There is no more comparison which can be instituted between them than can be between the navigation of the Mississippi River and the navigation down here of Rock Creek—not a bit more. I do not understand it at all. I did insist that there should not be a pier in the North River—there is no doubt about that—but the Senate overruled me and voted that there might be a pier in the North River, but there is the commerce of the whole world in the North River and not a few small vessels, an occasional sailing vessel, passing up, drawing 13 or 14 feet of water. It is utterly absurd to make such a comparison. I am not certain that if New York had the cholera Philadelphia would not insist upon having it also, in order not to be outstripped by New York. [Laughter.]

Mr. QUAY. Did not the Senator from Maine two weeks before the report of that bill to the Senate vote for the reporting of a bill for the building of a bridge between Philadelphia and Camden with an elevation of 150 feet above high water?

Mr. FRYE. Yes; but that was down in Philadelphia Harbor, where the whole commerce of the harbor is, not up at Fishers Point, where there is no commerce of any account.

Mr. QUAY. The bridge was not located by the bill, but it was to be located under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. FRYE. But the first bill provided that the bridge should be located between the terminals in Philadelphia and Camden, and the engineer found it would be right across the present harbor improvements at Philadelphia. The Senator will bear me witness that I have never been laggard in voting for appropriations in favor of improving the harbor of Philadelphia. I have done everything in my power toward that end. I presume now, because I oppose this project of the Trades League, that all I have tried to do before for Philadelphia Harbor will be forgotten and I shall be censured because a yacht club, with a yacht house 20 miles below this point, sends a petition here for the improvement of the navigation of the Delaware River above Fishers Point, and against the bridge.

Mr. QUAY. Not at all, Mr. President, but—

Mr. FRYE. I have not got through, if the Senator will allow me.

Major Raymond says further about the North River:

The writers of this letter well knew when they made this comparison that the two cases are utterly incomparable. They knew that one was the case of a bridge across the most important roadstead in the country, over a great anchorage as well as a great thoroughfare, where physical as well as commercial conditions absolutely prohibited the construction of a bridge with piers and a draw; while the other was a case of a bridge near the upper limit of a harbor, crossing no anchorage and covering relatively unimportant traffic, where the conditions required a drawbridge with piers in the river. Nevertheless, they do not hesitate to make the comparison; and in another part of the pamphlet they publish extracts from the proceedings of the Senate with reference to the North River bridge, printing some of the remarks of a distinguished Senator in full-faced type, in order to intensify the false impression they desire to create.

The other comparison is a still more serious misrepresentation, because it involves the garbling of official records. They invite attention to the fact that on April 2, 1894, a bill (S. 1843) was presented to the Senate proposing a bridge across the Delaware at Philadelphia—and it was returned to the Senate from the Committee on Commerce with the following amendment:

Here comes the Senator's point—

"Provided, That no piers or other structures shall be constructed within the waterway of the Delaware River between the established pier-head lines: And provided further, That the bridge shall have a clear height of 150 feet above mean high water."

They further state that on April 26, 1894, a wholly new and very different bill was presented "providing for a bridge across the Delaware at Philadelphia, and with a height of only 10 feet, and for five piers between the pier-head lines." (The italics are the committee's.)

The obvious intention of this comparison was to convey the impression that these two cases were exactly similar except in the requirements for the bridges; and for this purpose it was necessary to suppress the fact that the first bill authorized the construction of a bridge between the cities of Philadelphia and Camden, thus requiring it to cross the most important part of the harbor, while the second required the bridge to be located above the foot of Roxborough street and the shore end of the Fishers Point dike.

In my report of April 6, 1894, on the bill (S. 1843) authorizing the construction of a bridge between the cities of Philadelphia and Camden, I pointed out that such a bridge would necessarily cross the harbor within the limits of the Government improvement, and stated that the construction of a pier in this part of the harbor at any point between the established pier-head lines would form an obstruction to navigation and greatly interfere with the maintenance of the channel. The amendment presented by the Committee on Commerce was adopted upon my recommendation. The bridge site required by the other bill is considerably more than 3 miles farther up the river, and, as I have already explained, at a point where the physical and commercial interests are entirely different.

These two deliberate misrepresentations should suffice to stamp the whole pamphlet with its true character. Of course the writers did not suppose that the Department could be deceived by such methods; their object was simply to create a false impression upon an unsuspecting public through the medium of a letter to the Secretary of War, which they did not hesitate to print and circulate before it had received a reply.

This is the reply of Major Raymond, who has been in charge of that harbor for five years, and who is more intimate with it than any man living in Philadelphia, and has a better judgment about the necessities of the navigation up and down the river and the necessities of traffic over and across the river. I can certainly add nothing to that, and I conclude by saying, as I commenced, that it is a matter in which I have not the remotest interest. I care not what the Senate does in relation to it, but it seems to me that an intelligent vote of the Senate, after hearing this communication of Major Raymond, will not justify the stopping of the work on that bridge.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine has stated that he has no interest in this question, and I take it for granted he has not. It seems from his remarks that he is merely representing Major Raymond and the railroad corporations, who are interested in the construction of this bridge. I have the very deepest interest in this question. I stand here for my constituency, the people of Philadelphia, and for the request they have made to the Senate. No matter whether the report of Major Raymond be true or not, it is not unreasonable that the requests which have been made by the business people of Philadelphia should be granted.

The entire issue involved is an issue between the business people of Philadelphia and the river towns on the Delaware River to the head of tide water and Major Raymond, and the question to be determined is whether or not the report of Major Raymond was ill advised and ill considered. They ask for a board of review from the War Department. Traversing the finding of Major Raymond, they ask for a determination whether or not their statement as contained in the pamphlet read by the Senator from Maine or the report of an officer of the Engineer Corps is correct, so that Major Raymond's statement, for the purpose of this discussion, goes as waste paper.

In April, 1894, the Senate entertained, on report from the Committee on Commerce, two bills for the construction of bridges between the Pennsylvania and New Jersey sides of the Delaware River at or about the city of Philadelphia. One was limited to the cities of Camden and Philadelphia in its termini, the exact location to be determined by the Secretary of War. The other was located also with one terminus on the east shore of the city of Philadelphia and one on the western shore, a little north of the city of Camden.

The first bill was reported here April 12, as I have said, by the Senator from Missouri. It provided for an elevation of 150 feet. Two weeks afterwards the other bridge bill was reported, providing for an elevation of only 40 feet. The first bill was never considered, I presume, because the requisite capital did not appear to back it. The second was supported by a powerful corporation, a corporation which had been very beneficent in its operations in Pennsylvania and New Jersey, and which was abundantly able to carry out the design of Congress. That bill was passed. It went to the Committee on Commerce on the 26th of April, and it went to the War Department the same day; it went from there to Major Raymond, at Philadelphia, on the next day, and on the evening of that day his report was in the mail on its return path to the War Department—the report the Senator from Maine has read here. Major Raymond displayed great acumen and energy. His investigation was not protracted. Of course the distinguished Secretary of War acted promptly and properly upon the report of his officer, the fairness of which is disputed. The bill was finally passed.

The bill which passed the Senate, as Senators will remember, was one providing absolutely for an elevation of 40 feet only. It was thought at that time—I know not how the impression came—that the board of port wardens of the city of Philadelphia entertained or exercised some jurisdiction over the construction of the bridge. Applications were made to them for an indorsement of the plans, and the business people of Philadelphia prepared to go there for a hearing. On the 8th of January last the city solicitor, a distinguished member of the bar, who has since been elevated by a great majority to the office of chief magistrate of that city, delivered an opinion that the board of port wardens of Philadelphia had no jurisdiction in the case. His opinion was undoubtedly correct.

The railroad company at once proceeded to the construction of the bridge, and the Trades League and the business people of Pennsylvania commenced a movement in the direction of this Senate. Meanwhile, the corporation had broken ground for the construction of the approaches to the bridge, and that was all. There was nothing done toward the erection of the bridge proper. Of course, the work was practically abandoned during the late severe weather, but they have employed a number of men—I know not how many—up to within three or four weeks past. There is no question about that.

I introduced, at the request of a number of business organizations, and the request of gentlemen of the very highest respectability, of Mr. John H. Converse, the vice-president of the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia, and the president, I think, of the Baldwin Locomotive Works, who send their locomotives all over the world; also of the gentlemen of the Trades League, the Produce Exchange, and others, the joint resolution which is now the subject of controversy. It provides merely that the business people located along the Delaware River shall have a day in court on this question, which they have lost, not entirely, but largely, I think, because of the confusion in the public mind in Philadelphia between the two bridge bills which were reported to the Senate in April, 1894, and partly from their impression that the board of port wardens of the city of Philadelphia would be able to control the elevation of this bridge. All that is asked of the Senate is that these persons shall be heard. They traverse, as I said, the entire finding of Major Raymond, which the Senator from Maine has read in support of his opposition and upon which he absolutely relies. The question to be tried out, which we ask to have tried out by this commission, is whether the report is true or not which is offered in evidence here.

The joint resolution was passed without opposition. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON] moved the next day after its passage to reconsider it, stating that he would withdraw his motion and dispose of the question on the next day; but it has been suspended here since. The Secretary of War having exhausted his original authority, having approved the original plan of the bridge, a joint resolution in the nature of a law is required to give him power to reopen the question and to give these people a hearing, and unless it is passed, and passed to-day, it will very certainly not become a law during this Congress. The situation is analogous to that presented in relation to the legislation required the other day by the proclamation of the President in relation to the question of lights and signals at sea.

I believe, Mr. President, this is about all I have to say. I wish to have read what these gentlemen have stated, and I will state who they are. I will then send the papers to the Secretary's desk, and ask to have read first the preamble and resolutions of the Trades League of Philadelphia, of which the Senator from Maine and Major Raymond have spoken somewhat contemptuously. That league is composed of 1,700 business firms, and is one of the strongest business organizations in the world. I also ask to have read the resolutions of the Manufacturers' Club—all Republicans, at least, are fully acquainted with that organization—which is composed of 700 business firms; the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, which is composed of 400; the Philadelphia Produce Exchange, of 150 business firms, and the Hardware Merchants and Manufacturers' Association, composed of 75 business firms. In addition to those, I have from the State of New Jersey resolutions of the Board of Trade of the city of Trenton, the capital city of New Jersey; the city of Burlington, practically at the head of tide-water navigation; the resolutions of the common council of the city of Beverly, N. J., a little below, and the preambles and resolutions passed by the boroughs of Riverton and Palmyra, N. J., and Bristol, Pa.

I send these memorials and statements to the Secretary's desk to be read, and after they have been read I shall move to lay the motion of the Senator from New Jersey on the table.

Mr. McPHERSON. I wish to say only a word by way of addition to what I said yesterday.

I hold in my hand some resolutions passed by commercial organizations, clubs, etc., of the city of Philadelphia and of towns and cities along the Delaware River in the State of New Jersey. This is the first time that my attention has been called to this matter. In fact, it is the first time that any resolutions or notice of any action taken by any New Jersey cities have been placed in my hands.

It seems that the Trenton Board of Trade on May 24, 1894, addressed a protest to the Secretary of War, and also another like protest on January 10, 1895. Nowhere does it appear that these protests were sent to Senators in this body, but they were forwarded to the Secretary of War, and therefore never came to my attention or into my hands. I remember, however, that I was absent from the Senate by reason of illness, and if sent to me they escaped my attention. There is one by the mayor and city council of Burlington, N. J., one by the common council of Beverly, N. J., one by the mayor and council of the borough of Riverton, N. J., one by the township committee of the township of Palmyra, N. J., and one from the burgess and council of the borough of Bristol, Pa., none of which have I seen before this morning.

The statement made by the Board of Trade of the city of Trenton is as to the insufficiency of the elevation of the bridge; that it might prove a serious obstacle to navigation, particularly if the proposed ship canal across New Jersey should become an accomplished fact.

Mr. President, if I had seen these protests on the part of the people of New Jersey I certainly should have entered no motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania was passed; but, as I say, these papers were directed to the Secretary of War, and have only now come into my hands.

But the argument of the Board of Trade of the city of Trenton is not a very good one as they make it, because there is another bridge at Arthur Kill, which will become a part of this great waterway. The Congress of the United States passed an act in 1886 authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Arthur Kill, which, as I say, must become a part of this great ship canal. The span-opening there is less than that of the proposed bridge on the Delaware; the height of the bridge is the same, while the channel spans are even narrower. So that in reality that bridge will have to be changed also to give any additional advantage to the proposed canal.

Mr. President, if it be true that the commerce of the Delaware River at this point is of sufficient importance that it is necessary that a higher bridge should be constructed there, then it nowhere appears in any of the statistics of the commerce of the Delaware. The commerce of the Arthur Kill is ten times greater than that of the Delaware River at this particular point. I read over the reports last night, which had been sent to me by some gentlemen in Pennsylvania, which go to show that above a certain point in the river, where there are shoals which may easily be dredged out, the depth of the water is from 25 to 30 feet, and that when dredged would enable vessels of a larger draft to go up the river. I made the motion to reconsider the fugitive resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania at the request of some citizens of New Jersey in the absence of some members of the committee who were familiar with the whole subject, and I was not. As I before stated, I have never seen or had knowledge of any protest upon the part of the cities and towns on the bank of the Delaware until I had made the motion to reconsider the vote.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I desire merely to say, which I omitted in my previous remarks, that we are not asking for an elevation of 150 feet for the proposed bridge. The only question involved between the people of Philadelphia and the corporations is whether the elevation shall be 50 or 70 feet, a question of a rise of 20 feet.

Mr. McPHERSON. If there is any special reason why the bridge should be raised higher it is one that does not appear in any of the reports of the Chief of Engineers, they having been approved by the Secretary of War. The bridge is now under construction, and it seems to be of sufficient height and width to accommodate the commerce of the river.

Mr. QUAY. I should like, if the Senate will indulge me, to have the petitions read. I suppose it will not occupy more than a few minutes.

Mr. HALE. Let them be printed.

Mr. FRYE. It will take some time. I read nearly all of them in Major Raymond's report.

Mr. QUAY. The Senator from Maine did not read the petitions.

Mr. FRYE. It will take a long while to read them.

Mr. HALE. Let them be printed.

Mr. QUAY. Then I renew my motion to lay on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from New Jersey to reconsider.

Mr. QUAY. Did I understand from the remarks of the Senator from New Jersey that he is ready to withdraw his motion to reconsider?

Mr. McPHERSON. No, sir. The motion has been made and is in the possession of the Senate for action after the statement of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] and the statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. I stated that if I had been put in possession of the papers which came to me from those towns in the State of New Jersey, I do not think I would have entered the motion. But still at the same time I do not see that in the statements made they make a very clear case that the bridge is not of sufficient height and the span of sufficient width.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from New Jersey to reconsider.

Mr. FRYE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. ROACH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. WILSON of Iowa (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. I do not see him present, and withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the affirmative). I ask if the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], but will transfer my pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] and let my vote stand.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg leave to state that I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE].

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—37.

Aldrich,	Gorman,	Martin,	Ransom,
Allan,	Hawley,	Morgan,	Sherman,
Allison,	Hill,	Morrill,	Turpie,
Bate,	Huntton,	Murphy,	Vest,
Blackburn,	Kyle,	Peffer,	Walsh,

Camden,	Higgins,	Pettigrew,	Wilson of Wash.
Cockrell,	Hoar,	Pritchard,
Coke,	Irby,	Roach,
Cullom,	Jones of Ark.	Shoup,

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution stands passed.

Mr. QUAY. I ask that the papers to which I referred be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the papers were ordered to be printed, as follows:

List of resolutions of commercial organizations and clubs, also cities and towns on Delaware River, in opposition to projected bridge across the Delaware River between the city of Philadelphia and New Jersey with insufficient height above mean high water and inadequate width of draw, etc.: Preamble and resolution of the Trades League of Philadelphia; preamble and resolution of Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia; preamble and resolution of Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia; preamble and resolution of Philadelphia Produce Manufacturers' Association; preamble and resolution of Philadelphia Yacht Club; preamble and resolution of Corinthian Yacht Club; preamble and resolution of Trenton Board of Trade, May 24, 1894; preamble and resolution of Trenton Board of Trade, January 10, 1895; preamble and resolution of mayor and city council of Burlington, N. J., February 5, 1895; preamble and resolution of common council of Beverly, N. J., February 15, 1895; preamble and resolution of mayor and council of borough of Riverton, N. J., January 20, 1895; preamble and resolution of township committee of township of Palmyra, N. J., January 20, 1895; preamble and resolution of burgess and council of borough of Bristol, Pa., January 23, 1895.

THE TRADES LEAGUE OF PHILADELPHIA.

(Resolutions adopted January 10, 1895.)

Whereas a bridge across the Delaware River, between Philadelphia and New Jersey, is to be constructed by the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Railroad Company; and

Whereas the present plans for the bridge provide that it shall be but 50 feet above mean high water; and

Whereas this height is insufficient for the free passage of steamboats and other craft which even now in large numbers use that part of the river; and

Whereas it is but reasonable to expect that the traffic in the upper Delaware will in the near future increase, not only as to volume, but also as to the size of the craft employed—the Delaware River being an important link in the chain of water communication between the Southern and the Eastern States, via the Chesapeake and Delaware and Delaware and Raritan canals; and

Whereas the United States Government is now expending large sums of money in bettering and deepening the channel in vicinity of the proposed bridge; and

Whereas the bridge will be a public bridge, the use of which may, and doubtless will, be extended in the future to admit much greater and more varied traffic than now exists; and

Whereas the passage of vessels through a draw is, from the nature of the operation, attended with delay, often aggravated by unpropitious weather, or other causes, which lead to sailing vessels missing the draw at first trial; and

Whereas the use of a drawbridge is necessarily embarrassing and hurtful to the traffic passing through the draw, as it is also detrimental to the interests passing over the bridge, by interfering with the swift and regular movement of trains, thus increasing the peril of accidents; and

Whereas there are above the site of the bridge 5½ miles of deep-water river front within the city of Philadelphia, and at least 15 miles more of such river front beyond the city's limits upon the Pennsylvania side alone, all of which, at small cost, may be made available for the expanding commerce and manufacturing interests of Philadelphia; and

Whereas the erection of a low bridge must inevitably deteriorate the value of such river-front property and unfit it for the purposes above stated; and

Whereas the cost of elevating the bridge to a minimum height of 70 feet above mean high water would be insignificant as compared with the damages inflicted upon the commerce of the river and the loss in value to the upper river front, as well as upon the thriving towns of the upper Delaware, and upon the railroad company itself; and

Whereas the right of the people of this city, of this State, of New Jersey, and of the whole country to full enjoyment of all the natural advantages of a great navigable river is incontestable, be it, and by the Trades League of Philadelphia it is, hereby

Resolved, That the Trades League of Philadelphia protests against various features in connection with the construction of the proposed bridge, and particularly against any bridge having a less clearance than 70 feet above mean high water.

Resolved, That the Trades League invites the cooperation of kindred commercial organizations of Pennsylvania and New Jersey to unite in this movement.

Resolved, That a special committee of seven be appointed by the chair to take charge of this subject and present this protest to the Secretary of War.

PHILADELPHIA, January 15, 1895.

SIR: The Trades League of Philadelphia, a commercial organization with a membership of over 1,700 firms, individuals, or corporations, begs to submit to you, inclosed (a), certain resolutions adopted unanimously at the monthly meeting of the board of directors of the Trades League on January 10, 1895, respecting a proposed bridge over the Delaware River to connect Philadelphia and New Jersey, which the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Railroad contemplate erecting under authority of S. 1950.

We now respectfully ask that you will fix a time for receiving and hearing a committee representing commercial interests of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey, to the end that such committee may present to you facts and figures in support of a request that you will provide for the organization and the meeting at Philadelphia of a board of United States expert engineers to which this highly important matter of the construction of a bridge over one of the largest navigable streams in the country may be referred. We are confident that to such a board facts can be presented which will show that great and irreparable injury to commercial and other interests of magnitude would be done by the erection of the bridge in accordance with the plans that have been approved by the War Department.

No action upon the part of the commercial interests involved in the preservation from hurt of this natural and national highway has heretofore been taken because of the confidence entertained that all the interests thus menaced would be protected by the judicious action of the board of wardens of the port of Philadelphia or by the board of harbor commissioners. But you will perceive upon examination of the accompanying report (b) from the said board of wardens, under date of January 8, 1895, that the board has discovered, to the surprise of the community, that it has been declared to have no jurisdiction over the matter. Hence the necessity for action by our organization in bringing the subject to your attention, as per inclosed resolutions (a), which were adopted on the 10th instant, only two days after the report of the board of wardens (b). It has thus become necessary that there should be recourse to the authority by law vested in you for the prevention of the infliction of a great wrong upon the large body of American citizens whose right to free and unobstructed use of Delaware River is threatened with restriction and obstruction, absolutely without any need for such injury, by the contemplated action of the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Railroad Company.

Much has been said of late, in the public prints and elsewhere, of the necessity that the great natural highways, the rivers, shall not be obstructed by bridges. The report, for example, upon the proposed North River bridge has made clear the fact that the attempt of a private corporation to invade and to injure an important natural channel of commerce belonging, in fact, to the people of the whole country should not be permitted to have success.

With respect to the proposed bridge over the Delaware, the public mind, rarely closely fixed upon such matters in their earlier stages of promotion, has been confused by the variety of legislation presented from time to time or finally procured in the interest of bridge enterprises to cross the Delaware at Philadelphia. These have included in 1894:

1. National legislation (three, if not four bills).
2. Legislation by the State of New Jersey.
3. A charter from State of New Jersey.
4. A charter from State of Pennsylvania.
5. An ordinance from the council of Philadelphia.

Thus it has been difficult for the people to follow or clearly to discern the purpose of all the movements toward a conclusion which menaces their interests in a serious manner. This may be argued as a reason of weight why the whole matter shall be heard and examined by an expert commission composed of engineers United States Army before damage shall be done beyond probability of repair.

The board of engineers having in charge the task of considering plans for a new bridge over the North River at New York required that the structure should have a height of 150 feet clear above mean high water, with no pier or other obstruction in the river, and a single length of span of 4,100 feet between the pier head lines. The plans for the bridge over the Delaware at Philadelphia propose an extreme height of only 50 feet with four piers within a distance across the stream of 865 feet. In the deep-water channel at the draw, where there is nearly 35 feet depth at low water, there are to be located within a distance of 355 feet piers aggregating 100 feet in width. The mere statement of such a case, contrasted with the facts relating to the bridge over the North River, surely will impress you strongly with the necessity that steps shall be taken to check this attempt to injure the navigation of the upper Delaware.

We invite your attention to the fact that between April 2 and June 14, 1894, an unusual number of bills relating to a bridge across the Delaware at Philadelphia were introduced to the Senate or House at Washington. On April 2 Senator QUAY presented a bill (S. 1843) proposing such a bridge, and this on April 12 was returned to the Senate by Senator VIST, of Committee on Commerce, with amendments. "Provided, That no piers or other structures shall be constructed within the waterway of the Delaware River between the established pier head lines; And provided further, That the bridge shall have a clear height of 150 feet above mean high water."

On April 25 Senator CAMDEN presented a wholly new and very different bill, providing for a bridge across the Delaware at Philadelphia, and with a height of only 40 feet, and for five piers between the pier-head lines.

As the necessity for prompt action in this matter for the correction of an impending wrong, which will be forever beyond correction if the bridge shall be built as is now proposed, will be as apparent to you as it is to us, we would respectfully urge you to grant the request for a hearing for the committee at your earliest convenience.

We are, respectfully, yours,

WM. W. FOULKROD, President.
J. N. FITZGERALD, Secretary.
WALTER WOOD, Chairman Committee.

Hon. DANIEL S. LAMONT,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

THE COMMERCIAL EXCHANGE OF PHILADELPHIA, Philadelphia, January 23, 1895.

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Commercial Exchange, held January 22, 1895, the following preambles and resolution were unanimously adopted:

Whereas permission has been obtained and plans have been prepared by the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Railroad Company for the construction of a drawbridge across the Delaware River at Philadelphia, which plans provide for a least height of only 50 feet above mean high water; and

Whereas the spanning of the Delaware at Philadelphia by a bridge at so low an elevation as that aforesaid would create a serious impediment to the free navigation of a national waterway and tend to interfere especially with the natural growth of the commerce of the city of Philadelphia and contiguous territory; and

Whereas the legislation granting the right to construct the proposed bridge has been obtained without a sufficient opportunity having been accorded to the mercantile and commercial interests affected to be heard in regard to the project: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia respectfully petition the Secretary of War to appoint a commission of expert engineers at an early date to hear testimony on the subject and to determine if the interests of the community do not require that the proposed bridge should be built at a materially greater elevation above the water than is contemplated and authorized in the present plans.

E. L. ROGERS, President.
O. ROSS SMITH, Secretary.

PHILADELPHIA PRODUCE EXCHANGE, Philadelphia, January 23, 1895.

The following preambles and resolution were unanimously adopted by the board of directors of the Produce Exchange of Philadelphia at its meeting to-day, and copies of same, bearing the signature of the president, duly sealed, were to be forwarded to Hon. Daniel Lamont, Secretary of War:

Whereas the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Railroad Company contemplates the erection of a drawbridge across the Delaware River, the proposed elevation of which, being not more than 50 feet above mean high water, would be insufficient to permit the free navigation of an important national waterway, and would therefore impede the natural growth of the commerce of Philadelphia and the territory contiguous thereto; and

Whereas the legislation granting the right to erect the proposed bridge had been secured before proper public realization of its effect upon business interests had evoked serious objection to the movement: It is

Resolved, That the directors of the Philadelphia Produce Exchange unite with the Trades League and other commercial organizations in an appeal to the Secretary of War to appoint a committee of expert engineers to hear testimony and decide if the interests of the community do not require that the bridge should have a greater elevation above the mean high level of the channel than that contemplated by the present plans.

WM. S. EMLEY, President.
HOWARD AUSTIN, Secretary.

MANUFACTURERS' CLUB OF PHILADELPHIA.

At the monthly meeting of the Manufacturers' Club held on January 21, 1895, the following preambles and resolutions relative to the proposed bridge across the Delaware River between Philadelphia and New Jersey were unanimously adopted and committee appointed to present the same to the Secretary of War:

Whereas the plans for the construction of a proposed bridge over the Delaware River at Philadelphia provide that the greatest height of the structure above mean high water shall be but 50 feet; and

Whereas it is believed that this elevation is not sufficiently great to permit the safe and free navigation of a stream which is an important natural and national highway belonging to the whole body of the American people; and

Whereas as public attention has but recently been directed to this important matter, justice would appear to require that a hearing shall be given to other interests than those represented in the bridge project before a structure which will permanently affect the commerce of the Delaware River shall be erected: Be it, and by the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia it is

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be respectfully but urgently requested to have appointed a committee of expert military engineers to examine the matter, to take testimony, and to determine if the plans for the bridge should not be changed so as to require the further elevation of the structure.

Resolved, That the subject be referred to the committee on commerce and transportation with instructions to present these resolutions to the Secretary of War, and to take such other action as may be deemed necessary in the premises.

WM. S. STOCKTON,
Assistant Secretary.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., January 24, 1895.

SIR: Herewith I beg to inclose a copy of preambles and resolutions unanimously passed on the 21st instant by the Manufacturers' Club of this city with respect to the proposed construction of a drawbridge across the Delaware River at Philadelphia.

I trust the reasonableness of the request embodied in these resolutions (which have been dictated solely in the spirit of fair play toward all) will commend itself to your judgment, and that you will see your way to take the needful action to avert what, if consummated, would be a grave, though perhaps unintentional, injustice to the commercial interests of the Delaware River. The bridge in question will, if constructed, be the first between the ocean and the head of tide water to span this national waterway. Not only is it just and reasonable that so important a project as this (which, I repeat, has for its object the erection of the first bridge across the Delaware between the ocean and tide water) should not be undertaken until after the public has been granted ample opportunity to be heard pro and con, but the neglect of such precaution would create what in the future might prove to be a most dangerous precedent.

I might mention that the local authorities, the harbor commissioners of Philadelphia and the port wardens, who had been looked to to exercise a supervisory control, have recently declared their lack of jurisdiction in the premises; hence the appeal to you.

A committee of the Manufacturers' Club purpose waiting upon you in person on the 26th instant by appointment with a copy of the resolutions herewith inclosed.

Yours, respectfully,

JOHN H. CONVERSE,
Vice-President.

Hon. DANIEL S. LAMONT,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

Protest of Trenton (N. J.) Board of Trade against a bridge of insufficient elevation.

On May 24, 1894, the following resolution was unanimously passed by the Trenton Board of Trade, and a copy sent to the Secretary of War and to each of the New Jersey members of Congress:

Whereas application to Congress has been made by certain parties for authority to construct a railroad bridge across the Delaware River between Camden and Philadelphia; and

Whereas the construction of said bridge, unless built at a sufficient elevation, might prove a serious obstacle to navigation, particularly if the proposed ship canal across New Jersey should become an accomplished fact: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Board of Trade, while heartily approving, in a general way, the idea of a railroad bridge at the location specified, does most emphatically protest against permission being granted for the construction of any style of a bridge that might in anywise obstruct or interfere with the free navigation of the Delaware River by vessels of the largest size.

Resolved, That a copy of the above be transmitted to the New Jersey members of Congress.

Resolution of Board of Trade of Trenton, N. J.

TRENTON, N. J., January 10, 1895.

At a meeting of the Board of Trade of Trenton, N. J., held on the 3d instant, the following was unanimously adopted:

Whereas the plans for the new railroad bridge at or near Philadelphia, seem to indicate that there will be only a clearance of some 60 feet above high water for the passage of vessels under the same: Therefore,

Resolved, That in the opinion of this Board of Trade the clearance should be at least 70 feet above high-water mark for the needed free passage of many of the water craft at that point.

Very respectfully,

WM. W. STELLE, Secretary.

The above has been sent to the Secretary of War.

Preambles and resolutions passed by the city of Burlington, N. J., February 5, 1895, and copy of same sent to Secretary of War.

Whereas the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Railroad Company contemplate the construction of a drawbridge over the Delaware River at Philadelphia, in accordance with authority granted under a recent act of Congress; and

Whereas the prosperity of the city of Burlington is vitally connected with the maintenance of the unobstructed navigation of the upper Delaware, which is a competitive means of transportation of the greatest benefit to this community: Therefore,

Resolved, That the mayor and city councils of Burlington earnestly and respectfully petition the Secretary of War to appoint a commission of expert engineers who shall hear testimony and provide that the aforesaid drawbridge shall be constructed at sufficient height above the water to permit the free and unhampered passage of the upriver traffic, and so preserve to the public their rightful advantage in this national waterway.

Resolution of common council of city of Beverly, N. J.

Whereas the authority has been given to the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Railroad Company to build a drawbridge at Philadelphia across the Delaware River, which, unless constructed at a sufficient height above the surface of the water, will seriously impede the movement of craft plying between the towns along the upper Delaware and points below the location of the proposed drawbridge: Therefore,

Resolved, That the mayor and city council of Beverly respectfully petition the Secretary of War to appoint a commission of expert United States engineers to hear testimony from all the interests concerned and decide upon the clearance above the water which would be fair and equitable to all.

The above resolution was adopted by the common council of the city of Beverly at a meeting held February 15, 1895.

Attest:

ELLWOOD P. RODMAN, City Clerk.

Preambles and resolution passed by the borough of Riverton, N. J., January 29, 1895, and copy of same sent to the Secretary of War.

Whereas the citizens of Riverton, realizing the advantages accruing from a free competitive water route, are deeply interested in the preservation of the unobstructed navigation of the upper Delaware River for both passenger and freight craft of the largest practicable size; and

Whereas it is apparent that the proposed drawbridge of the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Railroad Company across the Delaware at Philadelphia will prove a serious impediment to the free passage of the upriver traffic unless the bridge is constructed at a considerably greater height above the water than now contemplated: Therefore,

Resolved, That the mayor and councils of the borough of Riverton respectfully petition the Secretary of War to appoint at an early date a commission of United States engineers to hear testimony and decide whether or not an equitable regard for the rights of the people does not require that the bridge in question, if built, should be elevated above the height now provided for in the plans.

EDWARD H. OGDEN, Mayor.
E. C. STOUTINGTON, Clerk.

Preambles and resolution passed by the township of Palmyra, January 29, 1895, and copy of same sent to the Secretary of War.

Whereas permission has been given and plans drawn by the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Railroad Company for the erection of a drawbridge across the Delaware River at Philadelphia; and

Whereas the said drawbridge, if not constructed at a greater height above the water than is specified in the present plans, will materially interfere with the free navigation of the river above Philadelphia, and so tend to the detriment of this and neighboring communities: Therefore,

Resolved, That the township committee of the township of Palmyra respectfully urge upon the Secretary of War the importance of appointing a commission of expert engineers to decide upon the proper height at which the aforesaid bridge should be built without infringement upon the rights of any of the interests concerned.

R. L. TEMPLE, Chairman.
F. L. SMITH, Clerk.

BOROUGH OF BRISTOL.

Whereas the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Railroad Company has been granted authority to construct a drawbridge across the Delaware River at Philadelphia, the plans for which provide for a height of only 50 feet above mean high water; and

Whereas a bridge at so low an altitude would prove a needless obstruction of the most serious character to the free navigation of the upper Delaware River and tend to restrict the growth of the commercial interests of Bristol and adjacent river towns, whose traffic is largely river borne; and

Whereas it is of vital importance to the prosperity of these towns and the extensive country tributary to them that the freest possible navigation of the Delaware River be preserved: Therefore

Resolved, That the burgess and council of the borough of Bristol respectfully petition the Secretary of War to appoint a commission of expert engineers to hear testimony from the various interests affected by the erection of the proposed bridge, with a view of granting justice to all and preventing a great wrong being wrought to the communities situated on the shores of this national waterway.

J. WESLEY WRIGHT, Clerk.

BRISTOL, PA., January 23, 1895.

I certify that the above was unanimously adopted at a regular meeting of the burgess and council of Bristol Borough, held this date.

J. WESLEY WRIGHT, Clerk.

JANUARY 15, 1895.

Whereas the Hardware Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of Philadelphia has full sympathy with the action of representative commercial organizations of Philadelphia—such as the Trades League, the Manufacturers' Club, and the Commercial Exchange—in their protest against the construction of the proposed drawbridge of the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Railroad Company across the Delaware River at Philadelphia, at the low clearance above the water, contemplated in the present plans: Therefore

Resolved, That the Hardware Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of Philadelphia, in the interests of fair play and justice to all, hereby unites with the commercial bodies aforesaid, in respectfully petitioning the Secretary of War to provide for the sitting of a Board of United States Engineers at Philadelphia, to receive testimony on this important subject, and to afford an opportunity for a full and free consideration of the question in all its bearings.

W. N. SUPPLEE, President.
T. JAMES FERNLEY, Secretary.

Resolution of the Corinthian Yacht Club of Philadelphia at the second general meeting on February 14, 1895.

Whereas authority has been given by Congress to the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Railroad Company to construct a drawbridge (with six piers between shore and shore) across the water of the Delaware River at Philadelphia; and

Whereas the plans for the said bridge contemplate a height of only 50 feet above mean high water, and a width of but 125 feet for the drawspan; and Whereas the erection of the bridge at so low an altitude above the water, and with so narrow a drawspan, would prove an obstruction to the free passage of a large number of the pleasure yachts, which now include in their sailing course the beautiful portions of the Delaware River above the site of the proposed bridge, and would accordingly curtail seriously a legitimate and healthful recreation: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Corinthian Yacht Club of Philadelphia earnestly petition the Secretary of War to appoint at an early date a commission of expert engineers to review the plans of the projected bridge and allow to all parties interested an opportunity to present their views.

EDGAR T. SCOTT, Commodore.
ADDISON F. BANCROFT, Secretary.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, COLLECTOR'S OFFICE,
Trenton, N. J., January 14, 1895.

SIR: I write you concerning the new bridge across the Delaware River, above Philadelphia, Pa. The measurements, as they have been given to me, give only an average height of 50 feet above high-water mark. I think this would be a great mistake, and seriously interfere with navigation. This bridge, in my judgment, should be at least from 70 to 75 feet above high-water mark. Having had over fifty years' experience on the river, would be very sorry to see navigation obstructed by this bridge.

Respectfully, yours,

JOHN A. WILSON, Collector.

HON. SECRETARY OF WAR,
Washington, D. C.

The resolutions in protest against present plans of bridge across Delaware River to be built by Pennsylvania and New Jersey Railroad Company, as adopted by the Philadelphia Yacht Club at their annual meeting, held February 6, 1895, are as follows:

Resolved, That the Philadelphia Yacht Club condemn the plan of the proposed bridge of the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Railroad Company across the Delaware River from Bridesburg, Pa., to Fishers Point, N. J., because of the insufficient height of the structure (50 feet) above the water. There are few yachts owned in this city that could pass thereunder without striking their topmasts, but many which could not, at a height of 50 feet, and the use of the draw for yachts would be wholly impracticable. All yachtsmen and owners of vessels know that the draw of a railroad bridge is of little value to sail craft. Tenders of draws of railroad bridges, either in obedience to orders of the superior officers (who generally act in that respect as if they owned the river, or think they do, or have the same opinion themselves) suit their own sweet will in the opening of the draws, and no time is in their opinion too long for vessels, and especially yachts, to wait. This has been the experience of yachtsmen and vessel owners everywhere, and we have no reason to believe that the present proposed structure across the Delaware will be managed differently.

The officials of the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Railroad Company and the United States engineers, with little or no consideration for the interests of vessel owners, or even for the welfare of the city, have approved the plan herein condemned.

This fact should have little weight with the authorities at Washington or with the people, for some of these same United States engineers have approved the dumping of earth, etc. (taken from the islands opposite the city), into the harbor of the leading Philadelphia yacht club, between Little Tincum Island and the mainland, without the consent of the riparian owners, when they knew, or should have known, if they were competent, that the same earth, etc., would soon wash (as a large portion, if not the most of it, has washed) into the ship channel below.

It is not true that the location of the bridge will not interfere with the class of craft that navigate this part of the river. Hundreds of freight vessels and yachts pass this point annually.

We believe that the only proper way to do justice to all interests in the location and construction of this bridge is to submit it to a commission of competent persons to take testimony and to fully consider all the interests that will probably be affected.

The Philadelphia Yacht Club, believing that the location of the proposed bridge at a height of 50 feet would be an irreparable injury to the rights of owners of vessels and yachts, earnestly request our Congressmen to do all in their power to secure the appointment of the commission referred to so that the interests of the city and vessel owners generally may be protected.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Secretary of War, Gen. Thomas L. Casey, and to each of our Senators and city Congressmen.

FRANCIS SHUNK BROWN, Commodore.
J. G. RAMSDELL, Secretary.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8659) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Emory and Clinch rivers, in the State of Tennessee, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 8900) to amend section 9 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the Kansas City, Pittsburg and Gulf Railroad Company to construct and operate a railroad, telegraph, and telephone line through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the Choctaw Nation of Indians relative to the claim against the United States on account of the lands of the Wichita Reservation, and praying that they may be allowed to plead their cause before the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court of the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DUBOIS presented a concurrent resolution of the legislature of the State of Idaho; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

[House concurrent resolution No. 8. By Johnson.]

Concurrent resolution against the passage of the pooling bill.

Whereas there is a bill now pending before the Senate of the United States, commonly known as the "pooling bill," the object of which is to enable all the railroad companies in the United States to organize themselves into a gigantic trust, controlling the transportation business of the whole country, and thus place the commerce of the nation, and the employment and wages of nearly 1,000,000 laboring men, at the mercy of a vast corporate monopoly, controlling more than eleven hundred millions of capital: and

Whereas we believe that the effect of the passage of said "pooling bill" can not be otherwise than disastrous to the people, and tend to still further prostrate them beneath the iron heel of corporate greed and rapacity: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Idaho (the senate concurring herein), First. That our Senators be, and they are hereby, instructed and earnestly requested to vote against and use every effort possible to prevent the passage of the said pooling bill.

Second. That a copy of this preamble and resolution be immediately forwarded to our Senators.

Approved February 9, A. D. 1895.

W. J. MCCONNELL, Governor.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, Secretary's Office, State of Idaho.

I, Isaac W. Garrett, secretary of the State of Idaho, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and complete transcript of house concurrent resolution No. 8, which was filed in this office the 9th day of February, A. D. 1895, and admitted to record.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State. Done at Boise City, the capital of Idaho, this 9th day of February, A. D. 1895.

[SEAL]

I. W. GARRETT, Secretary of State.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of 40 citizens of Ironton, Ohio, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing that "no State shall grant the right of franchise to any person who is not a citizen of the United States;" which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of 40 citizens of McCutchenville, Ohio, and a petition of 125 citizens of Dayton, Ohio, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the appropriation of moneys for sectarian institutions; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VEST presented the petition of N. Porter and sundry other citizens of the State of Washington, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the free coinage of silver; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GEORGE presented a memorial of 40 citizens of Senatobia, Miss., ministers of the Baptist Church, remonstrating against the submission by Congress to the several States of a joint resolution amendatory of the Constitution of the United States in respect to the Christian religion; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CAMERON presented petitions of 108 citizens of Pittsburg, of 43 citizens of Mercersburg, of 40 citizens of Irwin, and of 70 citizens of Pleasantville, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing that "no State shall grant the right of franchise to any person who is not a citizen of the United States;" which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of 43 citizens of Mercersburg, Pa., and a petition of 70 citizens of Pleasantville, Pa., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the appropriation of moneys for sectarian institutions; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GIBSON. I present the memorial of J. W. Albaugh, of Washington, D. C., remonstrating against the adoption of the proposed amendment in the sundry civil appropriation bill condemning certain property in the city of Washington, D. C., known as the "Blaine lot."

I move that the memorial lie on the table, and that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LINDSAY presented a petition of sundry citizens of Hodgenville, Ky., praying that an appropriation be made for the erection of a monument at the birthplace of Abraham Lincoln; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8880) to authorize the Pittsburg, Monongahela and Wheeling Railroad Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River, reported it without amendment.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5005) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of William Albin, late of Company D, Thirty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2441) for the relief of the heirs of the late Col. Israel C. Woodruff, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by himself on the 23d instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2720) to amend section 1 of chapter 398 of the laws of 1882, entitled "An act to provide for deductions from the gross tonnage of vessels of the United States," reported it with amendments.

Mr. FRYE. On the 21st instant I reported, from the Committee on Commerce, an amendment intended to be proposed to the naval appropriation bill. The purpose of the amendment is to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service. I now submit a statement of fact, in the nature of a report, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, to accompany the amendment heretofore reported by me and referred to that committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered in the absence of objection.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8057) to incorporate the East Washington Belt Line Railway Company, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2721) to amend the river and harbor act of August 7, 1894, providing for improving the outer harbor of Brunswick, Ga., reported it with amendments.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by Mr. GALLINGER on the 23d instant, intended to be proposed to the naval appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8127) to provide increase of pension to Hosea Brown, of the war of 1812, to report it with an amendment, and submit a report thereon. This soldier is 103 years old, and the bill will have to go to the House, having been amended by the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it go over. On Tuesday night all such measures will be considered.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is very kind of the Senator if he promises that.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have already set aside Tuesday night for the consideration of unobjected bills.

Mr. GALLINGER. All right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

COMMITTEE ON PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. CAMDEN. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report favorably a resolution, for which I ask present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The resolution will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution submitted by Mr. MORGAN on the 22d instant, instructing the Committee on Pacific Railroads to continue during the coming recess of Congress the investigations authorized by the resolution of October 13, 1893, into the condition of the bond-aided Pacific railway companies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CHANDLER. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

DISCARDED HEATING APPARATUS.

Mr. CAMDEN. I report from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate a resolution for which I ask immediate consideration.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate is hereby authorized and directed to turn over to the Architect of the Capitol any portion of the heating apparatus lately discarded at the Maltby Building, that may be useful in the Botanical Garden.

Mr. CAMDEN. I will explain that the resolution simply grants permission for the transfer to the Botanical Garden of a boiler that is not in use. I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 2800) to grant a township of land to the State of Alabama for the use of the Alabama State Normal College; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PUGH introduced a bill (S. 2801) to increase the pension of John T. Walton, of Marengo County, Ala.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BERRY introduced a bill (S. 2802) to approve a compromise and settlement between the United States and the State of Arkansas; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BERRY. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, with the accompanying paper, which is an agreement between the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Treasury and the governor of Arkansas in regard to a debt under a law that was passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BERRY. I also move that the agreement, together with the report of the representatives of the Treasury Department and the Interior Department, be printed as a separate document.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LINDSAY introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 139) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver condemned cannon to citizens' general committee on the twenty-ninth national encampment, Grand Army of the Republic, to be held at Louisville, September, 1895; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SQUIRE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DUBOIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HUNTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLANCHARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. PEPPER, it was Ordered, That James L. White, agent for the Home for Aged and Infirm Colored Persons, be permitted to withdraw from the files of the Senate, under the rules thereof, all the petitions and memorials filed in the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses in behalf of the measures to provide for the erection of a national home for aged and infirm colored persons.

REPORT ON CONDITION OF COTTON INDUSTRY.

Mr. GEORGE. I present the report of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry on the condition of cotton growers in the United States, the present prices of cotton, and the remedy; and on cotton consumption and production. At the same time I submit a resolution, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 5,500 copies of the report of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry on cotton, this day submitted; of which 500 shall be for the use of the said committee, 200 for the State Department, and 200 for the Bureau of Statistics, and 2,000 for the Senate, and 2,600 for the House of Representatives.

REMISSION OF TIME PENALTIES.

Mr. CAMERON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to transmit forthwith to the Senate copies of all correspondence and reports on file in relation to the remission of the time penalties on the United States vessels Yorktown, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and Newark.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. JAMES KERR, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8237) for the relief of William W. Buckley, late first lieutenant, One hundred and ninety-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteers.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2377) to amend "An act to amend section 4400 of Title LII of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the regulation of steam vessels," approved August 7, 1882, and also to amend section 4414, Title LII of the Revised Statutes, "Regulation of steam vessels;" agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WISE, Mr. MALLORY, and Mr. STORER managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 5218) to amend the Articles for the Government of the Navy;

A bill (H. R. 5224) for the relief of James Stewart; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 227) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to donate to the Oregon State Soldiers' Home at Roseburg, Oreg., certain cannon, etc.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 21st instant approved and signed the act (S. 2589) granting cannon to the Historical Museum, Des Moines, Iowa.

MEXICAN FREE ZONE.

Mr. HARRIS. A day or two since the joint resolution (H. Res. 277) in reference to the Free Zone along the northern frontier of Mexico and adjacent to the United States was passed by the Senate. In the light of certain suggestions which have just come to me, I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed. For the present I will let the motion simply be entered, because the committee desires to investigate the matter a little further.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the joint resolution has already been signed by the presiding officers of the two Houses. If so, it seems to me some further action should be taken.

Mr. HARRIS. If the joint resolution has been signed by the presiding officers of the two Houses and has gone to the President, I connect with my motion a motion to request the President to return the joint resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that would be wise, as I understand that is the situation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Tennessee will be entered.

Mr. HARRIS subsequently said: I submit a resolution asking the House to return a joint resolution now in the hands of the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the House. I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the engrossed joint resolution (H. Res. 277) in reference to the Free Zone along the northern frontier of Mexico and adjacent to the United States.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the Indian appropriation bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8479) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

Mr. KYLE. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add to the bill the following as an additional section:

SEC. — That the term "Indian," wherever it occurs in any law of the United States or any treaty of the United States with any nation or tribe of Indians, shall be held to mean and include not only all Indians of the mixed blood, of whatever degree, whenever such mixed-blood Indians, at the time of the passage of any such law or ratification of any such treaty, lived and maintained tribal relations with and were recognized members of any tribe of Indians which was interested in or affected by any such law or treaty; and such Indians of the mixed bloods shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges under the law the same as Indians of the full blood.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to reserve the point of order against the amendment. I do not care to cut off my colleague from stating his position, but I reserve the point of order.

Mr. KYLE. Do I understand the point of order is raised by my colleague before I can make my remarks?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I simply reserve the point of order for the purpose of not cutting the Senator off from making his remarks.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered is one of vital importance to the people of my State. It affects the interests of the Indians in the whole Northwest. We know that during the past one hundred years it has been the custom of white traders to visit the Indian tribes and marry Indian women, to become incorporated with the tribe, and to raise Indian families. That practice has been pursued to such an extent that there are to-day thousands and thousands of mixed-blood Indians in the United States. I think it is safe to say that in my State one-fourth of the twenty-five or thirty thousand Indians are those of mixed blood; that is, the children of Indian mothers and white fathers.

Now, it so happens that in the year 1891 a question arose as to the right of a certain Indian woman, a Mrs. Jane Waldron, to take an allotment in the Sioux Reservation of South Dakota. The question, after being considered by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, was referred by him to the Assistant Attorney-General, then Mr. Shields. Mr. Shields was asked to pass upon two questions. The first was whether Mrs. Waldron, being a mixed-blood Indian, was entitled to annuities; and second, whether she was entitled to take an allotment. Upon these questions he presents quite an elaborate decision. I will quote one or two paragraphs from the opinion touching upon the question of mixed-bloods. He says:

It is insisted, however, that Mrs. Waldron is not an Indian, and therefore is not entitled to an allotment within said reservation.

Her father, as we know, was a white man who went upon the reservation in 1855, and has continued to live among the Indians from that time to this, being incorporated with the Sioux tribe, according to the treaty of 1868.

It seems but proper that this question as to the status of one of these claimants under said law should be first disposed of. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs seems to have taken it for granted that Mrs. Waldron is an Indian within the meaning of the law in question.

Then Mr. Shields quotes various decisions of the Supreme Court and other courts relative to the status of mixed-blood Indians. He sums that up in the following sentence:

(1) The members of the various nations and tribes of Indians, although living within the geographical limits of the United States, are not by birth citizens thereof; and (2) These people constitute separate and distinct, though dependent nations, and their individual members are freemen.

Then, as relating to the case of Mrs. Waldron, he makes this remark:

The status of the parents of Mrs. Waldron's mother is not sufficiently shown to justify a positive conclusion thereon, but for the purposes of this opinion she may be considered an Indian. We have then to determine, whether—and here is the question—the child of a white man, a citizen of the United States, and an Indian woman, his wife, is an Indian within the purview of the act of March 2, 1890.

Then he quotes this decision as supporting the position which he has taken:

In the case of Ex parte Reynolds (5 Dill, 394), the question, Who is an Indian? was presented and quite fully discussed. It was concluded that, the Indians being free persons, the common-law rule, that the offspring of free persons follows the condition of the father, prevails in determining the status of the offspring of a white man, a citizen of the United States, and an Indian woman.

Commenting upon this matter as to the rights of Mrs. Waldron with regard to receiving annuities and an allotment under the severalty act, he says:

Under the rule laid down in the decisions cited, which rule is, in my opinion, a sound one and applicable to the case under consideration, Mrs. Waldron was born a citizen of the United States. Her claim that she is an Indian by virtue of being born of an Indian mother can not be allowed. There is no allegation that she has taken steps to renounce her allegiance to the United States or to assume the rights and duties of a citizen of any other nation, tribe, or people.

Now, Mr. President, a question is presented here for our decision. It is whether the child of a white father and an Indian mother is an Indian within the meaning of the law. As we know, these white men take up residence with an Indian tribe, marry Indian women, and become members of the tribe either by recognition or adoption or by provision of the various Indian treaties. They are practically members of the Indian tribe. At the same time they occupy a dual relation. They are at once citizens of the United States and incorporated members of the Indian tribe, and their children born to them in wedlock also preserve this dual relation as regards their tribal rights and their citizenship. The children, the mixed-blood Indian sons and daughters, are at the same time incorporated members of the Indian tribes and citizens of the United States. Mr. Shields goes on to say:

The conclusion that Mrs. Waldron is not an Indian carries with it the answer to both questions propounded by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. In reply to the first question—

That is, whether she was entitled to annuities—

I would say Mrs. Waldron was not, at the date of the act of March 2, 1890, entitled to receive rations and annuities at the Cheyenne River Agency. This also disposes of the second question, which is hypothetical, dependent upon the first question being answered favorably to Mrs. Waldron's claim.

That is, that she was not entitled to take an allotment under the severalty act.

Mr. President, I submit that this decision of Mr. Shields, ready for promulgation upon November 27, 1891, is in direct violation of the customs and usages along this line for the past one hundred years. It is an old principle of common law known to every Senator upon this floor—partus sequitur ventrem—that the child follows the mother. It was true among the colored race in the South with reference to the offspring of a colored woman and a white man. It is true in all barbarous nations. It is true as relates to the Indian tribes of the United States. To-day the Indians of mixed blood in the United States are recognized as members of the Indian tribes and are known as Indians. There never has been a violation of that rule in United States law during our history.

Now, the question is whether that status as existing heretofore in the United States shall be allowed to remain. The provisions of my amendment are that the status heretofore adopted shall remain, and that no such decision as that prepared by Mr. Shields shall be promulgated to disturb the rights of mixed-blood Indians.

Mr. MORGAN. Can the Senator from South Dakota tell me whether the Secretary of the Interior or the Attorney-General of the United States affirmed that decision?

Mr. KYLE. I will come to that point in a moment.

The laws of the United States, as I have said, have always regarded those men as Indians. They have regarded them as Indians in making treaty stipulations with tribes in different portions of the United States. It was true when the commission of the United States went to Wyoming to make the famous treaty of 1868 with the Sioux Nation. Those men to whom I have referred, half-breeds, the sons of white fathers, not only helped to prepare the treaty but assisted in getting the Indians of the various tribes to sign the treaty. It was stipulated in the act of 1868, proclaimed February 24, 1869:

No treaty for the cession of any portion or part of the reservation herein described which may be held in common shall be of any validity or force as against the said Indians unless executed and signed by at least three-fourths of all the adult male Indians occupying or interested in the same.

I submit the fact that in all the treaty stipulations made with the Indian tribes in the West they have included not only the Indians of full blood but the Indians of mixed blood in order to make the necessary three-fourths to comply with the provisions of the treaty from which I have read. That was also done with reference to the treaty made with the Sioux Nation in South Dakota in 1869. It was the case two years ago with reference to the Yankton Sioux treaty, by which the Sioux sold or ceded to the United States a portion of their land. In order to make up the necessary three-fourths to comply with the provisions of the treaty they had to include and they did include not only the Indians of full blood but the Indians of mixed blood as well.

The United States has not only recognized this principle in this way, but it has gone further. It has during the past few years and since the passage of the Dawes severalty act sent a number of agents to the Indian reservations of the United States. These men have allotted lands to whom? Not only to the full-bloods, but in every case have allotted lands to the mixed-blood Indians—the children of Indian mothers and white fathers.

This is a recognition of the old principle which has been enforced since the foundation of the Government that the Indians of mixed blood are entitled to all the rights and privileges as regards annuities and allotments the same as Indians of the full blood. That is all I wish to accomplish by this amendment; simply to confirm what has heretofore been enforced during all the periods of the history of our country.

Mr. President, I feel confident that if a decision such as we have here presented before us by Mr. Shields is promulgated it will invalidate not only all the treaties made by the United States where these mixed-bloods were counted as necessary to make the necessary signatures, but will also invalidate many of the laws relating to Indian tribes of the United States.

Now, in reference to the question raised by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], I will state that when the present Secretary of the Interior came into office he found the decision of Mr. Shields ready for promulgation. He withheld it, however, I believe, and referred the question at issue to the Attorney-General, Mr. Olney, for his decision. Mr. Olney has given quite an elaborate opinion, one particular section of which I shall read; and I believe that in all such cases the opinion of the Attorney-General overrides the opinion of the assistant:

It will be noticed that the act under consideration was dependent for its validity upon the consent of the Indians. (Sec. 23.) In other words, it was substantially a treaty with the Sioux Nation, acts in this form having taken the place of the ancient Indian treaty since the latter was prohibited by act of Congress in 1871. By the agreement confirmed in this act the Sioux Nation gave up a large amount of territory, and the rights conferred on the nation or on individuals were in consideration thereof. The persons entitled to such rights are the persons who, at the time of the agreement, constituted the Sioux Nation and were lawful members thereof. The question, therefore, whether any particular person is or is not an Indian, within the meaning of this agreement, is to be determined, in my opinion, not by the common law, but by the laws or usages of the tribe. (See Western Cherokee Indians vs. United States, 27 Ct. Cls., 1, 54; United States vs. Old Settlers, 148 U. S., 427, 470.)

That is in direct line with the features of the amendment which I have proposed, which are these:

That the term "Indian," wherever it occurs in any law of the United States or any treaty of the United States with any nation or tribe of Indians, shall be held to mean and include not only all Indians of the full blood, but also all Indians of the mixed blood, of whatever degree, whenever such mixed-blood Indians, at the time of the passage of any such law or ratification of any such treaty, lived and maintained tribal relations with and were recognized members of any tribe of Indians which was interested in or affected by any such law or treaty; and such Indians of the mixed-blood shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges under the law the same as Indians of the full blood.

What I have said with reference to the recognition by the United States of these mixed-blood Indians is also true with reference to the recognition of the Indians themselves as to the rights of the mixed-bloods. I have been upon the reservation a great deal during the past twenty years. It has been my privilege to be a pioneer in the West nearly all of my life. I am perhaps as well acquainted with the customs and usages of the Indians as almost any member upon this floor. I have talked with the Indian chiefs regarding the particular custom of the induction of white men into the Indian tribes. These men are unanimous in saying that "the white men were accustomed as traders to come among us and ask the privilege of taking an Indian wife and becoming members of the Indian tribe." They would come and present their request to the chief in most instances and state their desire. The chief would then call a few of the leading men around him and state the desire of the white man. If this was agreed to, they would have in many instances what was called a "brave dance" and a feast, and by that the man was known to be incorporated into the tribe, and, as was stated to me, he was entitled to all the rights and privileges of Indians of the full blood from that time forth.

It has been the custom of all United States Indian agent for the past fifty years in dispensing the annuities to the Indians to regard Indians of the mixed blood exactly the same as if they had been Indians of the full blood. When the United States Government came under recent laws to make the allotments of land in severalty to Indians they gave the Indians of mixed blood exactly the same privileges they did Indians of the full blood, because the Indians themselves declared that "these men were adopted into our tribe by our usages and our customs, and they are furthermore incorporated with us by the treaty provisions."

Mr. President, if this matter be not settled it will be the cause of a great deal of disturbance among the half-breed or mixed-blood Indians of the United States. The very fact that this decision of Mr. Shields was ready for promulgation three or four years ago created a great uneasiness among those who had taken their land in severalty, and who were trying to make for themselves homes upon the Western prairies.

I have here petitions and bundles of letters almost innumerable from half-breeds in Montana, Wyoming, North and South Dakota, Wisconsin, the State of New York, and the country generally, asking that Congress shall pass a law fixing the status of the mixed-bloods and not place the allotments they have taken in jeopardy. I might read, but I shall not take the time except to refer to just a few letters, one from a prominent mixed-blood Indian of the Yankton Reservation in my own State, which will express about the general sentiment of all these men:

I will embrace the opportunity hereby presented to offer on the part of myself and that of all other "mixed-blood Indians," residents of this place, the hearty thanks you justly deserve in championing our cause. We appreciate the kindly interest you take in us, and assure you that your efforts on behalf of the mixed bloods will not be forgotten. The late decision of the Department of Indian Affairs, affecting the rights of the class of people known as the mixed-blood Indians, is one of vast import to us, and unless some speedy action is taken in the matter we will be made to suffer unjustly a great wrong for which we were not responsible. The status of the mixed bloods has never been questioned before, it being mutually conceded by both the white and the red men, and by rulings of the Indian Office, that we were Indians. But now it would seem that we are Indians only when we show a willingness to sign the treaties proposed to the Indians for the cession of their reservations, or any portion thereof; and white people when the reservations are open to settlement and the settlers want our allotments. Our signatures are as good as any full-blood Indian's when signed in receipt of supplies issued to Indians or to a treaty, but the moment we claim the right to allotments of land as Indians the whole country is up in arms and we are assailed on all sides; then it is that we are white people, but if we wish to use the right of franchise we are told that we are Indians. What are we, and where do we stand? If we are white people the treaty with the Sioux in 1889 and that with the Yankton tribe in 1892, by which were ceded to the Government several millions of acres of land, are null and void, for the necessary majority could never have been obtained without the mixed-bloods who signed. The Indians have a perfect right to, and will at no distant day, take the necessary steps to dispossess the settlers who are now holding land on the said ceded land, unless the mixed-bloods are decided to be Indians. I would like very much a copy of your bill, or any bill affecting the mixed-bloods; also a copy of the treaty with this tribe now pending action of Congress.

Very respectfully,

C. H. BONNIN.

Also the following:

SISSETON AGENCY, S. DAK., January 19, 1894.

DEAR SIR: I see by the papers that the honorable Secretary of the Interior has affirmed a decision made a few years ago relative to the rights of mixed-bloods to take lands as Indians under the severalty bill, and I write you in regard to the matter, as I would like to know if the decision will affect those of us holding lands here, we having taken 100 acres each under a treaty concluded March 3, 1891. There are on the rolls of this agency about 1,350 people, and something over a third of this number are mixed-bloods. By a treaty concluded February 19, 1897, this reservation was set apart for a certain number of Sisseton and Wahpeton Indians and mixed-bloods as a permanent home in consideration of services rendered during and just after the Sioux outbreak in Minnesota in 1862; but many of the Indians have been led to believe that all mixed-blood Indians here will lose their rights to annuity payments and lands. Many of the Indians and mixed-blood Indians have lived on their farms for the past twenty years, and have quite an amount of improvements on them. Some have held patents for the same time. It would be a great injustice to apply a decision of that nature here and deprive the mixed-blood Indians of their homes and the lands they have been improving for so long. Can there be nothing done that will insure to the mixed-blood Indians here their homes, or will the land all be thrown open to settlement?

The treaty by which all vacant lands of this reservation were ceded to the Government was made by the aid of mixed-blood Indians, as I find that 64 out of 209 signers were mixed-blood Indians, while it required 180 to make the necessary majority.

Very respectfully, yours, etc.,

J. R. BROWN.

Hon. JAMES H. KYLE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

ROSEBUD INDIAN AGENCY, S. DAK., January 5, 1895.

DEAR SIR: I have been connected with the Indian service in positions of trust and responsibility since 1873, and nearly eleven years of this period as licensed trader at this agency. I am included in that class called "squaw men," a term originated by exasperated thieving Indian agents, who found these men—who could see, read, and write—an obstacle to their successful thieving operations.

It has always been claimed by the Sioux that all their treaties were signed through the persuasion of the squaw men and mixed-bloods; and if you will refer to pages 19, 93, and 173 of the printed report of the Crook commission you will observe that the white men and mixed-bloods were virtually given credit for the acceptance of that agreement, and their rights were admitted. All white men, whether legally married in 1868 or 1889, were "incorporated into the tribe;" and I have heard such authorities on Indian laws as Judges Shannon and Edmunds so decide; and I have a certificate from the Interior Department to land under the treaty of 1868, although I was not married until 1873, and the later authorities of the Interior Department, in a letter to Agent Wright here, confirmed the rights of men married subsequent to 1868. All of us signed the last treaty, and by referring to page 118 of this same report you will read that Swift Bear, the recognized head chief and successor to Spotted Tail, called upon me to make a speech, which request was made because I was recognized as an adopted or incorporated member of the tribe, and it is known and can be easily proved that following my speech the Indians commenced signing the treaty, and that I called for and accompanied to the table those who first signed.

See section 21, latter part, of the act of March 2, 1889, and you will perceive that where the term "Indian" is used in the foregoing sections it is clearly admitted that it covers "mixed-blood Indians," and acknowledges their right to land under that treaty.

The question of the rights of the white men married to Indian women and of their offspring has been a vexed one and has perplexed the authorities for many years, and it would seem no more than right that some humane law should be enacted to protect these men and their children, and therefore the settlers whose claims to land under the new treaty seem to be invalidated by this Waldron decision.

Yours, very truly,

C. P. JORDAN.

Hon. J. H. KYLE,
United States Senator.

In other words, the general sentiment of these men seems to be that in case they are not recognized as being Indians in the eyes of the law, then the treaty made in 1889 by the Sioux Nation with the United States by which millions of acres of their land were given to the United States shall be declared null and void and they shall take steps to dispossess the white settlers who have gone upon that reservation.

Mr. President, I do not understand why there can be a point of order raised against this amendment. It does not formulate a general law. It does not change existing law. It merely interprets and confirms and determines the status of the present law that has been in force for the past one hundred years in the United States. That is all there is of it. If the point of order is to be raised against an amendment like this the same point of order will lie against one-half of the amendments that have been made to the pending Indian appropriation bill during the past few days.

I can not see the objection of my colleague to this amendment. I consulted, before drawing it, with some of the best-informed men upon the floor as regards Indian matters, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], who has lived on the northern frontier for the past twenty-five or thirty years; I do not know how long. In fact, the amendment as I have presented it was practically drawn by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], and he is capable of giving it the proper legal phraseology.

I hope, Mr. President, that my colleague will withdraw the point of order he has made, because he knows, as I know, that the Indians of the mixed blood in our own State, who comprise, as I said, about one-fourth of the Indians of the State, are rising up in arms and asking that this matter shall be settled; and I know he does not wish to place in jeopardy the rights and the claims of the mixed-blood Indians who have taken their allotments during the past.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to suggest to the Senator from South Dakota an amendment to his amendment to carry out exactly the object expressed by the Attorney-General. I suggest that he make it read "recognized as members by such nation or tribe."

Mr. KYLE. Very well.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Let the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri be stated.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be read as it will stand with my amendment.

The SECRETARY. The amendment as modified will read:

That the term "Indian," wherever it occurs in any law of the United States, or any treaty of the United States with any nation or tribe of Indians, shall be held to mean and include not only all Indians of the full blood, but also all Indians of the mixed blood, of whatever degree, whenever such mixed-blood Indians, at the time of the passage of any such law or ratification of any such treaty, lived and maintained tribal relations with and were recognized as members of any such tribe of Indians by such nation or tribe which was interested in or affected by any such law or treaty, and such Indians of the mixed blood shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges under the law the same as Indians of the full blood.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, there is only one other question in connection with this matter. During the past few years a large number of mixed-bloods went to surrounding States and made homes; but as soon as the law was passed giving allotments to Indians they were willing to return and take up their place with the tribe and claim the same privileges as the tribe. They were looked upon by many of the white settlers as being interlopers and having no right to the privileges of the full-blood Indians. In regard to that I will say in closing that I think the amendment as drawn and as moved by the Senator from Missouri completely covers that point. I will read that particular phraseology:

Whenever such mixed-blood Indians, at the time of the passage of any such law or ratification of any such treaty, lived and maintained tribal relations with and were recognized as members of any such tribe of Indians by such nation or tribe which was interested in or affected by any such law or treaty.

In other words, it brings us exactly to the position laid down by the Attorney-General, which I think is good law, that the status of mixed-blood Indians is to be determined, as he says here, "not by the common law, but by the laws and by the usages of the tribe."

I hope that the Senate will allow this amendment to go upon the bill in order to quiet the status of the mixed-bloods in South Dakota and the adjoining States.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I am very much afraid that the enactment of this proposed amendment into law will greatly complicate the Indian question along the boundary line between the United States and Canada. I have in mind one tribe of Indians in the State of North Dakota that would be seriously affected. I refer to the Chippewa Indians, located at Turtle Mountain. Ten years ago there were less than 800 of those Indians. Since then, year by year, the Government has appropriated money for the care and maintenance of those Indians to prevent them from starving, and every time the Government has sent its bounty to that region it has resulted simply in drawing Canadian half-bloods to that section. I believe the enactment of this amendment into law would simply result in bringing every half-blood Indian in the Dominion of Canada to the State of North Dakota, and every one of them would claim that he belonged originally and belongs now to the tribe.

Mr. KYLE. May I ask the Senator from North Dakota a question there?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Certainly.

Mr. KYLE. Is it not true that the law as it now stands provides exactly for what this amendment covers?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. There is a question in regard to that.

Mr. KYLE. Is it not true that the Government to-day allots lands in severalty to all Indians upon the reservations in North Dakota as well as South Dakota where the Indians are recognized as members of the tribe according to the laws and usages of the tribe and are incorporated with it?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That has been the intention of the Interior Department with reference to the management and government of the Indians in the Northwestern States.

Mr. KYLE. Then the amendment does not change the principles of the law at all.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. But, sir, that has not been the result. It is very difficult to distinguish between a full-blood Indian and a half-breed. They have a way of coming into this country and attempting at least to acquire land. The result I know has always been to increase the number of half-breeds coming to this country from the Dominion of Canada, until the little band of Turtle Mountain Indians, as I have said, which amounted to 800 ten years ago, now amounts to 2,500, and the Government is called on year by year to maintain them. Anything that further recognizes the half-breed Indians who come to this country from Canada will simply increase the amount that will be required to be appropriated from year to year to care for the Indians.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from South Dakota. Do I understand him to state that the Attorney-General has decided differently from the Assistant Attorney-General in the Interior Department? I understood the Senator to state that the decision of the Attorney-General was in consonance with this proposed amendment. If that be true, what is the necessity of our doing anything about it at the present time?

Mr. KYLE. I will state that the opinion of the Attorney-General hardly amounts to a decision upon this particular point. It takes up the question as to who is an Indian and does not decide it, but says that the laws and usages of the tribe must determine that question. He leaves it right there.

Mr. PLATT. Is not that the best way to leave it?

Mr. KYLE. That is the best way to leave it, I think, myself, and I want to confirm that principle in the law, so that in the future there shall be no dispute in regard to it.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Senator refers to the laws and usages of the tribe. As a matter of fact the laws and usages of the tribe of the Chippewa Indians in the Turtle Mountain region have become the laws and usages of the half-breeds who have come over there and simply overwhelmed them. From 800 pure-blood Indians ten years ago they have increased by the acquisition of half-breeds from Canada to 2,500. The half-bloods are in power in the execution of "laws and usages."

Mr. KYLE. Were the people who were brought over from Canada members of the tribe?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Not at all; but they have come there steadily and claimed tribal relations, and have been recognized perforce by the native Indians.

Mr. KYLE. There is something in the usages of that tribe to determine whether those Indians are members of the tribe or not. If they are not the Interior Department can cut them off.

Mr. PETTIGREW. This is a very broad and important question. In the State of South Dakota there are a very large number of mixed-blood Indians of all degrees who have taken lands in severalty upon reservations and lands upon ceded portions of reservations and are citizens of the United States. If this provision is enacted into law a white man who has only one-sixteenth Indian blood in his veins, or an eighth—

Mr. PLATT. Or a sixty-fourth.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Or a sixty-fourth, or any Indian blood whatever, can hold those lands exempt from taxation, from alienation, and from incumbrance for twenty-five years, thus forcing upon the people of South Dakota the necessity of furnishing a government without receiving any taxes whatever from those people. I am willing to give everyone lands; I am willing to confirm to these people the title in the lands which they have occupied; but I am unwilling to make them Indians by law and provide that the lands shall not be taxed for twenty-five years, and thus compel the people of the counties where they are located and the people of the State of South Dakota to furnish them a government and protection under the law when they are just as much to-day citizens of the United States as any other inhabitants of that State.

In the very case cited by my colleague, the Waldron case, Mr. Van Meter is a full citizen of the United States. He married a half-breed Santee-Sioux Indian woman back in 1858. When I went to Dakota he was living in the village of Vermillion and was one of the officers of the town. He had an addition to the town and was engaged in business. His children were born there and became unquestionably citizens of the United States. They had the advantage of the public school. They did not learn the Indian language, but the English language, and spoke the English language, and speak it to-day as well as anyone. You could not tell that they had Indian blood in their veins. One of the girls married Waldron, a full citizen of the United States. When the Sioux treaty was made opening up a portion of the land to settlement Waldron and his wife moved upon a half section of land adjoining the village of Fort Pierre, on the west side of the Missouri River, and she claimed that she was an Indian and entitled to that land under the law and could occupy it for twenty-five years without taxation. The Department has held that she is not an Indian, and this proposed legislation is for the purpose of curing her title.

Mr. KYLE. Will my colleague allow me to give the exact fact as to the date?

Mr. PETTIGREW. When I get through my colleague can reply.

Mr. KYLE. The date is all I wish to refer to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am willing that Mrs. Waldron should have the land, I am willing any half-breed should have the land, but I am not willing that we shall declare them Indians and allow them exemption from taxation for the next twenty-five years. It is an unusual burden to place upon the people of South Dakota, and one that I must resist as long as I am able to resist it. Along the Bad River several hundred half-breed Indians have taken their allotments. In fact, the whole Van Meter family is there. They have taken the water and they have great herds of cattle. I can see no reason in the world why they for twenty-five years should be exempt from taxation. Along the Cheyenne River there is another settlement. Mr. Du Pre has a herd of 15,000 cattle and a numerous family of half-breed children. They have occupied the water supply along that river for 10 or 12 miles. Shall they be exempt from taxation for the next twenty-five years? That is what this amendment proposes to do.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from South Dakota permit me to make a suggestion? Did we not pass at the last session of Congress a law authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to take from the funds of the Indians what would be a fair and equitable tax and pay it into the different county treasuries of South Dakota, Nebraska, and other States?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will say to the Senator that such a bill was considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs and reported favorably to the Senate. It is on the Calendar, and has not been passed by either House of Congress.

Mr. ALLEN. My recollection is that it became a law.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It ought to be passed. But is the United States ready to say that these white people are Indians and that they shall hold their lands and the Government shall pay the taxes even if that bill did pass? Of course that would relieve the burden from the people of South Dakota and take the money out of the Treasury of the United States. Further, this amendment was introduced as a separate bill and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the Committee on Indian Affairs refused to report it back favorably to the Senate.

Mr. KYLE. I do not think that is true. I think the Committee on Indian Affairs have not yet acted upon the question. I think they will report it favorably when they get to it, but they have not yet considered it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Committee on Indian Affairs, of which I am a member, voted upon this question and decided not to report it favorably.

Mr. ALLEN. Let me correct the Senator from South Dakota. The Committee on Indian Affairs did not vote upon it at all. I was present, and the bill was referred to me as a subcommittee. I made a favorable report upon it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will take the statement of the Senator, and say, then, that the Committee on Indian Affairs refused to report the amendment favorably.

Mr. ALLEN. No; that is not correct.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I insist that it is correct. The Senator can reply to me after I get through if he chooses to do so.

Mr. ALLEN. I was not present at the time, and for that reason it was not acted upon.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I was present and that was the decision of the committee. The committee refused to report it favorably.

Now, this question is one of too great importance to be disposed of on an appropriation bill. I am willing that it shall be taken up next winter by the Committee on Indian Affairs. If the questions with regard to alienation are properly guarded and protected I am perfectly willing to confirm the title of the mixed-bloods to the lands which they occupy, and to provide also that in the future all mixed-bloods of whatever degree may take land and acquire title thereto, subject, however, to the laws of taxation which apply to other property. I would also allow these people to sell or encumber their lands the same as other citizens. It seems to me no other course can fairly be pursued in this connection.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, my colleague seems to be laboring under a very great misapprehension. He seems to think that the amendment is granting to all half-breeds something that they do not already possess. These half-breed Indians have the privilege of taking their allotments, and by the present laws of the United States they are as Indians exempt from taxation. The pending amendment proposes to grant them no immunity from taxation.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to say to my colleague that if they are specially protected now this proposed legislation is very unnecessary.

Mr. KYLE. I have tried to make the argument clear all the way through this morning that we must confirm by statutory act of the United States that which has been the custom of the United States for the past hundred years. That is all. The question of the taxation of these half-breed Indians has nothing whatever to do with the question under consideration. I will take up the question next year, or any other time, as to whether half-breed Indians shall pay taxes or not.

I think a great number of these squaw men should be taxed, and the half-breeds who have large herds of cattle I think ought also to be taxed; but I know this to be true, that the larger part of the half-breeds to-day in the United States are not able to pay taxes; and to impose such a burden upon them would destroy the effect of the law providing that those persons should take their lands in severalty, looking forward to the time when they should have established homes. I say the question of taxation has nothing whatever to do with this bill, as those people are already exempt from taxation.

As to Mr. Van Meter, my colleague has said that he knew him first as a resident of Vermillion, S. Dak., where he was keeping a store or livery stable of some kind, and educating his family. I have a letter from Mrs. Waldron, in which she states:

KIND SIR:

FORT PIERRE, S. DAK., February 5, 1895.

My father has been in this Indian country since 1855. When he first came it was to a military post here, when he was in the employ of General Harney, and his name appears on the pay rolls of the Quartermaster's Office. In the year 1858 he married my mother and located at a point on the Vermillion River where the town of Vermillion now stands. He did not leave the Indian country, but it became ceded land as the Government opened it up about him.

In other words, he located there when that was Indian land; he did not leave the Indian country; he was an Indian living among the Indians. When they became ceded lands he remained there and educated his family among the whites.

In 1879 he moved west, and has been on this particular reservation since 1881. He is one of the men incorporated into the Sioux tribe of Indians according to the treaty of April 20, 1868, so that his offspring surely ought to be recognized as Indians.

Very respectfully,

JANE E. WALDRON.

Hon. JAMES H. KYLE, Washington, D. C.

In other words, Mr. Van Meter left the town of Vermillion in 1879, and in 1881 became a resident upon the Sioux Reservation, where he now is, and has had his family there with him since that time. Since 1881 he and all the members of his family have received annuities from the Government, and when the law of 1890 was passed granting to these people the privilege of taking lands he and his family, according to the provisions of that law, took their allotments, and they are now holding them; and the question is, whether they are going to lose them or not in consideration of any ruling of the Interior Department.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to hear the amendment read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, after line 9 on page 10, to insert:

That the term "Indian," wherever it occurs in any law of the United States or any treaty of the United States with any nation or tribe of Indians, shall be held to mean and include not only all Indians of the full blood, but also all Indians of the mixed blood, of whatever degree, whenever such mixed-blood Indians at the time of the passage of any such law or ratification of any such treaty lived and maintained tribal relations with and were recognized as members of any such tribe of Indians by such nation or tribe which was interested in or affected by any such law or treaty, and such Indians of the mixed bloods shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges under the law the same as Indians of the full blood.

Mr. ALLISON and Mr. HIGGINS addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield to the Senator from Delaware; then I wish to make a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. President, I feel like saying a word on this subject, as it was brought to my attention in the course of an investigation which was conducted by the late Senator from Kansas, Mr. Perkins, and myself in the Indian Territory about two years ago.

We went to Muscogee, in the Creek Nation, and to Tahlequah, and the refrain of my remarks was that I wanted to find an Indian; that they were all whites, whilst all of them were so-called Indians. You could not see a yellow Indian nor a red Indian; no full-bloods were to be found anywhere about; but everybody was an Indian to take part in the property or lands owned in the Cherokee Nation or the Creek Nation, and to take part in any distribution of money to be paid by the United States for the Cherokee Strip. They were included as the beneficiaries in every thing which was to be given.

This nation is generous, and means to be generous, to the Indians, but by that, I know, the people understand and mean the Indian aborigines, not the half-bloods, not the quarter-bloods, not the eighth-bloods, not those in whom you can not observe the physical admixture—to use the old legal term of slavery days—of Indian blood. This is growing to be a vast abuse. By intermarriages you may in that way virtually, to use a phrase, eradicate Indians as Indians, and yet you will have all the Western country full of white people, but clinging to whatever is to come from the Government on the ground that they are Indians.

It seems to me one of the ways of getting rid of the Indian question is just this of intermarriage, and the gradual fading out of the Indian blood; the whole quality and character of the aborigine disappears, they lose all of the traditions of the race; there is no longer any occasion to maintain the tribal relations, and there is then every reason why they shall go and take their place as white people do everywhere. Such a sweeping amendment as this offered by the Senator from South Dakota means just the opposite of this. It would perpetuate this mischief and wrong.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on this amendment, that it is legislation of the most general character upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. Let us have that question decided.

Mr. KYLE. Is the question debatable, Mr. President?

Mr. SHERMAN and others. No.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is not debatable, but the Chair will hear the Senator, with the consent of the Senate, if he desires to make a suggestion upon the subject.

Mr. KYLE. Just a word. During the absence of the Senator from Iowa from the Chamber I explained that point somewhat fully. I have stated that the provisions of this amendment do not change existing law and are not in the line of general legislation, but merely confirm and determine what has already been the law of the United States for the past hundred years. Therefore I do not think the point of order will lie against the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order having been made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] that the amendment is general legislation upon a general appropriation bill, the Chair is compelled under the rule of the Senate to sustain the point of order.

Mr. KYLE. I shall not press the matter further, though I am very sorry indeed that my colleague has taken the position he has.

I now desire to offer an amendment which will occupy but a moment, and to which I think there will be no objection. At the end of line 16, on page 83 of the bill, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 16, on page 83, it is proposed to insert:

And provided further, That all stock cattle and horses purchased under contract or otherwise for Indians on all reservations shall be of the best grade obtainable, and all male animals shall be of thoroughbred stock.

Mr. KYLE. That merely provides that in contracts for cattle and horses to Indians good stock shall be furnished. At present horses and Indian ponies are being furnished to the Indians for drawing the plow, and the Indians are raising a breed of cattle which are utterly useless when they go to market.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. The words "full-blooded" should be used instead of "thoroughbred."

Mr. KYLE. Very well. I will modify the amendment in that way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 83, at the end of line 16, it is proposed to insert:

And provided further, That all stock cattle and horses purchased under contract or otherwise for Indians on all reservations shall be of the best grade obtainable, and all male animals shall be of full-blooded stock.

Mr. HALE. It seems to me it would be literally impossible in purchasing supplies for the Indians that they should be of full-blooded stock. I raise the point of order that the amendment is new legislation. I think the amendment ought to be beaten on its merits, but I want to dispose of it as soon as possible.

Mr. KYLE. I do not understand the criticism of the Senator.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator believe that in all the great range of purchases for Indian tribes upon reservations it would be a possibility to confine the purchase to full-blooded stock?

Mr. KYLE. Oh, no. The Senator did not understand the amendment. The ordinary herd are to be of what we call a good grade, but the male animals shall be what we call thoroughbreds or full blooded.

Mr. HALE. Would not that apply to most of the purchases of what are known as steers?

Mr. KYLE. We do not purchase steers for stock cattle for the Indians. Cows are furnished to them.

Mr. HALE. Then the amendment will simply apply to the purchases of stock and not of supplies.

Mr. KYLE. To stock cattle running upon the range.

Mr. HALE. It does not apply to the general subject of purchases for the Indian reservations for food?

Mr. KYLE. Not at all.

Mr. HALE. As the amendment was read it looked as if it applied to such purchases. Let the amendment be read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again stated.

The Secretary read the amendment proposed by Mr. KYLE as modified.

Mr. HALE. I think the words "stock cattle" there limit the operations of the amendment.

Mr. KYLE. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 72, after line 15, it is proposed to insert:

To pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Indiana Miami Indians residing in the State of Indiana or elsewhere, the sum of $48,538.38, which said sum of money was by the United States taken from their tribal funds, against their protest, and in violation of the treaty of 1854, and paid to other persons not entitled to it; which facts have been found and determined by the Court of Claims, in Congressional case No. 8255, and reported to Congress, which sums shall be immediately available: Provided, however, That before the payment of any part of said sum to said Indians there shall be deducted and paid to the attorney at record in the Court of Claims, employed by said Indians under an agreement heretofore approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the sum so approved by the Secretary and Commissioner, not exceeding 10 per cent of said amount: And provided further, That said sum shall be paid to the Indians entitled to receive the same by a special agent appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, and shall be distributed to said Indians under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. COCKRELL. On what page is that?

Mr. MANDERSON. On page 72, after line 15. I think that perhaps is the best place in the bill for it to come in, as it follows the numerous amendments submitted by the Committee on Appropriations, and is immediately before the provisions for the support of schools.

Mr. President, I offer this amendment by the warrant and under the authority of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and on the special request of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], who, unfortunately, is unable to be present.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the amendment been reported favorably by the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. MANDERSON. It has been reported favorably, and was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, but probably too late for that committee to give it consideration.

The facts in the matter are these: Many years ago the greatest tribe of Indians in this country was the Miami tribe, inhabiting parts of Ohio and Indiana. The Indiana portion of the tribe, by the treaty made with them, removed or took steps looking to the removal of the entire tribe west of the Mississippi River. There was no compulsion upon them, and that portion of the tribe remained in the State of Indiana. Afterwards they stipulated to assign or to surrender to the Government another portion of their lands and received in lieu thereof a large tract of land in the State of Kansas, where many of them live even until this day. Those who remained in the State of Indiana had a fund in the Treasury from which they received certain annuities which were paid under a treaty made to 302 members of the Miami tribe.

The 302 members were to receive these annuities, which were arranged for by a treaty made between the United States Government and the Miami tribe, and these annuities were to be paid to these 302 Indians and none others. Afterwards, without any approval by the Indians and in violation of the treaty stipulation, some 68 additional persons, half-breeds, I think, most of them, were added to this number, and money was paid to them to the extent of the amount provided for in this amendment. After some years, the matter being referred by the Indian Department to the Attorney-General, he gave it as his opinion that they were not entitled to any part of this money; that it had been paid in violation of the treaty rights of the Miami Indians. They have been trying for many years to recover this sum, and at last Congress sent them, under the Bowman Act, to the Court of Claims. I have here the finding of the Court of Claims, in which they find the facts which I have here narrated, and wind up as follows:

These 68 persons so placed upon the Indiana Miami roll in January, 1886, and the others afterwards added, were not embraced in the corrected list of 302 persons agreed upon by the Miamis of Indiana and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in June, 1854, nor were they the descendants of any of the 302 persons who alone by the terms of said treaty were to share in the annuities and other moneys of the Indiana Miamis.

The moneys so paid from 1886 to 1887 to said 68 persons, and the others afterwards added, were taken from the funds then in the possession of the United States, belonging to the Indiana Miamis, and were a part of their proportion of the installments due them under the treaties of November 23, 1854, and of June 5, 1854, and also interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum on the sum of $21,257.36, held in trust for the Miamis of Indiana under the amendment of the treaty of 1854.

The aggregate amount paid to the persons so added to the Indiana Miami roll to the period when their names were stricken from the roll under an opinion of the Attorney-General was $48,538.38.

The claim by these people was not only for this sum, which thus wrongfully had been diverted from their use, but for the interest which had accumulated since 1887 upon that amount, and the amendment which is proposed to the bill by the Senator from Indiana provided for the payment of that interest, which would be largely in excess of the principal sum. The Committee on Indian Affairs had determined that they would not establish the precedent of paying interest upon this class of claims, but that it was right and just that the finding of the Court of Claims should be carried out as to the principal. The Committee on Indian Affairs also carefully guarded the attorney's fee, limiting it to 10 per cent of the amount, which, it seems to me, is a fair compensation for this lengthy litigation in the Department and in the Court of Claims, and it also provides how the amount shall be paid, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Interior Department.

I would say that there was no dissenting voice in the Committee on Indian Affairs as to the righteousness of this amendment, and I hope it will prevail.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Nebraska please have the decision of the Court of Claims from which he has quoted printed in the RECORD, and also ask to have it printed as a separate document?

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD the finding of the Court of Claims as part of my remarks, and also that it be printed as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered in the absence of objection.

The paper referred to is as follows:

[Court of Claims. No. 9255 Congressional. The Indiana Miami Indians vs. The United States.]
FINDINGS OF FACT.

This case having been heard by the court, the court, upon the evidence and after considering the briefs and arguments of counsel on both sides, finds the facts as follows:

I.

On the 6th day of November, 1838, by treaty of that date, the Miami tribe of Indians, then living in Indiana, ceded to the United States, for a money consideration, a portion of their lands in Indiana, looking to the eventual removal of the tribe to the country west of the Mississippi River.

II.

On the 28th day of November, 1840, the Miami tribe of Indians entered into another treaty by which they ceded to the United States their remaining lands in Indiana, and the United States stipulated to assign them a large tract of country in the then Territory of Kansas, to which they agreed to remove within five years.

III.

In compliance with the treaty of 1840, most of the Miami tribe of Indians removed to Kansas in the year 1846, but a large number of the tribe had special permission under the treaties of 1838 and 1840, and joint resolutions of Congress passed in March, 1845 (6 Stat., 942), and in May, 1850 (9 Stat., 806), to remain in Indiana. They did not therefore emigrate with the tribe, but remained in Indiana and adjacent States, and the annuities due the tribe were divided; one part being distributed among the Western Miamis or those who resided in Kansas, and the other part distributed among the Miamis of Indiana.

IV.

On the 5th day of June, 1854, both branches of the Miami tribe of Indians entered into another treaty with the United States (10 Stat., 1093). In the same month and year the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in consultation with the head men of the Indiana portion of the tribe, revised and corrected the list of those remaining in Indiana and who were entitled to a distribution of the fund to be paid to the Indiana Miamis, which constituted a list of 302 persons. At the time of the ratification of said treaty (August 4, 1854) an amendment of the treaty was made for the benefit alone of the Miamis of Indiana, which amendment, after reciting the disposition to be made of that portion of the money to be paid to them, provided:

"That no persons other than those embraced in the corrected list agreed upon by the Miamis of Indiana, in the presence of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in June, 1854, comprising 302 names as Miami Indians of Indiana, and the increase of the families of the persons embraced in said corrected list shall be recipients of the payments, annuities, commutation moneys, and interest hereby stipulated to be paid to the Miami Indians of Indiana, unless other persons shall be added to said list by the consent of the said Miami Indians of Indiana, obtained in council according to the custom of Miami tribe of Indians."

V.

Under the provisions of the said treaty of 1854, payments were made annually to the Western Miamis and to the Miamis of Indiana, until 1858, when, under an act of Congress passed on the 12th day of June, of that year, the Secretary of the Interior took $15,629.27 from the funds set apart by treaty for the Indiana Miamis, without their consent and against their earnest protest, and paid the same to 68 persons, none of whom were a part of the 302 Miamis named in the amendment to the treaty of 1854, or the descendants of any of said 302 persons.

VI.

These 68 persons were then placed upon the pay roll of the Indiana Miamis (to which roll others were afterwards added) and they received additional annuities from the Indiana Miami funds, amounting to $22,890.11, until their names were stricken from said roll under an opinion of the Attorney-General dated September 20, 1867.

VII.

These 68 persons so placed upon the Indiana Miami roll in January, 1859, and the others afterwards added were not embraced in the corrected list of 302 persons agreed upon by the Miamis of Indiana and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in June, 1854, nor were they the descendants of any of the 302 persons who alone, by the terms of said treaty, were to share in the annuities and other moneys of the Indiana Miamis.

VIII.

The money so paid from 1859 to 1867 to said 68 persons, and the others afterwards added, were taken from the funds then in the possession of the United States belonging to the Indiana Miamis, and were a part of their proportion of the installments due them under the treaties of November 23, 1840, and of June 5, 1854, and also interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum on the sum of $21,257.86 held in trust for the Miamis of Indiana under the amendment of the treaty of 1854.

IX.

The aggregate amount paid to the persons so added to the Indiana Miami roll to the period when their names were stricken from the roll, under an opinion of the Attorney-General was $43,528.33.

A true copy of the findings of the court, filed February 11, 1895.

[SEAL.]

JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk, Court of Claims.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President—

Mr. PETTIGREW. If the Senator will allow me one moment I wish to have disposed of an amendment which has been considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs and about which I think there will be no discussion. I should like to offer it while the chairman of the committee is present.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Very well.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and ask to have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of page 32 it is proposed to insert:

For compensating the Indians of the Crow Creek Reservation for loss sustained by those Indians in receiving less land per capita in their diminished reservation than is received by the Indians occupying other diminished reservations, the amount to be added to the share of the permanent fund of the said Crow Creek Indians and to draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, $187,000. The Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, pay to said Indians $50,000 of said sum in cash.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will simply say that this is the last of the promises made by General Crook and the other commissioners when the Sioux treaty was signed. A bill for this purpose has passed the Senate, I think, at every session but the last during the last five years; this item has been two or three times upon appropriation bills and not agreed to by the House of Representatives. It is now recommended by the Interior Department and also by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. This amendment came to the Committee on Appropriations too late for consideration before the bill was reported. After the bill was reported my attention was called to the amendment by the Senator from South Dakota, and I addressed a communication to the Interior Department asking their views in regard to it. In reply I received this telephone message:

FEBRUARY 16, 1895.

Senator COCKRELL:

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs is reporting favorably on the amendment, and it will be up in a few minutes.

SECRETARY OF INTERIOR.

Here is the report which was sent, addressed to the Senator from South Dakota, and I ask that it may be read, and I should also like to have it printed as a separate document, so that we may have it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered in the absence of objection.

The paper referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,

Office of Indian Affairs, Washington, February 16, 1895.

SIR: I have received by your informal reference an amendment proposed to be introduced by you to the pending Indian appropriation bill as follows:

"For compensating the Indians of the Crow Creek Reservation for loss sustained by those Indians in receiving less land per capita in their diminished reservation than is received by the Indians occupying other diminished reservations, the amount to be added to the share of the permanent funds of the said Crow Creek Indians and to draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, $187,000. The Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, pay to said Indians $50,000 of said sum in cash."

You desire to know whether this Office recommends the legislation proposed.

In reply I have to state that this Office has repeatedly urged the payment of the Crow Creek Reservation Indians for loss sustained by them in receiving less land per capita in their diminished reservation, etc., as provided in the proposed amendment.

The only new feature is the proposition authorizing the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to pay $50,000 of said sum in cash to said Indians.

I see no objection to the proposed cash payment, and I recommend the adoption of the amendment as above quoted.

Very respectfully,

D. M. BROWNING, Commissioner.

Hon. R. F. PETTIGREW,

United States Senate.

(Through the Secretary of the Interior.)

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. On page 44, at the end of line 17, I move to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 44, after line 17, it is proposed to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to reimburse, out of any unexpended balance of appropriation for the support and civilization of Indians in Arizona and New Mexico for the fiscal year 1894, Capt. John L. Bullis for expenditures made by him from his own private funds for the Indian service while acting United States Indian agent at San Carlos Agency, Ariz., upon the furnishing of proper vouchers to the amount of $1,437.50.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL subsequently said: In connection with the amendment which has just been adopted at the instance of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], I move that the letters which I send to the desk may be printed as a separate document. I hope they will be printed as quickly as possible.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the Senate proceed for a few minutes to the consideration of executive business, and I am sure that there is not a Senator in the Chamber who would not vote for it if he knew the purpose I have in making this motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8479) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. On page 55, line 24, after the word "necessary," I move to insert "to be immediately available." It is an omission.

The SECRETARY. After the word "necessary," in line 24, page 55, insert "to be immediately available;" so as to read:

For the survey of the lands in the Indian Territory, $400,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. On page 47, after the word "miscellaneous" in line 3, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After the word "miscellaneous," in line 3, page 47, insert:

That the Muscogee or Creek Nation be, and hereby is, authorized to sell, transfer, and assign $600,000 of indebtedness of the United States of America, together with the interest thereon, agreed to be paid to the said nation and appropriated by an act of Congress entitled "An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muscogee Nation of Indians in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1889, to enable said nation to make a per capita payment to the Creek people, and to liquidate the Creek national indebtedness; and the principal sum, $600,000, shall be payable January 1, 1905, and the interest thereon, as in said act provided, shall be paid to the assignees of said indebtedness or their transferees: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to make such payments when due.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I desire to modify the amendment by striking out the words "and five;" so as to read "and the principal sum, $600,000, shall be payable January 1, 1900."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The amendment as modified will be agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to object to the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The amendment is offered in pursuance of an act of the council of the Creek Nation, asking that they may be allowed now to realize out of the funds which they have in the Treasury of the United States $600,000, to be distributed among their people. They say that owing to a failure of crops last year their people are in a condition where they need the money.

When the proposition was brought forward I offered a proposed amendment in the Senate, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the opinion of the Indian Office was taken on the question. I hold in my hand a letter from Assistant Secretary Sims, returning a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, stating that they would recommend the passage of the act amended as suggested. The amendment as read at the Clerk's desk is as it came from the Indian Office, suggesting that the payment should not take place earlier than 1905. I presume the idea of the Indian Office in suggesting that the period of payment should be postponed for ten years was that the debt could be sold at a higher price and the Indians could realize a larger amount of money out of it.

Submitting the matter to the consideration of some members of the Committee on Appropriations and other members of the Senate the suggestion was made that the payment should not be postponed longer than the year 1900. In compliance with that suggestion, I have proposed to amend the proposition as it was submitted by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs so that it shall be payable not earlier than 1900. The request of the Creek Nation is that they shall be allowed to take $600,000 of their own funds, of which they have between $2,000,000 and $2,500,000 in the Treasury, and distribute it among their people now at a time when they say there is great need among their people. This is the case as I understand it.

Mr. ALLEN. The amendment has not been before the Committee on Indian Affairs, I understand.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It has been before the Committee on Indian Affairs and favorably reported.

Mr. ALLEN. When did that occur?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I can not give the Senator the date, but I can send to the committee and find out.

Mr. ALLEN. However, I desire to make the objection that the amendment is general legislation proposed upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not see how a proposition of this kind can be considered general legislation. It relates only to the private affairs of the Creek Nation, and is, it seems to me, a matter of humanity, allowing those people to realize on this sum.

I will say, in further explanation to the Senator from Nebraska, as I presume he does not propose to enter a captious objection, that this is just what was done with the Cherokees a year or two ago in allowing them to realize on certain funds that the Government owed them. It is put in exactly the same condition, I understand; and it is a matter of no concern to the Government of the United States as to whether the money shall be paid to the assignees of the Creek Nation or to the nation itself. If they ought to have this money no harm could come to the Government of the United States from permitting them to have it that I can see. It is only a question of propriety as to whether the Creeks should or should not have it. I have in my hand a copy of the act of the council, properly certified, and sent by the Indian Office, declaring that their people want the money, and it seems to me they ought to be allowed to use their own funds.

Mr. ALLEN. I simply want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that less than an hour ago the then occupant of the chair held that an amendment precisely the same as this was general legislation and ruled it out. I desire to make the same point of order upon this amendment, and I call the attention of the Chair to that precedent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair in this particular case will submit the question of order to the Senate. Is the amendment submitted by the Senator from Arkansas in order? [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it. The ayes have it. The amendment is before the Senate, and the question is on agreeing to it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask to have the amendment read again. The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand that the amendment merely allows them to borrow money on the strength of the existing Government promise.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator when the principal sum will be due according to the existing law?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is payable to these people at the discretion of the Government.

Mr. CHANDLER. And the amendment fixes a date when the principal is payable?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. So much of it as these people propose to transfer—$600,000.

Mr. ALDRICH. As I understand the matter, this money is nominally in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is the fact.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a trust fund.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is a trust fund.

Mr. ALDRICH. But it is not really there, I suppose. How is it proposed to pay the $600,000?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. These people propose to assign their claim on the Government for the money and to realize the money by selling it, as the Cherokees two or three years ago sold the fund that was due them. The assignees of the Creek people will become the payees of the Government instead of the Creek people; that is all. It leaves the condition so far as the Treasury is concerned just as it is now, except that it is to be paid in five years.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will they issue bonds or certificates of indebtedness, or what?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Not at all; nothing of the kind.

Mr. ALDRICH. They must issue something. The Creek Nation must issue some kind of an obligation.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes. In the case of the Cherokees certificates of indebtedness were issued by the Government.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator in what form these Indians have their funds.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is deposited to their credit in the Treasury.

Mr. ALLEN. In money?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is money due them, upon which the Government is paying them interest.

Mr. ALLEN. Why authorize them to make a loan? Why not authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay over to them a certain amount?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. From the fact that the money is not in the Treasury. There has been difficulty in paying the current expenses of the Government, and to make such an appropriation would simply be to send the Creeks to the Treasury, where the appropriation could not be paid. They have not asked that the money shall be paid to them, but simply ask that they may be allowed to negotiate a part of the debt that is due to them from the Government and realize on it.

Mr. ALLEN. What rate of interest will they have to pay?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think the Government pays 5 per cent on this fund.

Mr. ALLEN. But what rate of interest will the Indians have to pay?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. They will pay no interest. They will simply assign this part of the fund and realize the money for it.

Mr. ALLEN. What does the Senator mean, then, by saying that they will negotiate the debt that is due to them?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Government owes these people two and a half million dollars. They want an act of Congress to authorize them to assign $600,000 of their claim to certain assignees, and that the Government shall pay that $600,000 to their assignees instead of to them. The assignees will pay them the money.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator on what terms the Indians will make this assignment. Is there any arrangement, any contract, or anything by which certain parties are to have the assignment made to them?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. They have had no authority to make any such arrangement, but they are asking for authority to make it now. The Cherokees disposed of theirs at par, as I remember. I do not think there is any doubt that the Creek Nation sufficiently understand their interests not to sell this debt for anything less than par. I have no idea that there will be any difficulty about that.

Mr. ALLEN. I think there ought to be some safeguards placed about this matter.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no objection to the words being put in that they shall not be sold at less than par.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not see why the Government should not be required to pay over a specific sum of money, making an appropriation to cover it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The chief difficulty is that it has not the money.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that we are issuing bonds at any time and there is not the slightest trouble about it. Bonds have been issued within the last month, and there will not be the slightest difficulty about issuing bonds whenever and as often as there may seem to be a demand for them. If we can issue bonds and can authorize J. Pierpont Morgan and his associates in New York to make $10,000,000 in the course of a day or two out of them, it strikes me that we ought to be able to issue bonds enough to permit these Indians to have the money direct from the Treasury without being compelled to go into the market and discount their paper and pay a premium, of course, to the white men.

The Indian is the legitimate subject of prey. If he can escape from the Congress of the United States he ought to consider himself very fortunate indeed. The Indian tribe that can run the gantlet of both branches of Congress and come out with anything in their pockets are a very fortunate set of men indeed. I believe there ought to be some guard placed around this provision. Here this paper is to go out to be placed in the hands of these Indians at a discount. I do not know whether there is any gentleman down in that part of the country with surplus money who wants to invest in this credit or not. There ought to be safeguards at least placed around the amendment by which the Indians would not be permitted to sell the credit for less than par, because I understand the distinguished Senator from Arkansas to state that the rate of interest which the Government pays is 5 per cent. If the bonds of this nation are as good to-day as they were fifteen or twenty days ago there is a lot of money to be made in the transaction. Why does not the distinguished Senator from Arkansas hedge in the right of these Indians by his amendment?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suggest that the words "at not less than par" shall be inserted after the word "assign," in the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be modified at the request of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas why we can not authorize the payment of this money. He says we have no money in the Treasury. This is a small sum for this nation. Why, for instance, can we not authorize the issuance of bonds at the rate of 3½ per cent for the purpose of making good this payment to these Indians? Does that meet the approval of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The suggestion I have made in the amendment is in compliance with the request of the council of the Creek Nation. They state that their people need this money. If we should undertake to issue a bond here for any purpose the Senator from Nebraska knows perfectly well the sort of debate it would provoke, and the impossibility of doing anything with it. After submitting their request to the executive department, I submitted the proposition which comes from the Indian Office, guarded, it seems to me, in every reasonable way, that they may be allowed to assign their claim against the Government and realize the money on it.

Mr. BATE. I did not hear the reasons given. I should like to have the Senator from Arkansas state the necessity which requires this assignment to be made.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Cherokee council adopted an act, which I hold in my hand, in which they say that owing to the failure of crops in their country last year their people need the immediate use of $600,000 out of the two and a half million dollars which they have to their credit in the Treasury of the United States; that they wish to distribute it among their people; and that they owe certain debts upon which they are paying interest, and which they would like to pay with this money. The request of the council was sent here; it was submitted to the Indian Office; it was favorably reported on by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and by the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, and it seems to me it is regular in every way. The proposition is simply to allow these Indians to use their own money in their own way for their own benefit.

Mr. BATE. Not for the purpose of speculation?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Not at all.

Mr. BATE. Nor for anyone to make money out of it?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Not at all. It is to be distributed per capita.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Arkansas says any attempt to issue bonds would provoke a discussion in this Chamber which would be endless. It may be true that it would provoke discussion, as it has provoked discussion in days past. I suppose if we are to put on a loose-jointed amendment to this bill, permitting these Indians to sell their credit, which is at par, or more than par according to the present financial status of bonds and stocks, and a lot of white men down in that country or in some other portion of the country get hold of the Indians and rob them of their money, as doubtless they will do, no one is to protest or to indulge in any discussion on that subject. The Indian is the legitimate prey of whoever may deal with him. In my judgment it would be much better for us even to have some lengthy discussion here on the subject of the issuance of bonds or an attempt to borrow money in some form and pay off a portion of this indebtedness, than to turn these defenseless wards of the nation over to the harpy hands of those who have no interest in them whatever, except to take from them that which they have.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the United States owe the Creek Nation any money they ought to pay it; that is, if the Creek Nation desire to be paid any portion of it, and the Government ought to pay it directly and not indirectly. I am afraid of the successive steps in regard to this matter. I remember that we became obligated in some form to the Cherokee Nation a few years ago to the extent of six or seven million dollars. The first thing anybody knew an amendment was placed upon an appropriation bill by which Government 4 per cent bonds were issued to parties who had obtained the loan or the indebtedness in some form or other. Four per cent bonds of the United States were issued at par.

This amendment proposes to continue a 5 per cent indebtedness of the United States at not less than par. There has been much criticism in this Chamber, and very properly, that a sale of United States bonds was made upon a 3½ per cent basis. This proposes to issue bonds substantially or certificates of indebtedness of the United States upon a 5 per cent basis for somebody's benefit.

I agree with much that has been said by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] on this subject. If we are to have a twenty-two-million-dollar surplus, as the Secretary of the Treasury suggests that we shall have in the next fiscal year, and if we owe the Creek Nation $600,000, let us make an appropriation and pay them, and not oblige the Creek Nation to go into the market and borrow money upon their certificates of indebtedness, which after a while will be certain to be changed by some act of Congress into a certificate of indebtedness or bonds of the United States for the benefit of third parties and not for the benefit of the Indians themselves. I ask the Senator from Arkansas, if we are to pay these people, to make an appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States and pay them directly, and not keep this thing going for an indefinite length of time for the benefit of third parties.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to deal justly with this question. The Government owes these Indians $600,000. The Senator from Arkansas proposes that it shall be payable in the year 1900 at the existing rate of interest that has been promised, which he says is 5 per cent.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is my impression.

Mr. CHANDLER. Thereupon the Indians propose to borrow that money on the strength of this Government promise. It will be a six-hundred-thousand-dollar 5 per cent Government loan, payable in 1900. In answer to the remarks of the Senator from Rhode Island, the suggestion is that it is not to be presumed that the Indians will give away these bonds or sell them for any less than they are worth.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator is familiar with the Cherokee transaction, by which certain parties in New York bought the indebtedness and afterwards secured bonds of the United States, substantially bonds of the United States, at par, I wish he would state that to the Senate in order that we may know what is likely to happen in this case.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think in that case the promises were sold at par. I think it was 4 per cent bonds which were sold at par, or possibly a little above par.

Mr. ALDRICH. The parties who bought the loan secured United States 4 per cent bonds at par; but what did they pay the Cherokee Nation for those certificates?

Mr. CHANDLER. They paid the Cherokee Nation, I have no doubt, par for the bonds. The only question would be whether—

Mr. ALDRICH. My impression is that they did not pay them par. I have some knowledge of the transaction.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator appealed to my knowledge of the transaction and I gave it to him; and now he wishes to substitute his own for mine, to which, of course, there can be no objection. As I remember, the Indians in that case received par for a 4 per cent loan. Now, in this case, here is a 5 per cent six-hundred-thousand-dollar loan or promise to pay by the United States, and it is made payable in 1900. Though I think there is some danger in the subject, as the Senator from Rhode Island seems to think, I take it for granted that the Indians will get the full value of that promise. They are not going, so far as we have any reason to believe (if they are the Senator from Arkansas will tell us of it), to negotiate the $600,000 through the same syndicate which bought the Government loan; and so far as I am aware the name of Mr. Francis Lynde Stetson has not been and will not be connected with this transaction.

Because the Government loan has been disposed of in this way by the authorities controlling the Government of the United States, it does not follow that the same improvident parties will negotiate this loan for these Indians. It is fair to presume that these Indians will, in selling this six-hundred-thousand-dollar 5 per cent loan of the United States, get the largest price for it; that they will sell it prudently and judiciously; and in all probability they will call for bids and get the highest market value. I admit, in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island, that if there is any danger that these Creek Indians are not going to manage their business any better than the Treasury Department manages its business we ought not to grant this authority. But assuming that they know what they are about, and if they are going to borrow money on these securities that they will get the highest price for them, I do not see any particular harm in giving them the opportunity.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to interrupt him just there? I wish he would explain the matter in regard to the Cherokees a little more fully. I have heard it stated (I do not know whether it is true or not) that the Cherokees in the seven-million-dollar loan did not realize over about 75 per cent of it themselves.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am confident that that is a mistake. The bonds were negotiated through R. T. Wilson & Co., and I am quite certain they received par for the bonds. I am sure they did.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not think so.

Mr. KYLE. In the first instance they contracted to pay a certain percentage of the amount to some attorneys, I believe.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me, that is another thing altogether. I have a pamphlet in my hand which shows that it cost the Chickasaw and Choctaw Indians $692,000 for counsel fees; but afterwards, when they undertook to negotiate in the market the Government loan, they got par, and I am inclined to think a little more, as I have no doubt these Indians will get par or more for this loan.

Mr. KYLE. May I ask the Senator who are of counsel in this case?

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall have to refer the Senator to the Senator from Arkansas, who offered this amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator from South Dakota doubtless knows that the complaint which was made here of a large fee being paid to certain Chickasaws and Choctaws for a prosecution of a claim here is what was alluded to. It has no relation to the negotiation of the Creek loan, and I have no idea that there are any attorneys connected with this transaction. I have a copy of the act of the Creek council, in which they make the statement I have just given. If there are any attorneys connected with it, or if there is anything connected with it that is not perfectly straight, I do not know. I do believe that those people ask for this money because their people need it. I have stated the facts fairly to the Senate. If Senators are not willing to let these people do what they please with their own money and think they in their wisdom can manage it better I am perfectly willing for the Senate to take action as it chooses. I have stated all I know about it, and am perfectly willing for the Senate to dispose of the amendment in whatever way it chooses. I am disposed myself to carry out what seems to be the request and wish of the constituted authorities of the Creek Nation. They are an intelligent people, capable of taking care of their own business, and any man who supposes that they can be hoodwinked underestimates the intelligence of the Creek Nation.

Mr. ALDRICH. The United States are paying 5 per cent upon this trust fund, I take it, because the Creek Nation is a ward of the United States and for no other reason. Certainly the United States could borrow money, even in the present condition of credit, at less than 5 per cent interest. Whenever we stop paying 5 per cent upon this loan for the benefit of the Creek Nation I do not see any reason why we should continue to pay it for the benefit of third parties who may buy the certificates, because if we have no surplus money in the Treasury the Government of the United States can certainly borrow money at less than 5 per cent even on a loan continuing to the year 1900. I think it is quite time we should stop this kind of transactions. I will move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, so that this shall be made an appropriation of $600,000 from the Treasury. I am quite willing to vote for it in that way, but I am not willing to vote for the amendment as it stands.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Does the Senator reflect that we may be depriving these people of the use of this money by his amendment? If this money is appropriated and there is no money in the Treasury to pay it out, how can the Creeks get their money?

Mr. ALDRICH. But there is money in the Treasury to pay it, and there will always be money in the Treasury to pay it. Mr. Cleveland says we have a "comfortable surplus" of $63,000,000, and the Secretary of the Treasury said the other day we had $95,000,000 surplus. I see no reason why we should not pay the $600,000.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Indians would rather have the money if they could get it; but I should regret very much to see such action taken here as would prevent these people from getting the money at a time when they are very much in need of it.

Mr. ALDRICH. We ought either to pay the money or authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to borrow it. We ought to pay it directly out of the Treasury, because the money is there, or else let the Secretary of the Treasury borrow it at less than 5 per cent on the credit of the United States and pay these people.

Mr. MORGAN. When I was a boy I lived for several years among this Indian tribe. I know a good deal of their habits at that time and I think I know a good deal about them now. At that time they were very fond of silver money, silver half dollars. They sold one of the most beautiful countries in the world for silver half dollars. I have seen tables 10 feet long, 3½ feet across, stacked up five dollars deep with silver half dollars, as much as a table could hold, in payment to these Indians for their reservations in Alabama. They could use silver half dollars in the Creek country without any sort of difficulty at all. They could buy all the corn and grain and everything that they want, meat and what not, with silver half dollars. If the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island should prevail I shall offer an additional amendment that a part of the seigniorage of silver in the Treasury shall be coined for the benefit and advantage of these people into silver half dollars and that that money shall be paid in that way to them. They would prize it very much indeed.

Mr. TELLER. They would rather have it than any other money.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know but that I am primitive enough and Indian enough in my instincts and tastes to applaud them for their preference for that kind of money. It is good legal tender, you know, for $5 in a sum, and it ought to be legal tender for any amount of money under our system of laws. But it is good for $5. We have the surplus bullion lying there, and if these Indians are really in want of food, as I have no doubt many of them are, we have the finest opportunity in the world, without giving offense to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], a doctrinaire upon this subject, by coining a little of the silver in the Treasury to pay this debt to the amount of five or six hundred thousand dollars. I do not think we will break Wall street by doing that, or that we would lower the standard of our credit in Wall street or in London. I know we would not lower it in the Indian country, inasmuch as the money is going there to be spent, or ought to go there to be spent, and ought not to go into the hands of speculators who will carry it into Wall street and presently come back upon us with a gold demand for it. I think we had better just resolve this question now by the expedient suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island and my amendment to it, which as a bimetalist I am sure he would be very glad to accept.

Mr. ALDRICH. It makes no difference to me in what money they are paid. I should dislike to make the Creek Nation accept money which the Senator from Alabama would not accept himself.

Mr. MORGAN. I would accept it. I wish I could have a million dollars of it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not think there ought to be any discrimination as to the kind of money in which this appropriation shall be paid.

Mr. MORGAN. More than that, if I had a debt against the Senator from Rhode Island and if he were to come and tender me these silver half dollars I would be obliged to accept them.

Mr. ALDRICH. He would be very wise to accept them.

Mr. MORGAN. I would probably be very wise also, but I would be patriotic.

Mr. CHANDLER. Would the Senator from Alabama say if the $600,000 was due him from the Government he would take it in silver half dollars?

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, yes; very cheerfully.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the Creek Nation a portion of the fund now held by the United States in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muscogee Nation of Indians in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1889, $600,000.

Mr. CAILL. Mr. President, I should be very glad to vote for this amendment if the matter had undergone careful consideration. It seems to me that we are the guardians of the Indians. They are our wards, and some supervision should be had over them. If this amendment could pass without any consideration, with such amendments as have been placed upon it, I should not be disposed to say anything in regard to it. It seems to me, however, that in all cases of appropriations for the Indian Department the question should be considered as to the capacity of the Indians to take care of themselves, as to the character of the payment to be made and the necessity for it, whether or not a trust fund should be continued, as has been the policy of the Government always, and annuities paid, or whether the whole amount of money should be distributed to them; whether the money paid to them should go into the hands of liquor dealers, speculators, and others of that class of people. These are questions which ought to be investigated and carefully considered.

It seems to me the question is, Has that been done in this case? If it has been, and these Indians are entirely capable of taking care of themselves, if it is time to abandon the policy of holding them as wards, if it is time to pay to them whatever the Government owes to them, then it is proper that this amendment should pass; but otherwise it is not.

Mr. KYLE. The Senator who has charge of the bill seems to oppose the amendment, and I think, therefore, the Senator from Arkansas should withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. [Putting the question.] The 'ayes' appear to have it.

Mr. KYLE. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator from South Dakota will withdraw the call for the yeas and nays, and let my amendment be adopted.

Mr. QUAY. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as proposed to be amended will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the Creek Nation a portion of the fund now held by the United States, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muscogee Nation of Indians in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1889, §600,000.

Mr. KYLE. I called for the yeas and nays on a misunderstanding. I thought we were voting on the proposition of the Senator from Arkansas, and therefore I withdraw my demand for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that upon the viva voce vote the ayes have it; and therefore the amendment to the amendment is agreed to. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas as amended on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not think there is any part of my amendment left. The amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island was substituted for my amendment, as I understand.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is right.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator from Rhode Island can take charge of the amendment now and put it in any shape he chooses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas as amended on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to amend the amendment as adopted by the Senate—

Mr. ALDRICH. Too late.

Mr. MORGAN. By adding this proviso:

Provided, That for this purpose the Secretary of the Treasury shall coin the silver bullion in the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can not amend the amendment now, as it has already been adopted by the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. At the time I suggested my amendment it would have been an amendment in the third degree, and therefore out of order.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Alabama that he add a proviso at the end of the bill making all the appropriations in the bill payable in silver half dollars.

Mr. MORGAN. I will accept the Senator's suggestion whenever he is ready to vote for it. I know he is not.

Mr. TELLER. I will enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. It will be perfectly in order for the Senator from Alabama to move to add his amendment to the clause, as the committee amendments are finished. The Senator simply moves to add another paragraph, a very vicious paragraph, I think, but still it is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that there is no difficulty in the Senator from Alabama moving to add the words to the paragraph which has just been adopted.

Mr. TELLER. Then I will withdraw my motion to reconsider.

Mr. MORGAN. I will move to add these words:

And the same shall be paid from the silver coin in the Treasury.

I see that the Chair does not comprehend the point I made about this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the Senator can move to add anything to any portion of the bill which does not conflict with the action of the Senate already taken.

Mr. ALDRICH. I make the point of order on the amendment that it is general legislation and changes existing law.

Mr. MORGAN. I thought the Senator from Rhode Island probably would reverse his wheel before we got very far into this subject. The amendment I propose is not any more general legislation than that which the Senate has just put on the bill, and whenever there is general legislation put on the bill I have a right to move to amend that as much as I have to move to amend special legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is made on the amendment, and the Chair will submit the point to the Senate, as he did on the former occasion.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama be read.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like first to hear the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas as amended read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment as adopted.

The Secretary read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the Creek Nation a portion of the fund now held by the United States, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muscogee Nation of Indians in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1889, §600,000.

Mr. MORGAN. That is the amendment as it has been amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the amendment as adopted by the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to add these words:

And the same shall be paid in silver coin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment just adopted, it is proposed to add:

And the same shall be paid in silver coin.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will withdraw my point of order, and move to amend the amendment by adding:

Or in such other lawful money of the United States as said Creek Nation shall desire.

Mr. HILL. We ought not to make any distinction in the statutes we pass between the different forms of currency of the United States. It strikes me that the amendment as proposed makes such a discrimination.

Mr. KYLE. The Indians are all silver men and they will be glad to get silver.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama as amended on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island. [Putting the question.] The yeas appear to have it.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the vote be again taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again put the question on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama as amended on motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Let the amendment be read as it stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the amendment just adopted the following:

And the same shall be paid in silver coin, or such other lawful money of the United States as the Creek Nation shall desire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment as amended. [Putting the question.] The yeas seem to have it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for a division.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 13, noes 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No quorum has voted. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll; and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Davis,	Hunton,	Power,
Allison,	Dixon,	Jones of Ark.	Pugh,
Bate,	Faulkner,	Kyle,	Quay,
Berry,	Frye,	Lindsay,	Ransom,
Blackburn,	Gallinger,	Lodge,	Roach,
Blanchard,	George,	McLaurin,	Sherman,
Burrows,	Gordon,	Manderson,	Smith,
Caffery,	Gorman,	Mantle,	Squire,
Call,	Gray,	Michell of Oreg.	Teller,
Chandler,	Hale,	Morgan,	Vest,
Clark,	Hansbrough,	Morrill,	Vilas,
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Peffer,	Washburn,
Coke,	Higgins,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott,
Daniel,	Hill,	Platt,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama as amended on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the vote be taken viva voce again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the demand for the division withdrawn by the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama as amended on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I now offer an amendment to be inserted on page 72, after line 15. I will state in a word the substance of the amendment. It is a proposition to allow the loyal Creek Indians to bring suit against the United States and against their own nation for the value of certain property taken from them during the late war. A considerable number of Creek Indians enlisted in the Federal Army and others became refugees from the Creek country. In 1866 the Government of the United States made a treaty with them, in which the Government agreed to ascertain the value of the property taken from them, and to pay them certain sums of money. The language of the treaty has been construed by the Government, I believe, to limit this liability to $100,000. The value of the property taken from these Indians was ascertained by an agent of the Government to be somewhere near $2,000,000. One hundred thousand dollars was paid upon that claim.

The Creek Indians contend that the Government is liable, or, if the Government is not liable, the Creek Nation is liable to them for their property taken during the war. This amendment is simply a proposition to authorize these people to bring a suit against the Government and against their own nation to set up and assert their claims in court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 15, on page 72, it is proposed to insert:

To authorize the loyal Creek Indians, Indian Territory, to bring suit in the Court of Claims for damages committed upon their property.

That the loyal Creek Indians now residing in the Indian Territory may, through and in the name of their duly selected and consolidated delegates and agents, as shown by the records of the Interior Department, institute, within ninety days after the passage of this act, but not thereafter, against the United States and the Muscogee (Creek) Nation of Indians, in the Court of Claims and prosecute to final decision any suit that may be necessary to settle their claim for property taken and lost, as provided by the eighteenth article of the treaty between the United States and the Creek and Seminole tribes of Indians, proclaimed August 28, 1856, and as provided in the third and fourth articles of the treaty between the United States and said Creek Indians, proclaimed the 11th of August, 1866, and upon the awards made in pursuance to said treaties by the agents of the United States and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 2. That such suit shall be by petition in the nature of a bill in equity, and shall be conducted and determined in all respects according to the rules and principles of equity practice and jurisprudence in the other courts of the United States; and for the purposes of this act the Court of Claims is hereby invested with the jurisdiction and powers exercised by courts of equity so far as may be necessary to give full relief in such suit; and it may consider all questions involved de novo, and pass upon the same as original questions under the several treaties aforesaid, or acts of Congress, irrespective of any award or awards heretofore made, regardless of any acts or decisions of any Department of the Government affecting the claim or claims sued on; and shall pass upon all claims, or cross claims, or counter claims proposed or asserted by either party, so as to adjudicate all matters of dispute arising therein completely, and do what justice and equity require as between the parties: Provided, That no allowance shall be made for interest, and nothing in this act shall be construed as a confession of any indebtedness on the part of the United States for or on account of such claim or claims. All papers and records in any Executive Department of the Government, as well as any that are before Congress, touching or bearing upon such claim or claims, may be filed in said court, and shall be given such consideration and weight by the court as in its judgment they may be entitled to in such suit; and in addition thereto the parties may take other testimony they may desire under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the court. Notice of such suit shall be executed by delivery of a true copy thereof with a copy of the petition, to the Attorney-General and to the principal chief of the Muscogee (Creek) Nation of Indians, whose duty it shall be, respectively for and in behalf of the United States and said nation, to demur to or answer the petition therein within thirty days after the service of such process upon them, unless the court shall, for good cause shown, grant further time for filing the same; and such suit when ready for hearing shall be advanced on the docket, and either party may take an appeal from the final decree in such cause to the Supreme Court of the United States within sixty days after the rendition of such decree, and the Supreme Court is hereby vested with full jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit on appeal in the same manner and with the same effect as in cases of appeal in equity causes to that court from other courts of the United States, and such cause on appeal shall be advanced on the docket of the Supreme Court.

SEC. 3. That should judgment be rendered in favor of the petitioners upon the trial of the cause provided for in this act, the court shall fix the compensation for the attorney of record for his services in the prosecution of said suit, not exceeding 10 per cent of such judgment, which shall be a part of the judgment of the court.

Mr. COCKRELL. That being too important an amendment to be considered now, I make the point of order that it is legislation pure and simple.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is obnoxious to the fourth clause of the sixteenth rule respecting appropriation bills, and therefore not in order.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move, on page 72, after line 15, to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The SECRETARY. After line 15, on page 72, it is proposed to insert:

That section 2130 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act of July 23, 1892 (27 Statutes, 290), be, and the same is hereby, extended over and made applicable to the town and town site of Miami, in the Indian Territory; and the United States courts of said Territory shall have full jurisdiction thereof.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The amendment is suggested by the Indian Office, and the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs states—I do not know how it can be true—as follows:

At the informal suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, I have the honor to report that in view of the numerous statements contained in the correspondence of this office with parties in the Indian Territory, to the effect that whisky and other intoxicating beverages are freely used on the town site of Miami, in the Indian Territory, I deem it desirable that the following, which it is proposed to add as an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, now pending in the Senate, should be adopted:

Then follows the amendment which has just been read at the desk. The Commissioner continues:

The fact that so much whisky is introduced upon this town site has made it easy for the Indians of the Quapaw Agency to obtain intoxicating beverages, which it is very desirable they should be protected against.

I have the honor to recommend that a copy of this report be transmitted to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate for his information, with the request that the proposed amendment be incorporated in the bill.

Mr. PLATT. The reason for that amendment is this: We passed an act which enabled some parties to acquire title to certain lands in the Quapaw Agency for town-site purposes. It is supposed that thereby we took that land out from the Indian country. It has been so decided by a judge in Kansas. I think it is very doubtful whether we did or not, but since that decision, everybody who so desires goes there and sells liquor at will.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. At any rate, if the impression of the Senator from Connecticut and my impression is correct, that the law is still in force in the Miami Township, it can do no harm to pass this amendment and declare that such is the law, as it has been the law all along.

Mr. PLATT. None at all.

Mr. CALL. I have no objection to the amendment, but it seems to me that it ought to be in different form. This way of extending a statute by reference to it, without enacting the words of the statute, it occurs to me is a very bad practice. We have to go back and examine the statute referred to to find out what it is. It is much better to put it in terms in the amendment itself; but I shall make no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. On page 7 of the bill, I move to strike out all after line 16 down to the end of line 5, on page 8.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 16, on page 7, it is proposed to strike out the following:

For pay of one superintendent of Indian schools, $3,000.

For pay of one secretary to the superintendent of Indian schools, to be employed by him, $1,000.

For necessary traveling expenses of one superintendent of Indian schools, and his secretary when necessary, including telegraphing and incidental expenses of inspection and investigation, $1,500: Provided, That he shall be allowed $3 per day for traveling expenses when actually on duty in the field, exclusive of cost of transportation and sleeping-car fare: And provided, That he shall perform such other duties as may be imposed upon him by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have no knowledge or information as to what person holds the position of superintendent of Indian schools at this time or to what political party he belongs. I am therefore innocent of any personality in the matter; but I have been of the opinion for some years that this position was entirely unnecessary, and I know that the purposes for which it was originally created have been accomplished or abandoned.

Now, to show the facility with which these offices are multiplied by acts of Congress, I call the attention of the Senate to the clause in the Indian appropriation act of 1882, which created this office. The Senate will see that it was created for specific purposes only:

The President is authorized to appoint a person to inspect all Indian schools, who is hereby required to report a plan for carrying into effect, in the most economical and efficient manner, all existing treaty stipulations for the education of Indians, with careful estimates of the cost thereof; also a plan and estimates for educating all Indian youths for whom no such provision now exists, and estimates of what sums can be saved from existing expenditures for Indian support by the adoption of such plan, whose compensation shall not exceed $3,000, which sum is hereby appropriated for that purpose, and also a further sum of $1,500 for his necessary traveling expenses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Missouri that the amendment submitted by him is not in order as in Committee of the Whole. It would be in order in the Senate, as the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, has already adopted an amendment to the paragraph.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be considered as open.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the paragraph as amended will be considered as open. The Chair hears no objection, and that is the order.

Mr. VEST. It is very evident that the purposes for which the office was created have either been accomplished or abandoned. This officer is not now required to report any plan for the education of Indian children, and he is simply and purely an inspector. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs already has five inspectors who can go to the Indian schools, and it is within my personal knowledge, for I was for some years a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, that those inspectors perform the duties of going to the Indian schools and making a report in regard to their condition. It will be seen by subsequent statutes that all pretense that this officer is anything else than an ordinary inspector has been abandoned. It will be found that in 1886, four years after the position was created, the inspector was simply regarded as an ordinary inspector, and received $4,000, as was provided in that law, and $1,000 for his traveling expenses. In 1890 it was reduced to $3,000, and $1,500 for traveling expenses.

Now, this officer is, to a large extent, independent of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. He is at the head of a minor bureau. I see by the amendments that he is to have a secretary, and the secretary's expenses are to be paid in going around through the country, together with the inspector. Why can not the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who has absolute control of all Indian matters, detail an inspector or send one of his five inspectors to investigate these schools? Or, if it is necessary, give him another inspector, so as to make the number six. Why should we have a superintendent of Indian schools under a Commissioner of Indian Affairs, an imperium in imperio, with additional expense, and from year to year with increasing cost? There is no necessity, in my judgment, for any such position, and I therefore make this motion.

Mr. PLATT. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. I regard the office of superintendent of Indian schools as a very important office. I think if the Senator from Missouri will take the report of the superintendent of Indian schools and read it he will be satisfied that it is not a sinecure by any means and that it is not an unimportant work which he is doing.

With regard to the secretary, I will state that it was appropriated for in the bill last year, but for some reason it was left out in the other House. The committee has simply restored it. It is not the creation of a new office at all. It is an office that existed last year. I do not wish to take up time in discussing the matter, but if any Senator will take the report of the superintendent of Indian schools and read it, I think he will be entirely satisfied that that officer is doing good work.

The Senator from Missouri said he does not know who the official is. The office was formerly held by Mr. Dorchester, but upon the incoming of the present Administration a gentleman by the name of Heilman, from Indiana, I believe, was appointed. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] assured me at the time of his appointment that Mr. Heilman was perhaps as good a man for the place as could be found in the United States. All that I know of his work since that time justifies what the Senator from Indiana said with reference to him.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Connecticut tell us why an inspector could not perform those duties?

Mr. PLATT. Because the superintendent has the general supervision of the entire matter of education at the Indian schools of the country, and an inspector can not do it. An inspector can be sent here or there upon special work, but the superintendent is given a higher duty than any inspector is called upon to perform.

Mr. VEST. The act which created the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as will be found by reference to the Revised Statutes, expressly gives the Commissioner of Indian Affairs control and supervision of all matters affecting the Indians, including education. As I have shown here the office of superintendent of Indian schools was originally created for a specific purpose, and that purpose has either been accomplished or abandoned. This is nothing but an inspectorship with increased salary, and now he is furnished with a secretary.

I have read those reports. I know Mr. Dorchester's reports. They were adopted by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and then the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs was incorporated in the report of the Secretary of the Interior and transmitted by the President to Congress. But that does not at all affect what I have said, to the effect that this is simply an inspectorship, with certain duties put upon the inspector by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and not by the statute. It is now provided by the amendment, as it was in 1890 and 1886, that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall assign such duties to this officer, the superintendent of Indian schools, as he sees proper. He does the same thing as to other inspectors. It is an entirely unnecessary office.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. JAMES KERR, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 305) granting a pension to Annie M. Greene;

A bill (S. 684) for the relief of Mrs. Evalyn N. Van Vliet;

A bill (S. 2783) to postpone the enforcement of the act of August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea;" and

A bill (H. R. 6323) to amend the Articles for the Government of the Navy relative to punishment on conviction by court-martial.

SURVEYOR OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 444) making the surveyor of the District of Columbia a salaried officer, and to provide for more efficient service in the surveyor's office, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House and agree to the same with the following amendments:

In line 5 of section 1, page 1, after the words "shall be," insert "appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for a term of four years, unless sooner removed for cause, and shall be;" and the Senate agree to the same.

In line 6 of section 1, page 1, after the word "the" where it first occurs in said line, insert "said;" and the Senate agree to the same.

In lines 6 and 7 of section 1, page 1, strike out "of the District of Columbia;" and the Senate agree to the same.

In line 4 of section 2, page 2, after the words "per annum," insert "and such employees as may in the judgment of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be required for the surveyor's office and operations, at an aggregate expense of not exceeding $4,000 in any one year." Amend the proposed amendment by striking out "$4,000" and insert "$5,200" in lieu thereof; and the Senate agree to the same.

In section 2, page 2, strike out all after the words "per annum," in line 6, down to and including line 13; and the Senate agree to the same.

In line 3 of section 4, page 2, strike out the word "cities" and insert in lieu thereof the word "city;" and the Senate agree to the same.

In line 4 of section 4, page 2, strike out the words "and Georgetown;" and the Senate agree to the same.

In line 5 of section 4, page 2, strike out "cities" and insert in lieu thereof the word "city;" and the Senate agree to the same.

In line 11 of section 5, page 3, after the word "Columbia," insert "and all records, plats, plans, and other papers or documents now existing or hereafter made or secured by the office of the said surveyor shall be delivered by each surveyor to his successor in office." Amend by inserting after the word "office," "and no plat or survey of land shall be recorded in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia except it be certified to as correct by the surveyor of the said District;" and the Senate agree to the same.

In section 3, page 3, strike out all after the word "laws," in line 1, down to and including line 4, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed;" and the Senate agree to the same.

REDFIELD PROCTOR,

CHAS. J. FAULKNER,

H. C. HANSBROUGH,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. E. COBB,

G. W. COOPER,

J. A. T. HULL,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust we shall have some explanation of the conference report. I should judge from hearing the report read that there was a large increase of salaries to employees of the District of Columbia. We ought to have some explanation of it.

Mr. PROCTOR. The important amendment agreed to is in section 3. The bill as it passed the Senate provided for a surveyor at a salary of $3,000, an assistant surveyor at a salary of $1,800, and a draftsman, a computer, a clerk, two rod men, two chain men, aggregating, besides the salaries of the surveyor and the assistant surveyor, $7,340. The other House struck out all of those special officials except the surveyor and assistant, and inserted in lieu thereof a provision authorizing the Commissioners to employ necessary assistants outside of the first two officers at an expense of not exceeding $4,000 in place of the $7,340 that was in the bill as it passed the Senate.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask if we have made provision for the payment of those officers for the current fiscal year.

Mr. PROCTOR. No provision has been made. It was my purpose to ask that an amendment be made to the legislative bill, providing the proposed act became a law in season. If not, of course it will be a deficiency. The fees, according to the statement of the Commissioners, and I have no doubt it is correct, will considerably more than pay the expenses of the officials.

Mr. GORMAN. Will the fees be applicable without some legislation, I ask the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. PROCTOR. The fees are not applicable without legislation.

Mr. GORMAN. I will say to the Senator that the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill where these items would probably go is already pending in the Senate. The appropriation bill has reached a stage where it would be impossible, in my judgment, to put on it a provision of this kind. Therefore, I suggest to the Senator whether it is not wise for him to let the report be printed and see if we can not come to an agreement to insert a provision in this bill as to the pay of these officers. It would require a very radical change of existing law to make provision for their compensation during the next fiscal year, and it ought not to be mixed up with the sundry civil or any other bill except the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. PROCTOR. Providing that the fees may be used for this purpose?

Mr. GORMAN. During the next fiscal year.

Mr. COCKRELL. Just make an ordinary appropriation for it, like the others.

Mr. PROCTOR. The sum, as the report now stands, is precisely $10,000—$4,800 for the surveyor and his assistant, and $5,200 for such other assistants as the Commissioners may think necessary.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest that the Senator, as was suggested yesterday about the conference report on the District of Columbia bill, have the report printed, and we can take it up Monday.

Mr. PROCTOR. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection it will be so ordered.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE-COMMERCE ACT.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I now move that the pending appropriation bill be laid aside informally and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7273) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the motion. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. BUTLER. And that the regular order be informally laid aside.

Mr. ALDRICH. That can not be done.

Mr. FRYE. That would require unanimous consent.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is not in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has stated the parliamentary motion.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina that his motion in effect is to proceed to the consideration of a bill. I am inclined to think that it would be wiser policy for him to wait until the Indian appropriation bill shall be passed, if it is ever passed, which I doubt; but if ever, that he make his motion when that bill is passed.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President—

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order that the motion is not debatable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I move to strike out the last clause in the bill pending before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator that a motion is pending.

Mr. PETTIGREW. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill which he has indicated, on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President—

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order that the motion is not debatable.

Mr. GEORGE. I move to amend the motion by striking out the bill mentioned and inserting the bill (H. R. 4600) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair must hold that the motion of the Senator from Mississippi is not in order. The vote must be first taken on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. GEORGE. I will take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine to lay on the table the appeal of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. GEORGE. Can a motion be made to lay my appeal on the table until after I have surrendered the floor?

Mr. HALE. The Chair has entertained the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not hear the inquiry of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. GEORGE. I suggest that I had not surrendered the floor. The Senator from Maine can not make the motion until I have surrendered the floor.

Mr. GRAY. The Chair had recognized the Senator from Maine.

Mr. GEORGE. I took an appeal. That appeal is debatable, and I was going to proceed to debate that question.

Mr. HALE. After a motion had been made to lay it on the table it is not debatable.

Mr. GEORGE. But the Senator could not make the motion when I had the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not intend to take the Senator from Mississippi from the floor, but the question is not debatable.

Mr. GEORGE. The appeal is debatable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The appeal is not debatable. The motion is made to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. HALE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. GEORGE. That motion was made before I surrendered the floor. The Senator from Maine had no right to make the motion while I occupied the floor.

Mr. HALE. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair must state that the pending motion is that of the Senator from Maine to lay on the table the appeal of the Senator from Mississippi.

The motion to lay the appeal on the table was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President—

Mr. GORMAN. Regular order.

Mr. BUTLER. I call for the yeas and nays on my motion. The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURROWS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. If he were here I should vote "nay."

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER]. Were he present I should vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). Has the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. ROACH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], who is not in his seat. I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL] that we transfer our pairs, so that the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] will stand paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] on this question, and that will enable us to vote.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. Very well; that is satisfactory.

Mr. GALLINGER. I vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE. My colleague [Mr. HOAR] is absent from the Senate. I desire to announce that he is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH].

Mr. ROACH. I am informed that if the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] were present he would vote "nay." As I would vote the same way, I will record my vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the affirmative). Since making the transfer of the pairs I notice that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] has come into the Chamber. The transfer will be annulled and I will stand paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. PUGH (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], which, I understand, has been announced. I take it for granted—it having been announced by his colleague—that if present the Senator from Massachusetts would vote "yea." If that be true, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. ALDRICH. The remark of the Senator from Alabama was not understood on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. PUGH. If there is anyone who is authorized to state that the senior Senator from Massachusetts would vote "yea" if present, I withdraw my vote. I have a general pair with him.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not think he would; but I am not certain.

Mr. PUGH. That is the reason why I required some statement to the contrary.

Mr. GALLINGER. It strikes me that the pair ought to be observed. I shall take the liberty of voting on the other side and break my pair if the Senator from Alabama breaks his.

Mr. DUBOIS. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SNOUP] is paired with the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE]. If my colleague were present he would vote "nay." The Senator from California would vote "nay" if present.

Mr. PUGH. I will transfer my pair to the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] and let my vote stand.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] to the absent Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHoup], and will vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 42; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Blanchard,	Daniel,	Lindsay,	Proctor,
Butler,	Faulkner,	Lodge,	Quay,
Caffery,	Gray,	McPherson,	Ransom,

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. May I inquire what is the question before the Senate?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Indian appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate resumes consideration of the Indian appropriation bill; and the pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I propose to address a few remarks upon the Indian appropriation bill. I believe that is in order now.

I think, perhaps, sir, it is due to myself that I should make a statement to the Senate. The bill known as the pooling bill was passed through the Committee on Interstate Commerce, introduced there by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], and, as I understood, supported by him cordially and by a very decided majority of that committee. As chairman I was charged with the duty of presenting it to the Senate and asking for the action of this body on it. I have from time to time made an effort to get the bill up. It is one in which the entire business of the country is very deeply and profoundly interested, as I am informed. Beyond that I have no interest in it. That effort has been obstructed by dilatory proceedings, by having it antagonized with appropriation bills, and by various methods, Mr. President, which, I submit, in a bill of this kind, are not fair and just to the public or to this body.

Yesterday (I do not think I am violating any confidence when I refer to it) the committee charged with the order of business—certainly on this side of the Chamber charged with the order of business—had a meeting and decided that at 3 o'clock to-day the bill would be taken up for consideration and would be considered until disposed of in one form or another. I immediately discovered that there was put on foot a movement to delay the discussion of the Indian appropriation bill and to run that discussion beyond the hour designated by that committee. The opponents of the so-called pooling bill have succeeded in doing that. I have simply discharged my duty.

I want to say in connection with the discharge of that duty that a great many intimations have been made here and elsewhere, notably by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], that this is a great eleven-billion combination to oppress the people. Let me say that there never has been a bill presented in this body in which the great majority, the masses of the people of this country, are more interested than in this measure. We have complained since the organization of the Interstate Commerce Commission in 1887 that that Commission did not have power enough to deal with the corporations in the interests of the people. This bill enlarges the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and in its operation upon railroads is, in my judgment, extremely drastic. As I stated in the remarks I made the other day, one of the effects will be, in my judgment, if it should become a law, to prevent the large trusts and combines and monopolies of this country from taking the railroads and the people by the throat, as they have them to-day.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator from South Carolina allow me to ask him a question at this stage?

Mr. BUTLER. With pleasure.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I realize perfectly as a member of the committee the earnest and unselfish character of his work, but inasmuch as from three-fourths to nine-tenths of the railroad stocks and bonds in the United States are held in New England and New York, and inasmuch as more than four-fifths of the representation from that section is opposed to taking up the pooling bill, I suggest to the Senator that he is relieved from much further responsibility respecting it.

Mr. BUTLER. If that opposition will develop itself and exercise its influence upon this body I have nothing more to say; but all I ask, and what I think I have a right to ask, is that the Senate shall act upon this bill, favorably or unfavorably; and to me personally it would make no difference what the action of the Senate might be.

But I am told, and I have good reason for believing, that there are certain monopolies in this country who have been getting the benefit of the repeal of the pooling clause, the fifth section of the act of 1887, who are themselves opposing the bill, because they have, as I said, the railroads by the throat and they have the country by the throat in deriving special privileges, preferential rates, rebates, making them rich, and everybody else, including railroads, poor. That, sir, is my reason for what appears to be persistency upon my part to get action by this body.

I have been told that there is a very decided majority of this body in favor of the bill. I have no personal knowledge of that fact, because I have made no special inquiry in regard to it; but I am reminded of the eloquent appeal made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] the other day when opposing a change of the rules, in which he said with great truth and force that any measure which had a majority of this body generally had action by the body. I have seen, sir, for ten days or two weeks, methods adopted on this floor to defeat the consideration of the bill. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] asserted yesterday that he did not intend to permit the consideration of this bill by this body if he could prevent it.

I have felt it due to myself, as chairman of that committee and as being in charge of the bill, to make this statement, and I give notice here and now that I intend, if I can, to have consideration of it fairly, frankly, and fully. If the Senate votes it down, I say to you, Mr. President, and to the Senate, I have no further concern with it; but I do insist that it is entitled to fair consideration at least. Other bills have been brought in here pending the consideration of the appropriation bills, notably the bill by my friend the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], which occupied twenty-four hours of the time of the Senate, and not one word was said about imperiling the appropriation bills.

Mr. HALE. And it was then withdrawn.

Mr. BUTLER. It was then withdrawn. Give me twenty-four hours, I say to the Senator from Maine, and if I can not pass the bill in that time I will withdraw it.

Mr. HALE. Let me say a word to the Senator. Of course the Senator has the privilege every lawyer has, after he has lost his case, of scolding the jury. The Senator has had a fair day in court. The question was whether the Senate in the present exigency would vote to take up his bill, thereby practically confiscating, it may be, the rest of the time. The Senator knows there has been no tactics resorted to to defeat the bill. The appropriation bills must necessarily be passed or we will be left with some one or more of them upon our hands and an extra session, which nobody wants, will be called. All that the Committee on Appropriations is doing, all that the Senate is doing in sustaining that committee, is in keeping strictly to the business of passing those bills. If the Senator with the bill which he has so much at heart has let it drag along until this exigency has arisen he ought not to complain of the Senate nor of anybody else. All that we are seeking is to do the necessary business, and his bill is necessarily crowded out.

I do not think that the Senator will get any opportunity when the Senate will vote to take up his bill, because everybody understands, with the determined opposition that there is to it, that he can not pass it in twenty-four hours, nor forty-eight hours, nor seventy-two hours, nor ninety-six hours, nor in the rest of the session; and none with the exception of a few are in favor of confiscating the time for the benefit of the pooling bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, that is the same plea we heard ten days or two weeks ago.

Mr. HALE. It is growing more imperative.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Maine is repeating precisely what he said when I attempted to get the floor when the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill and the Post-Office appropriation bill were up and which the Senator knows have passed this body, one of them passing it in three hours.

Mr. HALE. The plea and the reasons for it are growing more imperative every day. We are getting nearer the end of the session.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator from Maine permit me to ask him a question? I ask him if he is not aware that scores and scores of Senators on this side of the Chamber have been requested to speak upon amendments to appropriation bills in which they did not have the slightest interest and upon which they would not otherwise have spoken, for the sole and unconcealed reason that they might consume time and prevent the consideration of the pooling bill?

Mr. HALE. I will answer the Senator directly. I not only do not know of any such instance, but I know in my case I have sought early and late, and it may be in season and out of season, to prevent needless debate upon the provisions of appropriation bills, because, Mr. President, as surely as we stand here, with all the expedition that the human mind and human wit can give us, with limited debate upon appropriation bills, and with the five-minute debate, which I hope will be adopted upon amendments to the bill, I think we shall find ourselves crowded in passing those bills. So I say to the Senator I know of no such thing as he has mentioned.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Of course the Senator from Maine knows, as I know, that I have not made the slightest personal reference to him.

Mr. HALE. The Senator put the question to me, and I had to answer it.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not making charges against anybody. I am perfectly satisfied with the action of the Senate so far as I am personally concerned. I am making no complaint about it, and I am not scolding anybody. I am simply adverting to well-known and conceded facts, which the Senator himself can not deny. Personally I make no charges against him of indulging in any dilatory methods or proceedings; but yesterday, when it was announced that the committee on the order of business of this body had decided on 3 o'clock to-day as the time when the bill in my charge should be taken up, what did we see in this body? The Indian appropriation bill was proceeding. We could have concluded it in two hours. Instead of that we had an executive session, and then an adjournment very much earlier than usual.

Mr. President, that may deceive some people, but does not deceive me, and is not going to deceive anybody here. It was plainly announced that the object of that delay was to prevent the consideration of the bill in my charge. It was also announced, and there was no concealment about it, when the consular and diplomatic and the Post-Office appropriation bills were being considered, that the debate would be strung out; and I think about ten days were occupied in the discussion of those two bills when I was making an effort to get up the bill in my charge.

All I ask is that the Senate take a vote on the bill. If the Senate votes it down, that will be the end of it; and if it passes it, that will be the end of it.

Mr. HALE. Let me say to the Senator that he can not get a vote on his bill until the Senate votes to take it up. He has to proceed by the regular process.

Mr. BUTLER. That is what I wanted to do.

Mr. HALE. The Senator has to proceed under the rules. He has tried it just now, and has been beaten. He can not get a vote on his bill until he can get the Senate to take it up, and he will find every hour and every day the difficulty of securing a vote to take up his bill will increase, and he will never be as strong as he is to-day.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator vote to take it up after the appropriation bill is disposed of?

Mr. HALE. I will not.

Mr. BUTLER. Of course not.

Mr. HALE. I will not until I am sure we can see our way to the end of the session in disposing of appropriation bills.

Mr. BUTLER. And yet we saw the Senator sitting perfectly quiet when the bill of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] was being discussed the other night until 9 o'clock, with not one word of protest against it. I have, however, no complaint to make of it. I was in favor of that bill; but not one word of protest was made by the Senator from Maine or any other Senator as to the consumption of time.

Mr. HALE. I protested then, as I did to-day, by voting against the bill of the Senator from Arkansas. That bill seemed to represent the sentiment of the Senate, inasmuch as the Senate voted to take it up, and it involved a great question which lies at the bottom of the financial controversy, a deeper, a wider, a larger, and a nobler question than this, and when the Senator from Arkansas saw what the effect would be if he determined upon keeping that bill before the Senate, instead of insisting upon it he gracefully withdrew it, as he always does in such cases. He did not complain of the Senate because the disposition was to consider appropriation bills, as the Senator from South Carolina does, but he yielded to that motion and at once the bill went out of the way.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from Maine will permit me to get the bill in my charge taken up, and if I find that it can not pass, I suppose the Senator from Arkansas may exceed me in grace, but certainly he will not exceed me in candor in withdrawing the bill.

Mr. HALE. When the Senator from South Carolina can get a majority to take his bill up, as the Senator from Arkansas did, then the Senator from South Carolina will be entitled to consideration.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Arkansas was not at the disadvantage that some members of the Appropriations Committee opposed an appropriation bill to his motion, as the Senator from Maine and other Senators are doing and have done to the bill in my charge.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. PEPPER. I know the Senator from South Carolina has been very hard pressed to secure a hearing for his bill, and unavoidably that situation has prevailed for many days; but the Senator has worked faithfully and worked arduously and continuously to perform his part of the work of getting the bill before the Senate.

The suggestion I wish to make is, that it may be some relief to the Senator to know that he can not get the bill passed in twenty days. I can assure the Senator that I know personally at least twelve members of the Senate who are determined to fight that bill to the uttermost. I myself am prepared to occupy at least one full day in continuous discussion of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. In other words, Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas has had the frankness to do what many other Senators have not had the frankness to do, to state that he and 11 others will filibuster against a bill where there is a majority in favor of it. That, I understand, to be the position of the Senator.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President—

Mr. BUTLER. One moment.

What I should like to do would be to give the Senator from Kansas and the other 11 Senators an opportunity to filibuster for a while, and let us see just how far they will go in carrying out this filibustering programme, which the Senator has so frankly admitted is in store for this bill.

Mr. PEPPER. I have no idea of filibustering.

Mr. BUTLER. Of course not!

Mr. PEPPER. I will say to the Senator, however, with perfect frankness, we will talk his bill to death, if we can not kill it in any other way. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. That is another form of filibustering.

Mr. KYLE. The Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], who was obliged to go to New York yesterday evening, told me if the bill came up he wanted me to notify the members of the Senate that he would return this evening, and that he had a five days' speech to deliver against the bill of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. I doubt very much whether he could stand out as long as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN]; but still I felt that it was my duty to make this statement. If the Senator from California, the Senator from South Dakota, the Senator from Kansas, and the Senator from Nebraska have made up their minds to perpetuate monopolies and trusts in this country by filibustering, they must take the responsibility.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will permit me, I desire to contribute my portion to this entertainment, by saying that I shall take my full portion of time if his bill comes up.

Mr. BUTLER. I think it quite unnecessary for the Senator to state that, because he always takes his full portion, and a good deal that is not his full portion. [Laughter.]

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I know the Senate will indulge me for a moment after the very remarkable statement of the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] who has made a formidable assault upon me—

Mr. BUTLER. Not at all.

Mr. GORMAN. Entirely unexpected and uncalled for by any relations between that Senator and myself, and unjustified by any action of mine in relation to this bill. The Senator began his remarks by alluding to the fact that I had introduced a bill to permit pooling.

Mr. BUTLER. That is true.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes, Mr. President, it is true, and my opinion upon that question is as well known to the Senate as my opinion upon any other question. I think a fair and moderate bill permitting pooling is right, and in the interest of the people and in the interest of the railroad companies. I introduced a bill, as I introduced hundreds of bills, providing, as it did, for permitting pooling, but I was not committed to that bill in any of its provisions, except the general idea. It was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, of which the distinguished Senator is chairman, and of which I am a member, in the early part of this Congress; it was discussed in committee and considered in all of its details. Nobody knows better than the distinguished Senator from South Carolina that I offered and sustained amendments, which I considered vital to the bill, and without which I could not support it.

That bill was considered carefully and for a long time, but no report whatever was made upon it, and no conclusion was ever reached by the Committee on Interstate Commerce until the 22d of January of this year. Then, when the bill came to the Senate, the Senator from South Carolina knows as well as I do that it was a bill which had passed the House of Representatives, and differed in its provisions from the one which he and I had considered as members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and that that bill was not satisfactory, except to a bare majority of the committee. The Senator also knows that the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], I, and other members of the committee, insisted that the bill must be amended, but it was said by the majority that not an "i" should be dotted or a "t" crossed, and it was determined to report the bill.

I have been out of the Chamber much of the time in the Committee on Appropriations, but I know of no effort having been made to take that bill up at any time until to-day. The Senator tried to get the floor a few days ago to do it, but beyond that I personally know of no motion to take the bill up.

Mr. President, the Senator singles me out for a reason perfectly well known. The Senators on this side of the Chamber have honored me by selecting me as the chairman of their caucus, and early in the session, before this bill was reported, before it had passed the House of Representatives, the Democrats in caucus determined what measures should be considered and the order in which they were to be considered, and, as their organ, I have endeavored faithfully to carry out that decree. It was one which was satisfactory to both sides of the Chamber, as we always confer about such matters.

The bills to be considered were in the order in which I name them: First, the Nicaraguan Canal bill; second, any financial measure which might come from the Committee on Finance—

Mr. PASCO. Was not the bankruptcy bill second?

Mr. GORMAN. No; I have the resolutions in my pocket, and can read them if any Senator desires it. Then came the bankruptcy bill; the appropriation bills, of course, always and over everything, and then the bill to admit two new States into the Union.

Mr. President, we have faithfully endeavored to carry out that order, until it came to the question which was thrust on us, not by any member of this body, but because of the exigency in the country and the special message of the President of the United States, detailing what he believed to be necessary for the honor and interest of the Government. That message created a discussion here and everywhere. It consumed one whole week, yes, ten days, of the time of this session, ten precious days which I struggled to have devoted to the consideration of appropriation bills, so that this measure of the Senator from South Carolina and other measures might have the fair consideration of the body. This delay grew out of that message, and probably because of it the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], a member of the Committee on Finance, sought a few days ago to bring up what was known as the silver bill, and the honorable Senator from South Carolina endeavored to get the floor, I take it for granted, for the purpose of bringing up his bill.

I rose in my place as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, the honorable chairman of the committee not being in the Chamber at the time, and I protested against the consideration of that bill or any other bill except an appropriation bill. I raised the question of order, and you, Mr. President [the Vice-President in the chair], decided in my favor that it was a privileged motion which I then made to proceed to the consideration of an appropriation bill. That proposition was voted down by a majority of 3, as I now recall it. Every member of the Appropriations Committee stood paralyzed by that vote, and twenty-four hours were consumed in the discussion of the silver bill. At the first moment we could reach a vote we moved to take up the Indian appropriation bill, and we have pressed that bill from that time to this.

I want to say, Mr. President, that amongst the best personal friends I have are great railroad magnates. They have been here pressing me, as they have been pressing every other Senator; I have been deluged with telegrams here and at my home; and there have been more men interested in getting up the great measure known as the pooling bill than any other which has been before Congress. They have begged; they have pleaded; some of them have even intimated threats; and my answer to them has been, as it is to anybody here or elsewhere, that in the present condition of affairs, with only seven or eight days of the session left, the time having been used in considering other matters for which I am not responsible, I would oppose any power in the United States, or any personal appeal to take up any measure in the Senate in preference to the bills which are necessary to conduct the Government.

I say, Mr. President, to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, with whom I have been on more than intimate terms, whom I have regarded almost as a brother, who was kind to me when I entered this body—and that friendship has grown—that no pique of his, no desire of his, no desire of any other man will make meswerve from a duty which has been imposed upon me by the Democrats in this Chamber; and if every Democrat in the Chamber were to appeal to me to put this Government in jeopardy by the failure of an appropriation bill in order to pass any other measure I should resist that appeal.

That is all I desire to say, Mr. President.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President—

Mr. BUTLER. I simply desire to state, if the Senator from New Hampshire will pardon me—

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. That the Senator from Maryland is entirely mistaken if he supposes that I intended by any remark I made to make an assault upon him.

Mr. GORMAN. That is satisfactory.

Mr. BUTLER. Nothing could be further from my purpose. I simply stated what I believed to be, what I know to be, the facts in connection with this bill. I simply stated that the Senator from Maryland had introduced the bill—

Mr. GORMAN. Introduced a bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Well, introduced a pooling bill. He does not deny that, of course, and will not deny it.

Mr. GORMAN. Of course not.

Mr. BUTLER. I simply stated that I understood him to be in favor of that pooling bill.

Mr. GORMAN. Not as it is.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator says, "Not as it is." He knows perfectly well, as do all the members of the Interstate Commerce Committee, that the bill he introduced was considered from time to time, and was thought to be imperfect, and when the House of Representatives passed the bill, which is now before the Senate, by such a large majority, after full discussion, and it came here to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, it was there concluded, as I thought wisely, that we had better take the bill as it came from the other House, because it made a great many modifications in the bill introduced by the Senator from Maryland, gave very much larger powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission than his bill did, and I supposed that he and every member of the committee, with perhaps two exceptions, were in favor of it.

The Senator from Maryland did offer two amendments, which I say to him, if I have the right to do it, I will accept on behalf of the Committee on Interstate Commerce. Those amendments were not adopted. The Senator can not forget that at the first meeting of the Committee on Interstate Commerce the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] was absent, and it was thought, out of deference to him, that we should take no final action until he returned. Meantime a letter was sent from that Senator, under and by virtue of which we had the right to proceed with the consideration of the bill. At the next meeting it was stated that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] was absent, and probably out of deference to him we should defer action for one week more. The Senator from New Hampshire came, and offered an amendment, and, if my memory serves me correctly, asked for another meeting of the committee; which was granted.

So we went, Mr. President, and the bill was reported to the Senate on the 22d of January, as the Senator from Maryland has stated. If my memory serves me correctly I then gave notice that I should call it up at an early day, and I think that this is about the fourth or fifth time I have asked the Senate to consider the bill. I have availed myself of every opportunity which I could fairly and without intruding upon the business of the Senate to ask it to consider it. Finally, as I stated, the committee of which the Senator is chairman had a meeting yesterday and designated to-day at 3 o'clock for the bill to be called up. Therefore I called it up. That is the only explanation I have to give in regard to the action of the Democratic caucus.

The Nicaraguan Canal bill was out of the way, and I understood my friend from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] to give up his bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President—

Mr. BUTLER. I am in favor of his bill, and told him at the time that I should not antagonize it.

Mr. GEORGE. I have given up the bankruptcy bill to this extent, and no more. I am determined to press it before the Senate at any time when I think I can get consideration for it.

Mr. BUTLER. I stated to the Senator when I first made the motion in the morning hour, so as not to antagonize his bill, that I should not antagonize him, and I have not done so. I have simply availed myself of every opportunity which presented itself to press the measure.

The Senator from Maryland speaks of my having been piqued. The Senator does me great injustice when he supposes that I am piqued about it. I am simply discharging my duty, as he is discharging his.

Mr. GORMAN. I withdraw that word, Mr. President.

Mr. BUTLER. I must say I have been disappointed, but not piqued. I have no more interest in the bill than anyone else, perhaps, except that I am charged with the management of it on the floor of the Senate.

After this explanation, I shall let the matter go; but I give notice now, notwithstanding the threat of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEPPER] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], that I shall call it up when the pending appropriation bill is concluded.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, it seems to me that it would be well to discuss a bill of this great importance without undertaking to impute motives to Senators upon this floor. It certainly is a great public question, and every Senator is presumed to act from motives of public duty. If motives are to be imputed, it is open to observation that those imputations will come from both sides, and a debate upon a great public question may degenerate into personalities. I do not propose to enter upon that field, unless my own motives are impugned. I ascribe motives of the highest character to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, does the Senator intimate that I have made any imputation upon his motives?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not, Mr. President; but I have noticed that there has been very little said in debate so far about the merits of the bill. If the Senator will tell me what shape the debate has taken, then I shall take heed of his admonition.

As for the Senator from South Carolina himself, I believe he has taken this subject up as chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which position he was duly assigned at the beginning of this session, with a disposition to do exactly what is right. The Senator has reported the bill to the Senate, and with that zeal which always characterizes him, he has endeavored to secure action upon it. He has done that, so far as I know and believe, from the very best of motives. The Senator is about to leave the Senate, and naturally desires to finish every duty which has been assigned to him, and I, for one, take occasion to bear my testimony, if it will do the Senator any good, to the fact that he always has endeavored to judge every question which has arisen and come before him for decision as a Senator ought to judge it; and certainly, Mr. President, when we part with the Senator from South Carolina, we shall part with as courteous and as genial a gentleman as has ever occupied a seat upon the floor of this Senate.

So also the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] is not to have motives ascribed to him other than those of public duty. He performs his duty as a Senator according to the light which is given to him. [Laughter.] He is free in his criticisms of other Senators, but never harsh or ungentle; and I have no doubt that he is just as anxious that this bill shall pass the Senate in the interest of the money lenders and stock and bond owners of my section of New England as he is that a silver free-coinage bill shall pass in the interest of his own section. The Senator knows no bounds in his patriotism, no bounds in his love of country; and equally before him stand Colorado and New England.

So, Mr. President, we are all patriots, we are all public-spirited citizens, and we all of us undoubtedly deal with every question which comes before us from the best of motives, in the best of spirit, always seeking only the public good.

Mr. President, if the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Colorado stand there, as we know they stand and always have stood and always will stand, will they be kind enough to concede that the Senator from Maryland and I may stand there also?

I take occasion to say—and I shall be brief, because I do not wish to incur even the suspicion of the gentle Senator from South Carolina that I am prolonging the business of the session—a few words about this bill.

It has been before Congress during the whole of the present session; it passed the House of Representatives on the 11th day of December last, came to this body, and was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate, which was reorganized, I may incidentally remark, at the beginning of this Congress, very thoroughly and radically reorganized; I do not say for any purpose, because I have disclaimed any intention of imputing motives to anybody, but it was thoroughly reorganized, and this bill came before the committee in December last for consideration. It is a House bill. If it passes this body as it came from the other House we must take it in all its length and breadth exactly as it met the approval of the House committee and the House of Representatives. One trouble about dealing with the bill fairly, justly, and becomingly as Senators of the United States is that we were told in the beginning that it must be passed exactly as it came from the other House. Not a "t" was to be crossed or an "i" dotted. The railroads differed about the bill when it was pending in the House of Representatives. One of the great railroad lines of the country demanded certain amendments to that part of the bill which gives additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, but that great railroad organization withdrew its objection. The bill passed the House, and the position of the railroad managers to-day is that as they have agreed upon the bill, therefore it must pass the Senate of the United States exactly as it came from the House of Representatives.

Every amendment proposed in the Senate committee was voted down, inexorably voted down by the majority of the committee, including the distinguished chairman of the committee, and we were told that we must take the bill in hac litera just exactly as it had suited the railroads of the company finally to frame it; we must pass it through this body whether or not we were willing to pass it in that shape, or whether or not we wanted to amend it.

Mr. BUTLER. May I interrupt the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CHANDLER. I am always delighted to be interrupted by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. Are we to understand that the Senator would intimate by the statement he has just made that the amendments were voted down at the instance of the railroads of this country, when he has just been so eloquently disclaiming any purpose to impute motives to gentlemen and Senators?

Mr. CHANDLER. I have disclaimed any such intention, and I have imputed no motives. I have said we were told we must take the bill exactly as it came from the House of Representatives. I will ask the Senator from South Carolina whether or not that is true.

Mr. BUTLER. I will tell the Senator from New Hampshire very frankly that I thought the bill had better pass as it came from the other House. I did not say the Senate should take it in that form. I merely gave my individual opinion.

Mr. CHANDLER. I imputed no motives. I said we were told that we must take this bill exactly as it came from the other House; and in proof of that is the fact that every amendment proposed was voted down. The Senator from South Carolina voted against every amendment. I disclaim any idea that the Senator acted from anything except a sense of public duty. Have I made my disclaimer sufficient to satisfy the Senator?

Mr. BUTLER. Entirely so.

Mr. CHANDLER. If not, I will try to begin again, for there is no end of good things I could say of the Senator from South Carolina if the present session were long enough to enable me to say them. [Laughter.]

Here is the trouble about the bill. I do not believe the first section of the bill, as it is written and as we are told to take it, will pass either the present Congress or any other Congress. The language of the bill is:

That it shall be unlawful for different and competing common carriers subject to the provisions of this act to enter into any contract, agreement, or arrangement for the division or apportionment among themselves or with other carriers of the whole or any portion of their traffic, or any of their gross or net earnings.

The bill is very cunningly drafted. It starts with a negative, and a negative in legislation usually seems to be harmless unless it is followed by a very deadly affirmative, as is the case with this bill.

That it shall be unlawful for different and competing common carriers subject to the provisions of this act to enter into any contract, agreement, or arrangement for the division or apportionment among themselves or with other carriers of the whole or any portion of their traffic, or any of their gross or net earnings: * * * Provided, however, That under the following conditions it shall be lawful for such common carriers to enter into such contracts, agreements, or arrangements.

Let us transpose the sentence. Let us make it read exactly in the form as it reads in effect, and then see what it is.

That it shall be lawful for different and competing common carriers, subject to the provisions of this act, to enter into any contract, agreement, or arrangement for the division or apportionment among themselves, or with other carriers, of the whole or any portion of their traffic or any of their gross or net earnings.

The proposed legislation is vicious in form. It starts in with a prohibition that attracts the eye, and it ends with a license, and that license is as broad as the prohibition. The Senator from South Carolina will not deny that. So the bill which the Senator from South Carolina wants us to take down without any change in the closing hours of the present session is exactly the same as if it read in the way I have just placed it before the Senate.

The proposed section of the statute is exactly what I described it to be in the remarks which I submitted to the Senate on the 29th day of January. It is an authority to all the railroads of this country to form one partnership, and I defy any Senator to dispute the validity and soundness of that proposition. The railroads of this country are all different and competing roads, are they not?

Mr. BUTLER. Mostly.

Mr. CHANDLER. "It shall be lawful or unlawful," it makes no difference which of the words you use here, "for different and competing common carriers." Those are all the railroads of the country. They are all different, they are all competing with each other, and here is a proposition that all the different and competing railroads, that is to say, all the railroads of the country, may make an agreement for the apportionment of the whole or any portion of their traffic or any of their gross or net earnings.

That proposition in all its length and breadth, I repeat, is not going to be adopted by the present Congress or by any succeeding Congress. It is the abolition of competition by an act of Congress. It authorizes all the railroads of this country to put the whole of their net earnings in one common pool. It authorizes them to make a managing committee for all their earnings. It authorizes them to pay out of their gross or net earnings all the sums of money they choose to appropriate for that purpose in order to corrupt the legislatures of the States, the National Legislature, and every avenue of public life, if they choose to so expend it. When they have used the gross or net earnings for the purpose of destroying public virtue, for the purpose of controlling all the functions of government in State and in nation, then, and not till then, the managing committee of this great partnership will be under obligations to divide the net earnings among the various roads in accordance with the percentages which shall have been agreed upon in the pooling contract.

All this is in justification of what the Senator from South Carolina was pleased to call the lurid headlines of my remarks on January 20, in which I said that authority was given for a great eleven-billion-dollar railroad partnership in this country. The authority is given; the authority is in the act; there is no escape from the power that is given to the railroads; and the only defense which the Senator from South Carolina made the other day, the only defense which any advocate of the bill can make, is that although the power is given to unite in one partnership all the railroads of the country those railroads do not intend to make any such partnership agreement.

When the Senator from South Carolina undertook to prove that no such intention existed in the minds of the railroad managers of the country, the only authority he was able to give was the opinion of Mr. George R. Blanchard, an able expert on the subject, who said the intention of the railroads was only to make certain east and west bound pools. If that is all that is intended, if all that the railroads of the country want to-day is to make certain limited and specific pooling contracts, why, in Heaven's name, do they not ask Congress for power to do exactly what they want to do, and no more? Why do they come here and ask the House of Representatives and the Senate to blot out the fifth section of the interstate-commerce act, which prohibits different and competing railroads from pooling, and to allow all the railroads of the country, without any limitation whatever as to the extent of territory or the number of contracting railroads, to enter into one partnership?

Mr. President, if the railroads of the country want carefully prepared and limited provisions for special pooling contracts, and that is all they want, then they ought to submit a bill telling us exactly what they want, and if Congress consents to those provisions, and the interests of the people do not appear to suffer thereby, then one act can be passed and another act can be passed until it can be finally ascertained and determined whether or not unlimited pooling contracts can safely be allowed. But for the railroads in the country to come in here and demand the right to form themselves into one great overwhelming partnership is as preposterous as it would be for them to ask to be allowed to name the President of the United States and the Senators and the members of the House of Representatives.

Mr. FRYE. I wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether he feels justified in saying that the words "the different and competing railroads" mean all of the railroads of the country? Are not the two words connected by the word "and," and must not the railroads be different and competing? Does the Senator feel justified in saying that when the word "different" is used it includes every railroad in the United States? I certainly do not so understand it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do feel justified in saying it. I have given the bill careful study, as it was my duty to do, with a view to seeing whether it was a safe bill to pass and would protect the people of this country; and I came to the conclusion that if the bill passes in its present form there is absolutely no limit to railroad consolidation in this country. When the Senator from Maine shall have studied the bill as carefully as I have, he, being a much better lawyer than I am, will come to the same conclusion.

The most remarkable feature of the bill I have yet to allude to. The bill is ten times worse than a bill to repeal the fifth section of the interstate-commerce act, which absolutely prohibits pooling, and to leave no law whatever upon the national statute books. If we repeal that section absolutely and the railroads undertake to make pooling contracts, then of course they are subject to the laws of the States and the laws of the United States, if there are any, against trusts. If a combination of corporations to control the prices of transportation is illegal under the laws of the country, the railroads, the fifth section of the act being repealed, may be pursued in the States and under national law. They may be compelled to dissolve their trust and each to perform the public functions that belong to it, and by the aid of State law and national law, by the aid of proceedings in State courts and Federal courts, such agreements to abolish competition may be broken down by the courts under the laws as they exist. But if the bill passes

State control over pooling contracts and railroad trusts is absolutely gone. I read this provision:

Provided, however, That under the following conditions it shall be lawful for such common carriers to enter into such contracts, agreements, or arrangements enforceable between the parties thereto.

There is a national mandate; there is a declaration in pursuance of the authority given to the National Government to regulate commerce between foreign countries and the several States; there is a national mandate put upon the Federal statute book which says that these trusts that agree to abolish competition among the railroads in the country are legal. They are affirmatively legalized by the power of the National Government. I do not think any lawyer or any Senator will undertake to dispute the force of that language. Merely repeal the fifth section of the act, and the States and the nation can pursue trusts which agree to abolish competition.

With this bill upon the statute books, however, pooling contracts may be made, and they are made "enforceable" by express declaration of national law. When one of these corporations or any combination of these corporations is brought into a State court and an attempt is made to punish it for entering into a trust to abolish competition, it will set up the provisions of the national law made in pursuance of the clause in the United States Constitution, about the meaning of which there is no doubt, and it will claim that beyond all doubt and question and in spite of State law and State action the pooling contract is enforceable between the parties thereto.

This is a most remarkable provision. I do not think the like of it is to be found anywhere, either in State or Federal legislation. It is common in State and national legislation to say that it shall be lawful to make such and such contracts, but where can any Senator point out a statute which undertakes to give statutory validity to a contract—a provision of legislation which says that a contract shall be "enforceable between the parties thereto?" If any Senator ever saw a provision of that kind in any law, State or national, I hope to be informed concerning it, for I never yet have seen such a provision; I never yet have heard of such a provision.

Mr. President, I shall not proceed further with the discussion of the question of pooling contracts upon the Indian appropriation bill. I have called attention to this great, this ineradicable defect in the bill. If the railroads of the country want authority to make limited pooling contracts let them say so; but let them not come to Congress in the closing hours of the session and demand that because they want to make limited pooling contracts, guarded pooling contracts, special pooling contracts, the Congress of the United States shall pass a law giving them the authority which is described in my remarks of the 20th of January, and is not exaggerated in those remarks. As I stated in the lurid headlines to which the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] has taken exception, it is an authority to create an eleven-thousand-million-dollar railroad partnership. It provides that all railway competition shall be abolished by act of Congress; it does not give adequate control over those contracts to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and it authorizes this stupendous partnership to fix not only the rates of fares and freights over 170,461 miles of railroad, but also to fix the wages of 873,602 railway workmen.

Mr. President, I repeat my prediction that neither in this Congress nor in any other Congress will a bill, which absolutely and totally strikes down the fifth section of the interstate-commerce act, pass in any such language as the very first words in the bill which the Senator from South Carolina is so anxious to have passed before his term of service in the Senate shall end.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I do not intend to spend a moment's time in answering the argument of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] as to the merits of the pooling bill. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] rose, and with earnestness said the only reason why the bill should be carried over and not considered at this time was because it was the patriotic duty of every Senator to give his undivided time to the appropriation bills. The Senator from New Hampshire voted against taking up this measure, and followed that vote by occupying the floor of the Senate for some time on the Indian appropriation bill to deliver an argument on the subject of the pooling bill. The Senator from New Hampshire was probably bursting with a speech on this subject as he is with a speech on every other subject that comes before the Senate in any way.

I merely propose to refer very briefly to the personal remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire. He seems to have brought into his speech a certain quality of personal reference which was uncalled for. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] can perhaps endure the fulsome flattery of the Senator from New Hampshire. I only hope it will not injure the Senator from South Carolina at his home, to which he is shortly to depart, and where both Senators are known. As for myself, I shrink greatly from any passage at arms with the Senator from New Hampshire. Ever since his somewhat dramatic reconciliation with his colleague, the little squirts of venom which used to be concentrated have been distributed generally around the Chamber, and all of us have received a little of it from time to time.

I knew what an immense stock the Senator from New Hampshire carries on hand, and I shrink very greatly from any sort of response to the ironical suggestions he made as to the motives that might be imputed to Senators. What motives might be imputed to me I do not care a farthing for. Nothing the Senator from New Hampshire could say in the way of the imputation of a motive would affect me in the slightest possible degree; but he did say I did my duty according to the lights that were given me. That is unfortunately true, and I desire for a moment to call the attention of the Senate to the character of light that has been given me.

I have kept track for the last few days of the number of times the Senator from New Hampshire has addressed the Senate in these closing days when he says it is so essential that we shall pass the appropriation bills or else we shall have an extra session. On the 20th he spoke 23 times, on the 19th he spoke 13 times, on the 18th he spoke 10 times, on the 16th he spoke 11 times, on the 14th he spoke 17 times, and on the 15th of the month he addressed the Chair 37 times. [Laughter.] I have not kept account of the last two days. I can listen to the Senator from New Hampshire, but it makes me sick to read the RECORD and count it up. The Senate must excuse me if in dealing with public questions I am somewhat clouded by the frequency with which the Senator from New Hampshire addresses the Chair on every conceivable topic.

I do not care to go into the merits of this measure. If the people in the sections of the country where the railroad properties are owned do not care to protect them, if the representatives of those sections find it consonant with their duty to vote against taking up and discussing the bill, I am sure I do not care. We have the railroads. The existence of the provision prohibiting pooling has worked incalculable injury to the city where I live. Our people would be glad to see it removed, but if the Senators from New England and the Eastern States do not care to raise the question in the Senate at this time those of us who live in the West can well be content.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I have no desire whatever to prolong the debate, and shall not now occupy any considerable length of time.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] has referred to imputing motives to Senators. I think my associates on this floor will acquit me in the long term I have served here of indulging in that style of debate; and if there is anything in my remarks to-day which would justify such an imputation I shall withdraw it very promptly. But I wish to remind the Senator from New Hampshire that he has occasionally referred to a railroad lobby around the Capitol in the interest of the bill, and has said that the railroads want this and want that and want the other. I desire to say in reply to that statement that no lobby has any terrors for an honest man. For myself I have always encouraged information upon any great public question from that source or any other; and I have in regard to this bill been very glad to receive suggestions from American citizens interested in the railroad transportation of this country.

But the Senator from New Hampshire and other Senators who have spoken on this bill and other measures appear to proceed upon the assumption that every man in this country connected with railroads is a thief, and the moment he takes employment under a railroad corporation he then and there renounces his devotion to his country, his patriotism, his interest in the welfare of his country. That, sir, has got to be a common imputation upon eight hundred and odd thousand American citizens engaged to-day in railroad transportation. I repudiate and denounce it as a calumny and slander upon as good men as there are within the confines of this country. I happen to know a good many of them. I say here and now that they are the equals of the Senator from New Hampshire or any other Senator upon this floor in all that goes to make up true American citizenship—as honorable men, as true patriots as can be found in this country or any other.

These constant imputations upon railroad lobbyists have no terrors for me and I say have no terrors for any honest man, Mr. President. The railroad people of this country have a right, it is their duty, to appear before the Senate and Congress and present in respectful terms, as they have done as far as I know, what they want Congress to do in their behalf. I can say for myself, if I may be pardoned for a personal reference, that I am under no obligation to the railroads of this country; but I do not intend to permit these constant flings at as good men as can be found in the Senate or anywhere else. They have a right, sir, to come here and present their claims. I say now I am under obligations to them or to any other body of American citizens who have claims or rights to present to this body or to this Congress for bringing me any information in their power.

When the Senator talks about impugning the motives of Senators, let him remember that he has on repeated occasions spoken of the railroad lobby around these halls. They have, as I said, no terrors for me. For one, Mr. President, I protest against this wholesale and unqualified denunciation of honest American citizens coming to this body and asking for what they want, and doing it respectfully and in an intelligent way.

So much, sir, I felt that I ought to say in reply to the observations of the Senator from New Hampshire and some other Senators. If the occasion should present itself, as I trust it will, I can expose, I think, the absolute fallacy of the argument of the Senator from New Hampshire to-day, how untenable it is, how far from the real facts are the propositions which he submits.

But, sir, I shall not delay the Senate further. I desired the opportunity to say this much. If, as I stated awhile ago, the occasion presents itself I shall attempt to reply, and I think I can successfully reply, to the criticisms which the Senator from New Hampshire has made on the bill.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8470) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should be exceedingly gratified if the Senate would dispose of the bill this evening and enable me to call up the sundry civil appropriation bill, making that the unfinished business. Then the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] desires some memorial services on a deceased member, after which the Senate will adjourn.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the five-minute rule.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope we can have the five-minute rule applied until the bill is disposed of. As soon as it is disposed of I shall move to take up the sundry civil appropriation bill, and then yield the floor to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer an amendment. In line 11, page 73, after the word "cease," I move to insert the following:

For the purchase of such school buildings and furniture as may be for sale belonging to parties with whom the Government has heretofore made contracts for the education of Indian children, said school property when purchased to be used for Government school purposes, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope that the Senator from South Dakota will not insist on quite so much as that. We conferred fully with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. He says that under the existing law he has authority to purchase, and with the increase of the appropriation made by the House there will be no necessity for any additional provision for the purchase of buildings.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to state that we are going to abandon 20 per cent of the contract schools. We shall have some schools vacant that have been used for that purpose. The Government takes the Indian children away from those schools and will have no buildings to put them in. Therefore it is certainly necessary that we should purchase the buildings. It is a matter of honor that we should do so. I am certain, after looking the bill over, that money enough is not provided to purchase the schools which are being abandoned. I do not think that an appropriation of $100,000 is excessive for the purpose.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota what safeguard is drawn around this amendment? How are we to ascertain what this property is worth?

Mr. PETTIGREW. That is for the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain; and the matter is in his discretion, anyway. He need not use the $100,000 unless he finds that he can do it to advantage.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to make the point of order on the amendment that it has not been submitted to any standing committee and is legislation, nor does it come under any estimate made by the Department.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is made against the pending amendment. The Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think the point of order is undoubtedly well taken. I offer the following amendment. At the end of line 20, page 81, I move to insert:

That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall employ Indian girls as assistant matrons and Indian boys as farmers and industrial teachers in all Indian schools when it is possible to do so.

Mr. ALLEN. I suggest to the Senator that the word "possible" be changed to "practicable."

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have no objection to that. I prefer the amendment as it is, however, but still I shall not insist on the word "possible."

Mr. COCKRELL. "Practicable" is much better.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will state my object in offering the amendment. In the first place, we educate a good many boys and girls excessively, and they go back to the reservations with nothing to do. In the second place, under the present Administration there has grown up a practice of filling these places for political purposes. In many cases matrons are sent from the South who are utterly incompetent, who know nothing about the Indian service, and are unfit to fill these positions, while there are Indian girls abundantly capable of filling the places who are seeking them, and they are refused.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the question be put on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. At the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior I move, on page 72, line 19, after the word "buildings," to insert the words "including the expenses of advertising for bids for the erection of such buildings."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. I offer an amendment to come in at the bottom of page 28, at the end of line 24. I move to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to negotiate with and purchase from the Ogden Land Company, so called, its successors, assigns, or legal representatives, all right, title, or interest of said company in and to the lands within the Cattaraugus and Alleghany Indian reservations in the State of New York, at a price not exceeding $5 per acre, for which purpose a sum sufficient is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, payment to be made to said company, its successors, assigns, or legal representatives, upon the execution of a proper deed or deeds of conveyance to the United States of all right, title, and interest of said company in and to the lands aforesaid.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I have not consumed the time of the Senate in discussing the pending bill or any other bill during the consideration of this appropriation bill. I desire the attention of the Senate for a very few moments while I briefly explain this amendment.

The amendment relates to the Allegany and Cattaraugus Indians in the State of New York. There is another tribe of Indians in our State—the Tammany tribe—which has given us considerable trouble and concern in the past, but I do not call the attention of the Senate to them now. [Laughter.]

A year ago this amendment was proposed. The Appropriations Committee of the Senate did not think it ought then to be adopted, but kindly consented that there might be placed in the appropriation act the clause which I will now read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized to make a thorough investigation of the facts touching the so-called Ogden Land Company, its organization, when and by whom formed, its continued existence or organization to this date, its capital stock, number of shares, amount or face value, where and by whom held, its liabilities and assets, and the original history of the alleged claim of said company to any of the lands of the Seneca Nation of Indians in the State of New York, and any and all evidences of title; and also the condition of said Indians, their progress in civilization and fitness for citizenship, their number and system of government, and the propriety of allotting their lands in severalty, and to make to Congress a full report with such suggestions and recommendations as he may deem proper in view of all the facts ascertained.

That was placed in the appropriation act a year ago instead of the amendment which I now offer. The Secretary of the Interior in pursuance of that authority proceeded to make an investigation of this question, and I hold in my hand an elaborate report from the Secretary of the Interior in which, in substance, he recommends the adoption of this amendment giving elaborately the reasons which influenced that action.

This Ogden Land Company, an old organization existing away back in 1790, has a claim upon these lands. I do not intend to enter into any elaborate argument to show its precise nature. It is fully discussed in this report. It is held in one view of the case that they have a fee subject to the right of the Indians to occupy; and in another view of the case it is held that they have simply the right of preemption, a right to purchase. No matter which contention is right, it has a claim which has been sustained by the courts. It stands there as a barrier to the distribution of this land, to a change of the tribal relations and the improvements which the people of the State of New York want to make in that Indian country. It is a strip of 40 miles right in the heart of the State of New York.

The people of that State desire a change, and the first condition precedent to a change is that this title must be eliminated. Now it is proposed to pay them $5 per acre for this title in order to eliminate it so that it can be followed subsequently by legislation. The original amendment was $10. It was reduced to $5.

The amendment is recommended as I said, by the Secretary of the Interior. The matter has been presented to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, and that committee has recommended this amendment. The Committee on Appropriations do not seem to think in the interest of economy that it ought to be adopted now. Mr. President, I think it ought. We have complied with the suggestions contained in the last appropriation act. The proper Department of this Government has investigated it. That Department has made its report. That report is here. The Committee on Indian Affairs especially charged with it has recommended it; and in the interests of the State of New York and of the entire section of western New York the amendment ought to be adopted. If I should take an hour, Mr. President, I could not make it more clear than I have endeavored to make it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I make the point of order on the amendment. This is too important a question to be considered now, involving hundreds of thousands of dollars and the title of the Indians who have been living upon the land for a hundred years. I do not think it would be just or right that this legislation should be put in the bill. I do not agree at all with the Secretary of the Interior as to the right. It is only a preemption right that they claim. That is the most that is claimed, I understand; and this legislation, and it is going further than we have gone on any appropriation bill. It ought to be disposed of in a separate measure. These Indians have been living there, as I said, for a century, they and their ancestors, and they are bitterly opposed to this provision. I do not think it ought to be put in here.

Mr. HILL. It is not simply a question as to what the Indians desire. That is a question which we can decide at some other time. This is simply a question as to what the people of the State of New York desire and what are the best interests of that section of the country. This is a preliminary step, giving authority to the Secretary of the Interior to make this contract.

Now, upon the point of order, the Senator from Missouri says that he differs with the Secretary of the Interior. He has not given the subject that consideration which the Department of the Government has given it. He has not given it that consideration which the Committee on Indian Affairs has given it.

I do not understand that the amendment is subject to any point of order. It comes from a Department. It is recommended by a Department. In the second place, it is recommended by the standing committee of the Senate that has the matter peculiarly in charge.

Therefore I trust that the Senate, which has been very liberal in regard to this question, will not at this time thus summarily dispose of the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the point of order made by the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. COCKRELL. The point of order is that it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota address himself to the question pending?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do; to the pending amendment.

Mr. PLATT. To the point of order?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Not to the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is made against the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York that it is general legislation upon a general appropriation bill. The Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. PLATT. I wish, on page 2, line 7, to amend by inserting before the word "Cheyenne" the words "Forest City, formerly the."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert before "Cheyenne," in line 7, page 2, "Forest City, formerly the;" so as to read:

At the Forest City, formerly the Cheyenne River Agency, S. Dak., $1,700.

Mr. PLATT. That is the way it has been in former appropriation acts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SQUIRE. On page 48, beginning in line 14, in the appropriation for continuing the work of the Puyallup Indian Commission, I move to strike out the words:

To be reimbursed to the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of the agency tract and allotted lands, as provided in said act, to be immediately available.

Mr. President, I will briefly state the reasons for moving this amendment. I have no desire to go into any general discussion of the Puyallup Indian Reservation matter at this time. We discussed the subject quite fully at the last session of Congress, I think, and it was determined to keep the commission there which was appointed in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1893. This commission consists of three citizens appointed from different States of the Union, and they have been engaged since the 21st day of November, 1893, according to the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

There has been a great deal of exaggeration as to the value of the lands belonging to the Puyallup tribe, the greater part of which lands have been allotted in severalty. The appraisement is being done by the commission for the purpose of offering the property for sale, and the point to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate is that the amount of $14,000 which in the present terms of this bill is to be appropriated for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the commission is to be reimbursed to the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of the agency tract and allotted lands.

I think this is unfair toward the Indians. They have not as yet received anything out of any sales, and as soon as any sales take place this money is to be paid to the United States to reimburse it for the expense of the commission, which commission has not been agreeable to the Indians. They do not regard it as essential or valuable to them. There is a difference of opinion about that. I am only speaking as to the opinions of the Indians themselves.

The Puyallup Indians are a very intelligent tribe. There are but very few of them. They read and write and make contracts, and as has been explained hitherto, they are pretty well able to take care of themselves as business men. There are but few of them, perhaps less than a hundred adults. They have some valuable property adjoining the city of Tacoma, and they could, a few years ago, have sold a portion of it, much less than one-half, for a large sum of money, $700,000, enough to make every one of those adult Indians well off to-day. If they could have availed themselves under the law and under the treaty with the tribe of the opportunity, and could have received the money which was proposed to be paid by persons who desired to purchase the land, they would have been individually well off, and still have retained much the larger part of the tract. But there was objection to that, and it was feared that the Indians might be overreached, that they might lose a portion or a large part of their property by improvident trade with white men. There has been a great deal said by people, East and West, on the subject of taking care of these Indians. The point to which I want to draw attention is that there has been an agency there—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SQUIRE. I should like permission to speak a moment longer. I shall occupy attention for but a moment; and it is very seldom that I attempt to occupy the attention of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from Washington will proceed.

Mr. SQUIRE. I believe it is wrong to saddle this commission upon these Indians against their will, against their protest, and make them pay for it. That is the point. I believe the United States should bear the expense of the commission itself. Of course it is paying the expenses now, but in accordance with the terms of the act it is proposed that all this expense ultimately shall be charged up to the Indians. I claim that the land is not worth what it has been appraised at in former years.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly it is not now.

Mr. SQUIRE. It is not worth that money; and when they come to sell it is not going to sell for any such big figure. I do not believe it is right to take the money from these Indians when the sales are made and apply it to the payment of the expenses of the commission.

If these lands were to be sold now, quite an important share of the proceeds would have to go to the Government to reimburse it for the expense of the commission; and this expense is being steadily augmented.

The commission has been thrust upon Indians who are able to take care of themselves. It is either a fact, or it is not, that they are able to take care of themselves. There is evidence on that point that they are; and I believe people are pretty well satisfied of that fact. Else, why does the Government abolish the agency? I have to-day a communication from the Bureau of Indian Affairs, in which it is stated that the agent has been relieved and the agency abolished. Of course, unless these Indians were able to take care of themselves that agent would not have been relieved, and that agency would not have been abolished. I do not quite understand how to reconcile the statement of the Commissioner with two other provisions in this bill, unless the items have been taken out of it which appear on page 4 and on page 46. I see at the foot of page 4 the following:

At the Puyallup (consolidated) Agency, Wash., $1,000.

That is for the pay of the Indian agent. Again, I see on page 46, commencing at line 19:

Washington: For general incidental expenses of the Indian service, including traveling expenses of agents at seven agencies, and support and civilization of Indians at Colville and Puyallup agencies, and for pay of employees, $14,000.

It seems, unless these items are taken out of the bill, some appropriation has been made for the agency, and yet the Commissioner of Indian Affairs states in a communication, which I have before referred to, that the agency has been abolished and the agent has been relieved.

I quote his exact language:

The commission is all the more important because the agent has been relieved and the agency abolished.

I might perhaps cite for the information of the Senate some other items which the Commissioner has stated in his communication to me to-day, and which I submit to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs for his consideration. He asked me whether there had been any report from this commission. I will read what the Commissioner of Indian Affairs says as to the work of the commission. He states as follows:

They have appraised the school tract, surveyed it into lots, blocks, streets, avenues, etc. The Secretary of the Interior has approved the appraising and ordered the sale of lots to go on. There is a vast amount of work to go on in that direction. Besides that, they have just reported a good many tracts that the allottees are desiring to sell, and that is before this Office now, and when the appraisement of these allotments is approved they will have to sell those allotted tracts and have to make deeds of conveyance for those tracts and have to get orders and decrees of the court in the case of orphan and minor children, and they have reported that it will take until next December to do all this work, and, on the whole, this Office was rather surprised to know that they could complete the work by that time, and of course very much gratified.

In the light of this communication, looking at it fairly on all sides, I think that the commission should be retained until next December, although it seems very strange that they have not been able to complete the entire work since the 21st day of November, 1893, when they went to this agency under the direction of the Interior Department. It seems, however, they have made progress; they have made the appraisements and the selections, and the sales have been ordered to proceed. But why saddle this expense annually onto these Indians? It is a thing that they do not want. They aver that they are able to get along without it, and yet I do not feel like taking snap judgment upon the commission.

I think it is well now to let it go until next December, in accordance with the terms of the communication from the Indian Bureau, and let us relieve the Indians from this expense, especially if the agency has been abolished, because there has hitherto been a large amount of money expended for the maintenance of the agent which will be saved to the Government in future if the agency is abolished, and I venture to ask the chairman of the committee to accept this amendment.

Certainly it is not right to keep along this commission indefinitely at the ultimate expense of the Indians. That would be to force an expensive administration upon them and to gradually eat up their substance. I am sure this would not be thought of unless there were an exaggerated estimate of the value of the property involved. These Indians are now needing money. They are really "land poor." Whether this amendment be adopted or not, I feel it my duty to present these pertinent facts to the Senate for its information preparatory to some future action which may be fair to all parties—fair to the Indians, fair to the commission, which ought to promptly conclude its labors, and fair toward the people of Tacoma and of Pierce County, in the State of Washington.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have a vote on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HILL. A few minutes ago I proposed an amendment, which was very summarily disposed of on an objection made by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee. This bill is full of similar provisions inserted at the instance of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, and so far as I am concerned, while I have not sought or endeavored to interfere with the discretion imposed upon that committee, I propose to insist upon fair play in the Senate; and I give notice that I shall insist hereafter on any appropriation bill that amendments shall be considered as we proceed with the bill, and that an amendment offered by any Senator may be considered at the same time.

This is necessary, it seems to me, because Senators sit here and allow the committee amendments to be passed upon in the first instance, without any objection and without raising any questions or points of order; and after those amendments are all disposed of in that way, when a Senator who does not belong to the Committee on Appropriations offers an amendment which does not seem to meet with the approval of the committee he is met with an objection, when it is too late to eliminate from the bill other provisions standing exactly upon the same footing.

This bill, as I have examined it, contains numerous provisions the object of which is the allotment of lands in severalty. They may be worded somewhat differently from the way my amendment was, because they start off with an appropriation and then proceed to legislate. My amendment was not general legislation as it has been defined here over and over again. It may have been local legislation, it may have related to a particular tribe of Indians in a particular section of the country, but it did not propose to change any statute; it did not apply to the whole country, and it was not general legislation, but simply local legislation, and of itself contained an appropriation. It provided for carrying out the provisions of the amendment just the same as a dozen other amendments provide in this bill.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned I propose to have the rules administered impartially, and I want my amendments to be placed upon the same footing as the amendments of the committee or the amendments which other Senators here propose. The question as to whether an amendment offered by an individual Senator is or is not in order on an appropriation bill should not depend upon whether it is submitted to the Senate or decided by the presiding officer.

Mr. President, of course I represent but a small constituency interested in this question. One-tenth, I think, of the people of the United States live in my State; I claim no superior rights on that account, but I do insist upon it that all amendments of like character should be treated alike, and that this bill should not be placed full of amendments which relate to the same subject-matter, and when the Committee on Appropriations propose to place amendments upon the bill our mouths should substantially be closed until all the committee amendments have been adopted, and when Senators propose their respective amendments they must run the gantlet of objection because their amendments happen to be, as it is said, general legislation.

Mr. President, general legislation must apply to the whole country; it must affect some existing statute; it must change some existing statute. A mere local appropriation for some particular purpose, and then a designation of how that appropriation shall be used, is not general legislation, as it ever has been here construed.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from New York allow me to suggest to him that we have agreed to proceed under the five-minute rule, and that he will have an opportunity of renewing his amendment when the bill is reported to the Senate? I therefore hope we shall proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HILL. I do not desire to proceed if there are further amendments to be offered. There is no objection to going on with the bill, and I will make my remarks hereafter.

Mr. POWER. I offer the following amendment, which I think is on the desk of the Secretary, to come in on page 80, after line 20:

For purchase of "Holy Family" school buildings, situated in the Blackfeet Reservation, and St. Ignatius mission school, Jocko Reservation, Mont., and their conversion into Government schools, $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President—

Mr. POWER. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I wish to make a brief statement as to the Indian schools in Montana. There are eight reservations in Montana, and one-eighth of all the Indian children in the country are in Montana.

In answer to a telegram I sent to the agent, inquiring how many children of school age there were on the Blackfeet Reservation, and what facilities there were for educating them, the agent says:

Five hundred children of school age, Blackfeet Reservation. One hundred and thirty attend Government school and 130 contract school.

The buildings of the Holy Family school there can provide for 125 children more, and that is all that can be taken care of on that reservation.

At the Jocko Reservation there is only one school, St. Ignatius mission school. There are no other facilities for educating those children except at that school.

Now that it seems to be the policy of the Government to take control of the Indian education, which is satisfactory to those in control of the schools in Montana, I want sufficient money appropriated for the purchase of the school buildings.

Mr. CALL. I desire to make the point of order on that amendment, the reason being that such an appropriation is not estimated for, there is no recommendation for it from the head of a Department, and that it is an increase of the appropriation.

Mr. POWER. I would ask the Senator in charge of the bill how it is proposed to take care of the children at those two agencies?

Mr. CALL. That is a matter intrusted to the Secretary of the Interior. He can rent buildings, if necessary, as there is money appropriated for that purpose. My point of order is that there is no estimate for this appropriation; it is not recommended by the head of a Department; it interferes with the general policy already established in the bill; and it increases the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. POWER. I will ask the Senator another question. I ask how much money is set aside for the purchase of school buildings as the bill stands?

Mr. CALL. If the Senator will turn over to that provision in the bill he will see.

Mr. POWER. I have turned to it.

Mr. CALL. The Senator has only to read it to ascertain the amount.

Mr. POWER. I can not see that any money is set aside for that purpose, and even the $40,000 which was set aside, as I understand, has been stricken out by the Senate. Is not that so?

Mr. GALLINGER. While the Senator from Florida is looking for his data, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana a question. I understood him to say that there were not sufficient accommodations for the children on those reservations at the present time?

Mr. POWER. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then, how are you going to add to the accommodations by buying a couple of school buildings?

Mr. POWER. If the Indian children are expected to go to school the Government will require school buildings for this purpose.

Mr. GALLINGER. They have the school buildings now to be found there, but they are insufficient, and the Senator proposes simply to buy school buildings which now exist to educate those children.

Mr. POWER. The bill originally had a special appropriation for both of the schools mentioned in the amendment. The appropriation for those schools has been stricken out, and as the Senator and others want a different governmental policy in regard to schools, and as the people of Montana and those in charge of those schools are satisfied for that policy to be adopted, they request that those school buildings be purchased, and that is the object of the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. But supposing the Government prefers to rent the buildings and keep the children in them, will not that answer the same purpose?

Mr. POWER. But suppose the societies which own the buildings do not want to rent them, but would like to sell?

Mr. CALL. I will say to the Senator from Montana that on page 73 of the bill it is provided:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools, and for other educational purposes, including the purchase, lease, repair, and construction of school buildings, not hereinafter provided for.

Mr. POWER. What is the amount appropriated?

Mr. CALL. One million one hundred and sixty-four thousand three hundred and fifty dollars.

Mr. POWER. That is all provided for in the estimates for education, and not one dollar for the purchase of buildings.

Mr. CALL. It includes, by express terms, the purchase, leasing, repairing, and construction of school buildings.

Mr. POWER. There is not one dollar appropriated for the purchase of buildings; it is all for the education of the Indian children.

I wish to submit for publication with my remarks a letter to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated February 7, and his answer, pertaining to the management of schools in Montana. I ask to have this correspondence printed in the RECORD to show to those who have charge of educating the Indians in Montana that after reading the explanation of the Senators in charge of the bill and the speeches of those opposing, that no provision is made for the continuing of the education of the Indian children in Montana outside of the arrangement heretofore carried on.

The letter of the honorable Commissioner satisfies me that the Indian children of Montana will be provided for.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection it will be so ordered.

The letters referred to are as follows:

FEBRUARY 7, 1895.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 6th, furnishing information relative to Indian schools in Montana, received.

I see that there are on the Blackfeet Reservation Indian children, schoolage, 487; present school capacity, Government, 125; contract, 135; 250 in all; average attendance both schools, 220; leaving nearly 50 per cent of the children unprovided for.

Introduced the inclosed amendment asking that the foregoing shall not apply to any Indian schools or contract schools in Montana, referring to the 20 per cent deduction. You can see that these schools, particularly Blackfeet Reservation, should be increased in place of decreased.

Can you stand by this amendment? If not, how do you propose to take care of the children for the coming year at Blackfeet Agency? This will apply to all the agencies in Montana, Flathead Agency particularly, whose children are all educated by contract schools.

Will you kindly let me know what you propose to do for the coming year? If the 20 per cent deduction is allowed in the bill for contract schools, how do you propose to make up for the 20 per cent deduction?

The Committee on Appropriations tell me that it will not apply to the Montana Indian schools for the coming year; that is, the 20 per cent will not be deducted from each school, but where schools are not needed in other parts of the country they may be cut out.

I would like to know fully what the intentions of the Department are going to be before the bill comes up in the Senate.

Yours, respectfully,

T. C. POWER.

Hon. D. M. BROWNING,
Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Office of Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C., February 8, 1895.

SIR: I am in receipt of your inquiry of yesterday as to the policy of the Office in regard to the reduction of aid to contract schools (as proposed in the pending Indian appropriation bill) at points where school facilities of all kinds are inadequate for the school population.

In reply, you are informed that the proposed 30 per cent reduction is not intended to apply to every school, but to contract schools as a whole. The reduction will therefore be made where it can be done to the best advantage, the intention being not to deprive any child of a chance of schooling. If the Government has unused facilities, or can provide additional accommodations, or can put children in public schools, those will be the points at which aid to contract schools will be reduced. As I said in my annual report, contracts are to be declined or reduced wherever it can be done without depriving children of school privileges, and only in such cases. With the law enacted as now proposed it is not probable that it will be practicable to make any reduction during the coming year in Montana contract schools except by accepting one school which the contractors propose to turn over to the Government. Other reductions can be made only as the Government provides additional school accommodations, which will require considerable time. The aim of the Office is and will be to give every child a chance for an education.

As stated above, negotiations are in progress for the transfer of one Montana contract school to the Government, and other negotiations of that sort are likely to follow. Where private parties have established educational "plants" upon Indian reservations and wish to dispose of them to the Government the Office will be ready to purchase them at reasonable rates, the arrangement being advantageous to both parties, the Government obtaining school property all ready for use and the persons selling the same being relieved of large expenditures which can be diverted to other uses.

Yours, respectfully,

D. M. BROWNING, Commissioner.

Hon. T. C. POWER,
United States Senate.

Mr. CALL. I have read the language of the bill, and I must insist on the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 72, after line 4, it is proposed to insert:

That section 2130 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by act of July 23, 1882, be, and the same is hereby, extended over and made applicable to the town and town site of Miami, in the Indian Territory, and the United States courts of said Territory shall have full jurisdiction thereof.

Mr. PLATT. Has not that amendment been adopted once today?

Mr. CALL. I so understand.

Mr. PLATT. Some amendment of that kind has been adopted.

Mr. MARTIN. I did not know of that.

Mr. COCKRELL. Such an amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that an amendment similar to the one offered by the Senator from Kansas has been agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. Practically the same amendment as that which the Senator from Kansas desires has been adopted.

Mr. MARTIN. Then I withdraw the amendment.

In line 18, on page 4, in the appropriation for the salary of the Indian agent "at the Pottawatomie and Great Nemaha Agency, Kans., $1,200," I move to strike out "200" and insert "500."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 18, before the word "hundred," it is proposed to strike out "two" and insert "five;" so as to read:

At the Pottawatomie and Great Nemaha Agency, Kans., $1,500.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas. [Putting the question.] The yeas seem to have it.

Mr. MARTIN. I trust that the amendment will be agreed to. The agent there has charge of two different agencies.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. We have refused to increase the salaries of the Indian agents. If we increase one we shall have to increase all.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, it does not follow simply because other agencies will have to be increased that this one should not be increased. This agent has charge of a part of two tribes of Indians. They are some 60 or 70 miles apart. There are no railroads to and from these different localities and there are three Indian schools of which he has charge and to which he has to give attention. There are 150 or 200 children in those three schools, and there are some twelve or fifteen hundred Indians under his jurisdiction at these agencies.

He is compelled by the Government of the United States to give a bond of $40,000, and yet he gets only the pitiful sum of $1,200 salary. Curiously enough, the Government also allows to the collector at the agency the same compensation precisely which it allows the agent. The collector has no responsibility, is not charged with any duties except those of a subordinate nature. He gives no bond, but the agent, who gives a bond for the performance of the entire work and service incumbent upon him by virtue of his agency, gets only the same compensation the collector receives.

I do not care whether it is unjust to other agents or not that their salaries are not increased. The question is, ought the salary of the agent at this place be increased? I submit to the fair judgment of the Senate that simply because the salary of other agents ought to be increased, or simply because other agents ought to be regulated by some system different from what they are is no kind of argument why the salary of the agent referred to ought not to be increased; and I hope the Senate will agree that it shall be done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer an amendment on page 9, at the end of line 5, after the word "farming," to insert "within the State or Territory where such agency is located;" so as to read:

And no person shall be employed as such farmer or stockman who has not been at least five years immediately previous to such employment practically engaged in the occupation of farming within the State or Territory where such agency is located.

So that the Indians will actually have practical farmers employed. A practical farmer who has been engaged in the business of raising oranges in Florida is not a practical farmer to raise corn and wheat in South Dakota.

Mr. CALL. I am compelled to raise the point of order on that amendment. It changes existing law and is general legislation.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, if that rule were to apply to this amendment it would apply to every modification of the bill whatever.

Mr. KYLE. So I have contended all day.

Mr. CALL. The Senator's amendment provides that appointments shall not be made outside the limits of the State or Territory.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is also an amendment of a committee amendment, and clearly in order.

Mr. CALL. It changes the law by saying that no farmer or agent shall be appointed except from the State or Territory in which the agency is located.

Mr. PLATT. Not an agent.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Oh, no; only a farmer.

Mr. CALL. There is no such law as that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order made by the Senator from Florida. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I now offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert after line 5, on page 31, the following:

For twenty-sixth of 30 installments for clothing in place of the articles, as per treaty of April 29, 1868, $125,000, to be paid to said Indians in cash, and divided among the members of the tribe per capita.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the object of that amendment?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have moved that as a substitute for lines 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 of the bill, on page 31.

Mr. President, we have heretofore expended this money in the purchase of clothing for these Indians and it has created great dissatisfaction among them, so much so that they protest against the further purchase by the Government of such clothing, and ask that the money may be paid to them and that they may make their own purchases. Well they may protest against the Government making these purchases. Under our treaty with those people we agreed to furnish them good woolen clothing, and the Department no longer pretends to purchase woolen clothing, but purchases duck of the coarsest kind, suits worth about a dollar and a half apiece, and undertakes to satisfy these people with them. The result is that the Indians do not wear the clothing, but swap it off for what they can get, and do the best they can to clothe themselves. We expend large sums of this money for the purchase of blankets so miserable and wretched that I never saw a Sioux Indian wear one of them.

The blankets are so miserable and wretched that the Indians trade them off for what they can get, and purchase decent blankets from some trader. This has been the practice of the Government with those people for twenty years.

During the last Administration we purchased our blankets of John Dobson, of Philadelphia. We advertised for all-wool blankets. The advertisement stated that sealed proposals, indorsed "Proposal for blankets," addressed to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C., would be received until a certain time for 16,000 pairs of blankets, giving the size. They were to be all-wool, indigo-blue, mackinac blankets. Under that advertisement the contractor furnished blankets that would not hold together if hung up cornerwise; and here are some of the samples. This [exhibiting] was the warp—African wool or hair, shoddy, and some real wool; stronger than the filling. Here [exhibiting] is the filling—African wool or hair, shoddy, with a little wool, some cotton.

Instead of being dyed with indigo the blankets are dyed with logwood. If dyed with indigo it would cost $1.50 a pair to dye them. Dyed with logwood, it costs 25 cents a pair. Yet an indigo-dyed, all-wool blanket is what is called for in the advertisement. Nevertheless, the blankets I have described are the ones which are furnished year after year. Whenever an Indian undertakes to wear one, if it rains the blanket creaks, and, even as black as he is and as smoked as he is, the blanket will make him look worse. You can not force a Sioux Indian to wear one of them. They will not use the blankets on their horses because of their filthy character and rotten condition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. CALL. Let the amendment be read.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I understand I will be allowed five minutes more if I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. COCKRELL. On the Senator's own amendment?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I understand so; and that is the custom of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is certainly an evasion of the rule.

Mr. PETTIGREW. If it is an evasion of the rule I withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the Senator consumed five minutes?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not know. I certainly am not through.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota had spoken five minutes. The Chair so announced.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then I make the point of order on the amendment that it not only proposes general legislation, but upon its face is a repudiation and violation of the treaty.

Mr. PETTIGREW. We violate the treaty when we buy such stuff as we furnish those Indians. Every year we make a contract to furnish woolen goods, and we furnish ducking. We make a contract to furnish woolen blankets, and furnish shoddy and hair. It is done at every session of Congress, and when it is attempted to be remedied the point of order is raised that it violates the treaty.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CALL. I desire to make a verbal amendment. An amendment was adopted at the end of line 11, page 71, providing for the pay of the delegates of the Otoe and Missouri tribes now here $150 each for their traveling expenses in coming here and going home. I propose to add to it the words "to be immediately available."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move to strike out all after the word "aforesaid," in line 11, page 35, down to and including line 25 on page 36.

I will state that an amendment for this purpose was submitted to the Senate, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and this portion of it was stricken out by the committee. When the bill came from the other House it had the entire provision in it. Therefore the Committee on Appropriations left it in, and I did not discover it earlier. I will state exactly what the point is.

Under the provisions of a treaty made in 1851 we agreed to pay in the future the balance of the money due the scouts who served in the war in Minnesota. There are about eight installments due. This provision appropriates the whole of it at once, so that it can be distributed among those scouts. The matter which I propose to strike out undertakes to say who shall receive the money. I propose to leave that question with the Secretary of the Interior. I do not believe the person who drew the bill can tell who ought to go on the rolls, and I do not think we ought to undertake to say. The bill was introduced without any such intention, but was drawn for some purpose. I do not know what that purpose was.

Now, what I wish to do is simply to leave the rolls to be made up by the Secretary of the Interior. I wish merely to appropriate the money for those scouts, designating them, and then let the Secretary of the Interior determine who they are, and not undertake to do it by an act of Congress.

It looks to me as though there was some design, some purpose, in the present provision. I know there has been some complaint in the past that these rolls were not accurate, and the provision now in the bill proposes to fix those rolls so that no change can be made even if injustice has been done. It seems to me there can be no objection to the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. We submitted the matter to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and he reported to us that he saw no objection to it. We saw that a similar amendment had been submitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs. But I have no objection to the matter objected to going out of the bill. I do not know whether it is right or not.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Committee on Indian Affairs did report to strike it out.

Mr. COCKRELL. So far as I remember, it was not reported to us in that way.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It was so reported, undoubtedly, but the Committee on Appropriations left the provision as they found it in the bill as it came from the other House.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes. We consulted the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and he said it was all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW]. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have one further amendment to offer. On page 75, line 13, after the word "dollars," I move to insert:

Completing sewerage and plumbing, $1,000.

I wish to state in this connection that the work at Flandreau, S. Dak., has already been done. I have here a letter from the superintendent of that school, in which he says that through some misunderstanding he had the work done and now has no money to pay for it. I submitted the matter to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and he says he has no objection.

Mr. CALL. We accept the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. The total in line 14 should be changed from $28,500 to $29,500.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment is agreed to if there be no objection.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I simply wish to state that I regret being unable to complete at this time my remarks with regard to the character of the clothing furnished the Indians, and I will finish them on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to reserve one amendment for a vote in the Senate. I refer to the amendment to strike out, on page 73, in line 7, after the word "ninety-five," down to and including the word "cease" in line 10. It is an amendment relating to contract schools.

Mr. GALLINGER rose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If no other amendment is reserved, the Chair will put the question on concurring in the rest of the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GALLINGER. The amendment the Senator from Massachusetts has reserved is the one I rose to ask to have reserved.

The amendments were concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment reserved by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out, on page 73, line 7, after the word "ninety-five," down to and including the word "cease," in line 11, as follows:

And each succeeding year he shall proportionately so reduce the amount thus used that at the end of five years from the date on which this act goes into effect all contracts for such education shall cease.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It seems to me that in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole we had a roll call on that amendment, and the committee was sustained by a very large majority.

Mr. GALLINGER. We are going to have another.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It will probably disclose the want of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. CALL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 60, at the end of line 5, insert:

Provided, That such judgment shall not be binding on Congress, but only advisory and of persuasive force.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not propose to detain the Senate. A few days ago, when the bill was in Committee of the Whole, I pointed out that this provision could not confer jurisdiction upon a court of the United States, that it was and could only be advisory. The judicial power has its bounds and its limits. I stated that a treaty or an agreement made by Congress between the United States and a foreign nation or any other power recognized as such is not the proper subject of judicial power. I shall not enlarge upon that subject, but I will ask to publish for my own justification of that most clear and manifest proposition (which the Senator from Arkansas treated very lightly because he did not understand it) the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States upon that subject. I will only ask leave to insert in the RECORD a few brief extracts from the decision of the Supreme Court in The United States vs. Ferreira, in the thirteenth volume of Howard's Reports.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered if there be no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The act of 23d of March, 1792, required the circuit courts of the United States to examine into the claims of the officers and soldiers and seamen of the Revolution to the pensions granted to invalids by that act, and to determine the amount of pay that would be equivalent to the disability incurred, and to certify their opinion to the Secretary of War. And it authorized the Secretary, when he had cause to suspect imposition or mistake, to withhold the pension allowed by the court, and to report the case to Congress at its next session. The authority was given to the circuit courts; and a question arose whether the power conferred was a judicial one which the circuit courts as such could constitutionally exercise.

The question was not decided in the Supreme Court in the case above mentioned, but the opinions of the judges of the circuit courts for the districts of New York, Pennsylvania, and North Carolina are all given in a note to the case by the reporter.

The judges in the New York circuit, composed of Chief Justice Jay, Justice Cushing, and Duane, district judge, held that the power could not be exercised by them as a court. But in consideration of the meritorious and benevolent object of the law they agreed to construe the power as conferred on them individually as commissioners, and to adjourn the court over from time to time, so as to enable them to perform the duty in the character of commissioners and out of court.

The judges of the Pennsylvania circuit, consisting of Wilson and Blair, justices of the supreme court, and Peters, district judge, refused to execute it altogether, upon the ground that it was conferred on them as a court, and was not a judicial power when subject to the revision of the Secretary of War and Congress.

The judges of the circuit court of North Carolina, composed of Iredell, justice of the supreme court, and Sitgreaves, district judge, were of opinion that the court could not execute it as a judicial power; and held it under advisement whether they might not construe the act as an appointment of the judges personally as commissioners, and perform the duty in the character of commissioners out of court, as had been agreed on by the judges of the New York circuit.

A question might arise whether commissioners appointed to adjust these claims are not officers of the United States within the meaning of the Constitution. The duties to be performed are entirely alien to the legitimate functions of a judge or court of justice, and have no analogy to the general or special powers ordinarily and legally conferred on judges or courts to secure the due administration of the laws. And if they are to be regarded as officers, holding office under the Government, the power of appointment is in the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and Congress could not by law designate the persons to fill these offices.

And if this be the construction of the Constitution, then, as the judge designated could not act in a judicial character as a court, nor as a commissioner, because he was not appointed by the President, everything that has been done under the acts of 1823 and 1834 and 1849 would be void, and the payments heretofore made might be recovered back by the United States.

But this question has not been made; nor does it arise in the case. It could rise only in a suit by the United States to recover back the money. And as the case does not present it and the parties interested are not before the court, and these laws have for so many years been acted on as valid and constitutional, we do not think it proper to express an opinion upon it. In the case at bar, the power of the judge to decide in the first instance is assumed on both sides, and the controversy has turned upon the power of the Secretary to revise it; and it is in this aspect of the case that it has been considered by the court in the foregoing opinion.

The appeal must be dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it. The ayes have it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I demand the yeas and nays.

Several SENATORS. "No!" "No!"

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I can not agree to render the decision of the Supreme Court an absolute nullity by a proposition of this kind.

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Arkansas does not understand the case at all. He knows nothing about it. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided and all lawyers understand that the judicial power of the United States extends only to cases in law and equity and not to a case between two sovereign and independent nations nor to a case between the United States and an Indian tribe. That is clear; and I cite the case of The United States vs. Ferreira, in the thirteenth volume of Howard's Reports, where this point is expressly decided by the Supreme Court, and it is declared that they can not and will not take jurisdiction of such a case.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I will agree that this amendment may go over for a vote on Monday next.

Mr. VOORHEES. Without debate?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Without debate, to be considered on Monday with a full Senate. I do not want to delay action to-night.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator from Arkansas propose to prolong the consideration of this bill, that has been here for one week, and ought to have been disposed of in one day?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am perfectly willing to have a vote taken on this question Monday, but I can not agree that the provision shall be inserted without a vote of the Senate upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will ask if there is objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope we can decide it now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has submitted the question to the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be submitted to the Senate again.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. This question has already been decided once or twice by the Senate, and I shall insist on the yeas and nays.

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Arkansas does not know anything about the case. I will withdraw the amendment. The Supreme Court has decided it, and all the laws that Congress can pass will not induce the court to take jurisdiction of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to strike out the clauses in the bill from line 17, on page 48, down to and including line 8, on page 60. I make that motion for the purpose of inquiring what the present provision is of the amendments in relation to the rate to the Wichita and affiliated bands per acre for their land. The objection I made to the clause as it stood was that the original House provision purported to give a dollar and a quarter an acre to the Wichita Indians in fulfillment of the agreement made with them, and yet subjected that dollar and a quarter an acre to the chances of a suit in the Court of Claims brought by the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. On what page is that?

Mr. CHANDLER. The clause on page 54, granting the dollar and a quarter an acre. I understood the Senator from Missouri had moved some new amendment there.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There was an amendment made to that paragraph.

Mr. PLATT. Let the Secretary read the amendment that was adopted.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will take the statement of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There was an amendment providing that the total amount to be paid to these Indians for the extinguishment of the Indian title should be a dollar and a quarter an acre, and that the question as to how much of the dollar and a quarter should go to the Wichitas on the one hand and to the Choctaws and Chickasaws on the other should be submitted to the court to be determined in the suit.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not think that it is wise to undertake to fulfill this promise to these Indians—

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no promise. This is in strict accordance with the terms of the agreement.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think it is in strict compliance with the agreement.

Mr. CHANDLER. No; article 5 says that they shall have more compensation; that Congress shall determine it. Now, to have Congress abdicate its function under the agreement and go through the form of allowing a dollar and a quarter an acre and then put the Wichitas to fighting in a lawsuit with the Choctaws and Chickasaws for their money, it seems to me is a mistake. I will not take the time of the Senate; I will withdraw the motion, in the hope that the conference committee will consider the point that we ought not to execute a solemn agreement with the Wichitas by saying we give them a dollar and a quarter an acre and then only give to them such portion of it as the Choctaws and Chickasaws may not get away from them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn. The bill is in the Senate and still open to amendment.

Mr. HILL. At the end of page 28 I move to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with and purchase from the Ogden Land Company, which negotiation and purchase the said Secretary is hereby authorized and directed to make on behalf of the Indians upon the Cattaraugus and Allegany Indian reservations for all the right, title, or interest of said company in and to the lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany Indian reservations in the State of New York, at a price not exceeding $5 per acre, the sum of $300,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or so much of said sum as may be necessary; such payment to be made to said company, its successors, assigns, or legal representatives, upon the execution of a proper deed or deeds of conveyance to the United States of all right, title, and interest of said company in and to the lands aforesaid.

The Secretary of the Interior may, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, obtain consent of said Indians to said purchase.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I should like to ask the Senator from New York if the amendment contains the limit of $5?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir; it contains the limit of $5. The form of the amendment is now precisely like all the appropriations for similar purposes contained in the bill. On page 63 there is a provision which starts off in this way:

To enable the President to cause, under the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians."

Then it proceeds on several pages to prescribe in regard to the allotment of those lands to the Indians.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the Senator if that is the provision that was agreed upon and reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. HILL. It is. I have worded it a little different in order to correspond with the general style here, stating the appropriation first; that is all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to hear the amendment read.

The Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. The difference between this and the other amendments which have already been put in the bill is that they are required to be reported back to Congress for confirmation. I presume that these Indians, having lived with their ancestors for a century in the State of New York and in contact with the intelligent citizens of the Senator's great State, have intelligence enough probably, in connection with the Secretary of the Interior, to protect their own interests in the matter. Therefore, I shall not make the point of order, as it is liable to be made, that it should be submitted to Congress for action before it becomes final.

Mr. STEWART. It is safe in this case. It will be investigated thoroughly.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from New York. I move to add at the end of the amendment:

Provided, No money or property belonging to said Indians shall be expended or used for this purpose without their consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the amendment to the amendment accepted?

Mr. HILL. I do not think that is a proper amendment to be placed on the provision. It simply authorizes a negotiation and a contract to be made. The subsequent reimbursement of the United States from the Indians is a matter of course for subsequent legislation.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall be forced to make a point of order unless my amendment is accepted. I have on my desk—but under the five-minute rule I am not permitted to present them—not only protests from these people against this whole business, but a resolution passed by their council and signed by their chief head men; and they have been here with regard to the matter. I supposed it was disposed of before.

I must protest against this being done unless the Indians consent to it. These Indians say to me that they care nothing about this Ogden Land Company title. I do not care to discuss the question because I do not want to oppose the Senator from New York, but my amendment is entirely reasonable and fair, and unless he can accept it I must object to the whole business in justice to these people.

Mr. HILL. The Senator did not see fit, although a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, to make any such suggestion at the time the amendment was considered by the committee. It is not a question simply as to what the Indians themselves want. It is a question of public policy to be observed. Perhaps they should pay some portion of these sums from the large funds which they have in their hands. That is a question which I prefer to leave to subsequent legislation of Congress. Why should we legislate upon that question here? It seems to me that is the proper way to leave it.

The amendment simply provides that we shall make in behalf of the Indians this contract and purchase. The Government appropriates the money. As to what portion, if any, the Government should pay, we expect the whole of it to be reimbursed from the Indians. They can not simply set themselves up and say they do not wish to be disturbed. Above and beyond all this is the great question of public policy as to what should be done with these Indians.

The leaders of these Indians of course will object to this provision. They always object to it. Their very rule depends upon the maintenance of their tribal relations, and they never want them disturbed, because they are the bosses and they do not wish to be disturbed. I think we can take care of all this in subsequent legislation.

Mr. STEWART. I understand this is simply a proposition to buy outstanding title.

Mr. HILL. That is it.

Mr. STEWART. Which runs as long as the tribal relation obtains.

Mr. HILL. That is all.

Mr. STEWART. The United States takes the title. Then the United States will stand in the position of this outside company to deal fairly with the Indians. If the Indians have nothing to say about the purchase of it they can sell it to anybody else they please, with a view ultimately of settling it up, because it is a long strip of country there and a great inconvenience. The legal title stands outside of the company and the Government can not deal with the question at all. The object is to purchase the outstanding title and have it in the Government so that we can deal fairly with the Indians. I think the Government can be trusted to settle with the Indians afterwards.

Mr. PETTIGREW. In the first place, in the Allegany Reservation there are only 7 acres per capita of fertile land. The rest of the land runs into the mountains, and is assessed in the State of New York at $3 an acre, and valued at not exceeding $4 an acre. The Indians say that the lands can be divided among them in severalty without purchasing the Ogden Land Company's title, and that they are perfectly satisfied that it shall be done when the time comes, and that all the Ogden Land Company have under heaven is the first right to purchase either of the tribe or of the individuals if they divide it in severalty. Then, if the Ogden Land Company do not choose to purchase it, they can sell to other people. So this does not stand in the way of allotting that land in severalty to these people and obliterating this so-called government of theirs and wiping out the reservation.

I believe all the Ogden Land Company can be bought out for $75,000. I believe they can be bought out for $50,000. If this amendment goes through we will pay $5 an acre; and if we propose to do it without consulting those people we ought to pay it out of the Treasury of the United States. There is not any question about it. Unless my amendment is accepted I shall make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from South Dakota seems to have more information about this matter than anybody else. If he is sincere in his statement that he thinks this outstanding title is worth only fifty or seventy-five thousand dollars he does injustice to his conscience by voting a much larger sum, as he did vote in committee to give the $5 per acre. The company wanted $10 per acre, and the committee very properly, I think, limited it to five.
